Senator Buckwold: Or privatizing the Senate, which has already been privatized in the eyes of many.

Senator Flynn: There are a lot of privates.

Senator Buckwold: In looking over the deal—certainly Senator Sinclair, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, has done a very good job—the committee's report contains very little that we could complain about.

In reading the debates in the other place, it is interesting to note that the debates and the criticism were mostly concerned with political philosophy; that is, should we have a significant role in this country for state-owned enterprises, or should we be moving in the direction of private ownership? As I read those debates, it seemed that almost all of the speakers—especially those from the NDP—felt that we should be having more and more state ownership. I was interested to read that they gave us the Saskatchewan experience of all the great success that went on in the government of the day and the fact that the NDP government owned a variety of things. I must admit that living there I have not found them very successful, but I will go back and take another look. Certainly many of them have been abject failures. I do not know if they have a minister of privatization in Saskatchewan, but certainly they are looking at divesting as well.

There is a role, all of us would say—even those on the other side who were very proud that the Conservative government had started CBC and even some of the other major publicly-owned enterprises—for a state in maintaining essential industries and, perhaps especially, in moving to protect regional interests and maintaining in that direction the kind of economic stability that we need in the country. I think most of us are agreed, generally, that there is a role for public-controlled enterprise.

In this particular deal with Canadair, the financing is rather interesting, as we listen to the ministers. The debt has been written off—$1.2 billion. Now, our side of the chamber cannot take very much pride in the fact that there was a very substantial debt. The fact is, I think we would agree, that it was in the national interest that we could not let that industry disappear. That debt has just been moved over to the national debt. So, the interesting thing is that when the Government of Canada receives payment of well over $100 million—or $120 million in cash—it will end up being added to the surplus that might occur, or as a reduction of the deficit of the Government of Canada. Such is the wonder of government accounting. All I know is that the debt will be $1.2 billion higher and eventually, hopefully, will be paid by our great-great-great-grandchildren.

Senator Frith: We should have stayed closed on weekends.

Senator Buckwold: There was an interesting point raised in the committee, and that is the influence of the royalty that was agreed to be paid by Bombardier on the repair maintenance contract for the CF-18s—a very controversial decision of the government—which went to Canadair. The Bombardier people agreed that they would pay a 1 per cent royalty on the net proceeds of that particular contract. We were unable in the committee to determine whether that was a significant factor in the ultimate decision which took a contract which by every sense of proportion should have gone to Manitoba, to Bristol Aerospace, and gave it to Canadair. Deep down I have this feeling that it did have some influence. It added a few million dollars to the total return to the government, and I have this feeling that the government, to a degree, used the fact that there was an additional form of revenue coming in from Bombardier, through the Canadair contract on CF-18s, that would help in achieving some additional return on this particular contract. I hasten to add that none of the witnesses agreed with that, nor did it come out in concrete evidence; it is just that there is the feeling that it might have been part of the influence that decided the final contract and where it went. I may be prejudiced, coming from western Canada, in that particular regard, but I think you can understand why.

Having said these things, I am not sure whether there is anything more that I could add. I can indicate—because I seem to be giving almost a speech on behalf of the government—the labour unions of Canadair were quite content with the new ownership. I think they were relieved that there would be a continuing operation of a company that at the present time is quite profitable, but which two years down the road, when present contracts expire, may have some difficulty.

However, I think it is well understood that an aggressive, respected company like Bombardier will have the know-how to be able to keep the plants operating in the hope that they will be even more successful than they are today.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Honourable senators, having said that and indicating the general support of this side of the chamber, I have nothing more to add. I have no reason to request that this bill be sent to committee because of the excellent review its subject matter has had by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce already and, as far as I am concerned, the bill should proceed to third reading at the convenience of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Asselin speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Asselin: —I would like to congratulate Senator Buckwold on his contribution. I think he understands very well the principle of Bill C-25, and I am sure the minister will be very happy to read his notes once he has a chance to do so.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Asselin, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1986-87

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-35, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, I have very little to say about this particular bill, since everyone in the chamber is well aware of the content of and the necessity for the bill.

It is the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1986-87 and provides for the release of the supplementary estimates (B) amounting to some $300 million.

The entire spending authority is sought to provide for the Special Canadian Grains Program and represents the first instalment of the $1 billion program relating to the 1986 crop.

These estimates were tabled in the Senate on December 17 and immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The estimates were discussed by the Finance Committee and with department officials on December 17, 1986. The committee presented its report on that day.

Honourable senators, the urgency of the bill, as I have said, is an obvious one. We urge speedy passage so that the payments to the farmers can be made early in the new year.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): With the usual assurances, of course.

Senator Doody: Of course, I am prepared to give the usual assurances that the bill is in the standard form and that there are no surprises or unpleasanties contained therein.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as we know from what Senator Doody has said, from the report of the committee and from some debate on that report today, the purpose of these supplementary estimates—and the appropriation bill is built upon them—is to pay the $1 billion promised—in this case, the first $300 million thereof.

We were told, as the report indicates, that it is to assist Canadian grain and oilseed growers as a result of falling world prices brought on by the action of the United States and the European Economic Community.

The report points out that a number of policy issues were raised regarding the Special Canadian Grains Program. Witnesses agreed to provide information to the committee explaining the methods used to arrive at the formula to be used.

The committee also questioned the impact of low grain prices on the market price of red meat.

I would underline that it was the opinion of the committee that the policy matters raised should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. Indeed, this bill does raise a number of policy questions, and in briefing notes that we received for the committee certain policy questions were raised. I mention them here to put them on the record and I will explain why I am doing so.

The first question relates to the fact that the program is expected to run to two years and whether there is any significance in the two years. It also relates to whether the government expects a resolution to the subsidy problem brought on by the actions of the EEC and the United States or whether this is a continuing problem, as Senator Argue has suggested both in the committee and here in the chamber. Obviously that problem will not be solved unless the subsidy problem itself is solved. In other words, we are dealing with a symptom rather than a cause of the disease.

The second question is whether the program of grain subsidies is consistent with the efforts of the government to shift inefficient farmers off the land. This program might encourage less efficient grain producers to stay on the land for at least another year. That is a possible consequence.

The third question is whether the 48 person-years which are covered in the supplementary estimates represents the total number of person-years needed or whether some person-years will be relocated from other areas of the department. That question may have been answered after I had to leave the committee to attend another meeting.

The last question was one which we did deal with and it relates to the amounts shown for the administration of this program. Of the $300 million, some $4 million is allocated to administration and $1,540,000 for professional and special services. There is also an additional $450,000 for information. We were told that there would be a great deal of advertising necessary to advise those farmers who are not operating under the Wheat Board of their rights. This is to be sure that they fill out applications and that the information gets to the Department of Agriculture.

It is my understanding that 60 per cent of the total number of farmers who hold permit books with the Wheat Board fall into a category which does not require advertising, because we were told that the Wheat Board has all the information required to administer the program.

It seemed to me that the administration costs were high and were not fully justified by the evidence given to the committee.

However, I would point out the situation is front-end loaded to a certain extent, so some of these costs will be spread over the $1 billion and are not related only to the $300 million.

Honourable senators, I would be concerned about passing this appropriation bill without further explanation were it not for the fact that my questions all relate to ongoing policy considerations. If these considerations are going to be referred to our Agriculture Committee, they can be dealt with there—and the program is an on-going one in any event.

• (1730)

With those comments, I intend to support this bill at second reading.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I think honourable senators would agree that almost everything that might be said on this particular measure has probably already been said. Senator Frith has raised a number of administrative points and I think they are all pertinent. I am a little disturbed at hearing that only 60 per cent of the producers are covered by the Canadian Wheat Board permit book system because I would have believed that figure to be a lot higher. There are 140,000 permit book holders in western Canada, by which I mean the four western provinces. I believe we were told that they expect that only about 10,000 producers might fall outside the Wheat Board system, producers such as cattle feeders, ranchers and so on. Well, every grain farmer would have a permit book; it is almost automatic. Almost every livestock producer would also have a permit book because they are almost always sellers of grain off their livestock farms. That is just the way it is. Therefore, I would think that they are looking for farmers who are basically outside the area of western Canada.

I believe that an expenditure of $450,000 upon advertising just to let people know that there might be something for them is really not necessary. I hope that this advertising program does not turn out to be a propaganda effort. I hope that the ads will not promote this measure as a great step forward. If we just think about it, it is not a great step forward at all.

The National Finance Committee was told this morning that the average total payout will be $5,000 per producer. I suppose that since $300 million is 30 per cent of $1 billion, the first proportional payment is $1,500. That will be paid to a producer whose income may have dropped anywhere from $10,000 to $40,000, depending on the size of his operation. The $1,500 will come to that farm leader that I referred to yesterday—and the figures that were given in Hansard were not accurate; the $110,000 debt load was against his land, which a few years prior was worth $400,000 rather than the $40,000 quoted yesterday. Now the banks are getting ready to foreclose and he does not think he has enough equity in his land to prevent the foreclosure. There is no legislation in place that can necessarily prevent that foreclosure, and $1,500 to a person in such great financial difficulty just won't do the job.

I could repeat my line, honourable senators, and I would think my line should ring a bell with people who are conservative-minded: The proposition that you can take large chunks of money and throw them at a problem hoping to solve it just won't work. We have to have a system in place that targets the problem. With great respect to whoever might have drafted the questions that have been put on the record, I question whether this measure might have an effect upon inefficient farmers. It is not the inefficient farmers, sometimes, who are in trouble—it is those who tried very hard to be exceptionally efficient. Such farmers expand, leverage their debt and equity positions and so on. By and large, it is often the young farmer, the university graduate, the technically most capable farmer who finds himself in financial trouble. These are people who decide that they can do enough research and that, in light of the expert's view that this is a good investment, they can go forward and prove their efficiency to make some money. These farmers were efficient; their input costs were the highest of all and their debt load was also the highest of all. This has all come crashing down as much on the so-called efficient farmers as, perhaps, on those who somebody in a high place has said are inefficient farmers, who may simply have been conservative-minded people who operated with care and remembered the admonitions of their fathers and grandfathers not to get too far into debt if they wanted to succeed as farmers. Those people who were less efficient by way of production, who perhaps produced three quarters as much per acre as the efficient farmers, probably find themselves in less serious financial difficulty today. So let us not go down that road.

Honourable senators, the great danger in what is happening here is that we are in the process of destroying the rural life of Canada. I think we should be able to address this problem collectively in such a way that government expenditures, while they may necessarily need to be increased, will not necessarily constitute the only way to deal with the problem.

The Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Jean-Jacques Noreau, appeared before the National Finance Committee today. He is a prominent and well known civil servant. During my stay in the cabinet, he was a member of the secretariat of Treasury Board, so his training, I suppose, has been to be careful with money, to be cautious with money. Maybe that is all right, but I was disturbed at one of his answers to a question of mine this morning. I asked him whether he felt any pressure within the system to reduce the initial prices for grain next year. My understanding of his answer, and I am paraphrasing him, was that there is pressure within the system to reduce the government's commitment to grain stabilization. Of course, honourable senators, that is the western grain stabilization. If nothing is done to reduce the government's obligation, there may be as much as $1 billion paid out under that act next year, so we need to be cautious, as agricultural producers and as members of Parliament.

[Senator Argue.]

With respect to the administration of this measure, I will acknowledge that the government discussed with farm leaders the methods and the formula to be used. But considering the part of western Canada that I come from, which is the same general type of area as that which Senator Olson comes from, I think there is built into the formula a certain amount of discrimination against those people in the drier areas of the country. The whole payment is based on seeded acres. In the northern parts of the province where rainfall is higher, the pattern is to seed virtually every acre to crop. In our country the pattern is to seed 50 per cent of the land to crop; that is not the total pattern, but it is one used by a great many producers. What this measure is saying is that if you have a greater number of acres, then with the district averaging method that is being used for yield you will get a much larger payment under this act. I recognize that it is difficult to bring forward a formula that is fair to everybody. Sometimes I think those of us who farmed in the south and had in the past a marketing system based on so many bushels per acre perhaps had some advantage over those in the more moist, high production areas where quotas are also established on acres. I repeat, however, that I think there is built into this formula a certain amount of discrimination against people in the drier areas of western Canada. If that kind of discrimination, or if you want to put it the other way, that kind of bonus to those who have seeded all their acres is maintained in one program after another, it will be a signal to farmers to seed all their land, even though that may not be the wisest method of operating.

• (1740)

Honourable senators, along with all other honourable senators, I am pleased to support this measure, because an average of $1,500 for each producer in the next few weeks is worth $1,500 and there will be, on average, another $3,500. It is of some help, but it is only, according to the United Grain Growers who have asked for $4 billion for Western Canada, 25 per cent of what they feel is necessary to compensate producers for the very adverse economic conditions currently prevailing.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Doody: I have nothing to add. I simply thank honourable senators for their participation in the debate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FIFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (supplementary budget of Social Affairs, Science and Technology), presented in the Senate on 16th December, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget of Regulations and other Statutory Instruments), presented in the Senate on 16th December, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (Budget regarding examination of Canada's participation in the international financial system), presented in the Senate on December 16, 1986.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, as Senator van Roggen has had to leave, I move the adoption of the report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FISHERIES

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Third Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries (budget regarding examination of marketing of fish in Canada), presented in the Senate on December 16, 1986.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF DEBATES and MINUTES—MOTION TO CALL PRINTING BUREAU OFFICIALS BEFORE THE SENATE—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move:

That Officials from the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be called before the Bar of the Senate to explain the delay in the publishing of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have been in contact with officials of the Printing Bureau and of the department. I understand that a letter is being prepared, and I had hoped to receive it this afternoon. The letter has not arrived, but I shall certainly have it tomorrow morning. As to whether or not it will be satisfactory, perhaps we could determine that tomorrow. In the meantime and if the Senate so agrees, perhaps this motion could stand.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think that what Senator Doody has suggested is a satisfactory temporary solution. I hope that it is understood that if we do not find the explanation satisfactory it may be necessary for the responsible official to appear before the Senate. If that condition is understood, then I think that we have a sensible solution to the problem, and on that basis I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g):

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, 19th December, 1986, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, perhaps I can give a word of explanation, at least on two bills that are due tomorrow. There may be one other. Bill C-16 deals with amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and Bill C-17 deals with the PGRT. I understand that the other place will begin to deal with these bills at midday tomorrow. We hope to have the first of them by one o'clock tomorrow afternoon, and it is hoped that the second one will follow shortly thereafter. In order to expedite the progress of business, it seems to be appropriate to meet an hour earlier than our normal time.

Perhaps it will move us closer to Royal Assent, which we hope to obtain tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 1 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"*(See p. 364)CANADAIR LIMITED
DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-25

THURSDAY, December 18, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-25, intituled: "An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, 27th November, 1986, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill and now reports as follows:

In connection with this reference, your Committee heard testimony from the Canada Development Investment Corporation (CDIC), Bombardier Inc., Canadair Limited and the Minister of State for Privatization, the Honourable Barbara McDougall. We also received a brief from the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, representing the Canadair production and maintenance employees.

Object of the Bill

This Bill would authorize the sale of Canadair Limited to Bombardier Inc. of Montreal pursuant to terms specified in a letter of intent signed by the Government and Bombardier on 18th August, 1986, and subsequently refined in a final agreement which will come into effect following passage of this legislation.

Background to the Sale

The Government's intent to sell Canadair was announced in October 1984. Canadair's parent, the CDIC, hired a consortium of Burns Fry Limited, Merrill Lynch Capital Markets (of New York) and S.G. Warburg & Co. Ltd. (London, England) to act as financial advisors in the sale.

In February 1985, the financial advisors began developing a marketing strategy for contacting all significant aerospace firms in the world. Between 135-150 potential buyers were canvassed worldwide. By early 1986, six serious bidders emerged from this process. Following discussions with each of these bidders and assessment of their submissions, CDIC concluded that only the bids from Bombardier Inc. and from Canadian Aerospace Technologies (CAT) offered the potential for a "financially acceptable transaction". Additional negotiations were conducted with these two companies as a result of which the two submissions were improved substantially. These submissions were then presented to the CDIC board in June 1986. Upon consideration, the board determined that, although the two bids were quite close, the Bombardier bid was superior from an economic point of view and recommended it to the Government. The Government accepted that recommendation, and Bill C-25 provides for its implementation.

Terms of Sale to Bombardier by CDICA. Consideration and Payment*Cash

- $120 million payable at closing

Shares

- $100 million of special "A" shares issued by Bombardier to ensure that Canadair's existing working capital will be used solely for the business purposes of Canadair. Bombardier can redeem these shares by making expenditures in permitted investments related to Canadair's operations.
- $50 million of special "B" shares which can be "earned out" by Canadair if it achieves specified increases in exports, import replacement, sales of new products, and spending on R & D

Royalties

- $173 million estimated nominal value of royalties over the next 20 years in consideration of the exclusive use of the Challenger technology. CDIC will retain liability for existing royalty commitments relating to the Challenger technology. Taking these into account reduces estimated net royalties to $107 million. In the first two years following closing, the Crown shall have the option of receiving a lump sum payment of $20 million in lieu of royalties.
- 1% of Canadair's share of the program revenues from the CF-18 systems engineering support contract

Additional Payments

- $3 million in dividends at closing
- $6.5 million for purchase of the Cartierville airport. Bombardier will pay an additional $5 million into a joint account of the Government and Canadair. Over the next four years, draws against this account will be solely for the purpose of upgrading the airport. Any funds remaining at the end of the four year period shall be remitted to the Government.

B. Other Provisions

- Canadair shall remain in Quebec and maintain capacity to design, develop, and produce existing Canadair products. Production outside Canada will be allowed only with the prior approval of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.
- The Government shall warrant that the Canadair pension plans will be fully funded at closing. Amounts in these plans will be for the sole benefit of the Canadair employees.
- CDIC will retain ownership of the Challenger technology, but will license it exclusively to Canadair.
- The Government shall undertake to provide the necessary financing through the Export Development Corporation (EDC) to enable Canadair to make Challenger sales in export markets. This commitment is contingent on Canadair's undertaking to reach the Canadian content requirements of EDC "over a specified time period so far as it is practicable to do so."
- If at any time for 15 years after closing, insurance coverage for product-related liability is unavailable or is "economically impracticable to procure", then the Government will share the risks of claims against Canadair to the extent of 90% during the first five years, 60% over the following five years, and 30% in the final five years.
- The Government shall indemnify Bombardier and Canadair for any net losses from claims against Canadair outstanding at closing or that may arise within five years of closing with respect to events that occurred prior to closing. In addition, the Government shall pay for any claims exceeding insurance incurred within four years from closing and attributable to defects in a Canadair product or design made prior to closing.

Considerations Behind the Transaction

The sale was negotiated and completed on a going-concern basis, and was preferable to other alternatives.

The alternatives to selling Canadair were liquidation of the company or continuation under government ownership. The Government commissioned studies to evaluate both of these options. A study by Peat Marwick concluded that liquidation of Canadair would cost the Government a sum in excess of $300 million. A separate study, done by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion with the advice of Burns Fry Limited, estimated the present cash value of continued government ownership of Canadair at $70 million. The sale to Bombardier was therefore judged financially superior to either of those alternatives.

The 1986 operating results of Canadair have been good. CDIC Chairman Mr. Paul Marshall told the Committee that Canadair was expected to remain successful for about two more years but would run into difficulties after that, should it continue as a Crown corporation. He attributed Canadair's current success primarily to orders placed by the Government of Canada and the Government of West Germany. Except for these contracts, Canadair's order book "is very thin", Mr. Marshall said, and Canadair lacks the marketing expertise that would enable it to improve this situation significantly.

On the other hand, according to the testimony that the Committee received, Bombardier has been very successful in developing new export markets, and its strength in this area is well recognized. This is therefore one area in which Canadair should profit considerably from its integration in the Bombardier group. Both the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Bombardier, Mr. Laurent Beaudoin, and the President and Chief Executive Officer of Canadair, Mr. Donald Lowe, stressed the importance of this factor to the future success of Canadair. Another potential source of benefit for Canadair is the experience of Bombardier in acquiring technology through licensing and adapting it to new areas. In the words of Mr. Lowe, "it should be possible to achieve some exciting technological synergies by licensing specialized technology developed by others in the aerospace industry, while at the same time exploiting Canadair's own achievements more effectively."

Bombardier's benefits in the acquisition of Canadair will derive in part from an expanded opportunity to exploit more fully its existing strengths in engineering and marketing. In addition, Mr. Beaudoin indicated that some of the technology developed in Canadair is applicable to Bombardier's other product lines. In their submission to the Committee, the International Association of Machinists expressed satisfaction with the proposed transaction.

In sum, the managements of both Bombardier and Canadair expressed confidence in the future of Canadair within the Bombardier group.

Your Committee has reviewed the subject-matter of Bill C-25 in accordance with the Order of Reference and recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

FOURTH REPORT

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1987

THURSDAY, December 18, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, December 17, 1986 submits its report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses:

From Agriculture Canada

Mr. Jean-Jacques Noreau, Deputy Minister;
Mr. Frank R. Claydon, Assistant Deputy Minister, Policy;
Mr. Gilles Lavoie, Director General, Farm Financial Protection Programs.

From the Treasury Board:

Mr. R. Bilodeau, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch.

Supplementary Estimates (B) totalling $300.0 million is the second Supplementary Estimate for the 1986-87 year, all of which is being requested as new spending authority by Agriculture Canada for its Special Canadian Grains Program.

This program, which was first announced in the debate following the Speech from the Throne, is intended to assist Canadian grain and oilseed growers as a result of falling world prices brought on by the action of the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC). Canadian grain and oilseed growers receive a subsidy dependent upon the crop they grow, their 1986 acreage, the variability in yield per acre in the different regions of Canada, and the extent to which they are affected by the U.S. and EEC actions. The program is expected to run for two years costing approximately one billion dollars. The anticipated need for this fiscal year is $300 million, the amount of the request in these Supplementary Estimates B; the remaining $700 million is to be requested in the Main Estimates, 1987-88.

During the course of the hearing, a number of policy issues were raised regarding the Special Canadian Grains Program such as the amount of the subsidy under the program and the elements of the formula used to calculate this subsidy. Witnesses agreed to provide information to the Committee explaining the method used to arrive at this formula. The Committee also questioned the impact of low grain prices on the market price of red meat. It was the opinion of the Committee that the policy matters raised should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

The Committee was of the opinion that there was no need for this Supplementary Estimate since Vote 5 - Contingency Fund of the Treasury Board could have been used to initiate this program. This reveals the implications of conferring on the government the wide discretionary powers provided in Vote 5 of the Treasury Board which this Committee raised in its Third Report.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC,
Chairman.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL SECTOR"

On tabling of documents:

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government has tabled in the house today a very important document or series of documents which were tabled in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by the Minister of State for Finance, the Honourable Thomas Hockin. These documents pertain to regulatory reform in the financial sector. My purpose in rising on this occasion is to underline the importance of these documents and, particularly, to express the wish that the legislation which is to follow these documents will come forward as early as possible in 1987. The documents and the statement of the minister contain proposals for change in a number of important areas pertaining to the financial sector in Canada. Because they are proposals cast in very general terms, it is not possible to reach detailed conclusions about the acceptability of the particular proposals. Undoubtedly, the proposals will be fleshed out in the legislation and in the regulations following the legislation. I note that the minister stated in the house yesterday that:

All Hon. Members know that Canada is fortunate to possess one of the finest financial systems in the world. It is composed of sound world class institutions. It employs hundreds of thousands of Canadians and serves millions. It is one of Canada's leading export industries, which is something we ought not to forget.

I am pleased that the minister has taken the occasion to point out the extent and efficacy of the Canadian financial system. It is one legacy which the present government inherited which it is not, presumably, prepared to disown. Indeed, it is prepared to commend the system as it exists, subject to the important changes which are recommended and which we will be considering later.

There is one further point, honourable senators, that I want to make. It has to do with an additional comment of the minister, which reads as follows:

In putting this policy forward, we have been very much helped by the fine work done by the House Standing Committee and to a large measure we have followed it both philosophically and in detail.

It is an ironic point that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, in its sixteenth report, issued in May 1986, entitled "Towards a More Competitive Financial Environment", produced an extremely comprehensive, carefully reasoned and valuable report. I cannot say with absolute certainty the extent to which the minister in his proposals has drawn upon the report of the standing Senate committee, but I believe that it can be argued that the minister drew upon this Senate committee report more than he did upon the report of the standing committee of the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I do not want to be too picky about this, but I think it is important—

Senator Flynn: That kind of thing has existed for years.

Senator MacEachen: Quite aside from the comment made by Senator Flynn, I will say that again yesterday in the House of Commons there was a debate on a resolution calling for the abolition of the Senate. I think that when the Senate, which is so frequently under attack, does produce such valuable reports, it is important that it be brought to the attention of all those who believe in a bicameral system in Canada and that due credit should be given to the work of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I think this is one occasion when the Senate did work very hard through its Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, under the chairmanship of the present Leader of the Government in the Senate. In some way we ought to convey to the minister our disappointment that he has not acknowledged the source of these sound proposals in his statement yesterday.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly congratulate the Leader of the Opposition on putting on the public record the amazing coincidence between the report presented by the minister yesterday and the report prepared by the standing Senate committee. If, indeed, the committee's work has not been drawn upon, then it has to be one of the major miracles of all time that the two reports should have such an amazing similarity. I have no hesitation at all in bringing to the attention of the minister the comments that have been made in this place and I am sure there must have been some terrible misunderstanding somewhere along the line. Due credit will eventually come, I am sure, to those in the Senate who prepared that Senate report.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, in the spirit of Christmas and good health, I suggest we do not hold our breath until credit is given.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-16
TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Third Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology respecting the subject matter of Bill C-16, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

REFERRAL BACK TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON FILM ENTITLED:
"THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, January 20, 1987 I will call the attention of the Senate to the motion adopted by the Senate on May 28, 1986, and passed by a vote of 28 for and 17 against, that the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on April 15, 1986, be referred back to the committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop; and further, that consideration be given to the apparent disregard by National Film Board officials of their commitments to the Senate Sub-committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of evidence before the sub-committee.

OTTAWA CITIZEN ARTICLE OF NOVEMBER 18, 1986—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, February 3, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to an article dated November 18, 1986 in the Ottawa Citizen, which in its imputations holds in contempt not only an institution of Parliament but by extension all of its members and goes beyond the guarantees of freedom of expression under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, January 27, 1987 I will call the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL SECTOR"—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1) and 44(2), I give notice that later this day I will call the attention of the Senate to the document entitled: "New Directions for the Financial Sector", tabled in the Senate on December 19, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-169).

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Under Inquiries, I would presume?

Senator Sinclair: Yes, under Inquiries.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY FIRST REPORT OF FRENCH CONSTITUTIONAL DRAFTING COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon the First Report of the French Constitutional Drafting Committee, tabled in the Senate on 17th December, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-159).

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF DEBATES—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege, I would like to point out that we do not yet have yesterday's Debates of the Senate. It is getting to be a bad habit.

● (1310)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have my copy.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Yesterday's Hansard has been circulated.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: If it has been circulated, it ought to have been circulated to everyone. This block of seats does not have it. We have to beg continuously for documents. What is going on?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: If it is here, it has not been delivered to my desk.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I ask the Table to please see that documents are circulated to senators. This is getting to be a bit of a farce.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I ask that the Table order the pages to distribute copies of Hansard right away.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that the Honourable Senator Murray is not present today. If there are any questions honourable senators wish me to take as notice, I will be happy to do so. In the meantime, I do have some delayed answers which I should like to present.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ANTICIPATED LEGISLATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would the Deputy Leader of the Government, under the heading of "Question Period", be able to tell us what additional legislation we can expect this afternoon from the House of Commons?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I can handle that. As of this moment, I understand that Bill C-17, respecting the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, is now being debated in the other place. I am told that it will be before the Senate shortly.

Following that, we can expect to see Bill C-16 which deals with amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

There are two other bills which I am told will be processed in the House of Commons this afternoon, a bill to amend the Salaries Act, which deals with the Lieutenant Governors' salaries. The industrial aggregate on which the formula is based for increases is no longer used, and the new measure that is used by Statistics Canada has to be substituted. The wording in the act has to be changed to allow them to compute the 7 per cent increase that Lieutenant Governors are due.

The final bill which we are told will probably come before the Senate today is one dealing with the Immigration Loan Fund. Moneys from that fund are made available to new Canadians. The money in that fund is exhausted and additional funding is needed to carry on in the new year. I have been told that that bill will be before the Senate this afternoon.

Those are the four bills.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Government. I can see no personal difficulty with respect to the first two bills mentioned by the Deputy Leader, and possibly the third, which I understand has to do with an alteration in the indexation for the Lieutenant Governors' salaries. However, I do ask whether it is appropriate to ask us to deal with all the stages of a bill which we have not seen and which has not even, to my knowledge, been unveiled in the House of Commons. If the situation is as has been suggested, namely, that the provisions of that immigration loan authority expire at the end of December, one wonders why—

Senator Doody: The fund will be exhausted.

Senator MacEachen: —if the fund will be exhausted—why has there been a delay to the point where the bill is introduced by the government on the last day of the session prior to Christmas. I think at a certain point we have to draw a line and say that there is a limit to the extent to which Parliament can be asked to deal with measures without proper consideration. One wishes to be as accommodating as possible—and I believe we have been—but now to have a fourth bill brought in on the very last day is, in my opinion, a bit much. I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether he can exercise some influence not to have this bill pushed forward.

Senator Phillips: Much like the previous government.

Senator Doody: I can only answer the question that was asked by the Leader of the Opposition. The answer was that these four bills, I am told, are to be introduced in the other place today and they will be sent up. Whether the Senate wishes to deal with or pass the immigration bill, of course, is entirely within the authority of the Senate. I can simply commend it to the Senate for its attention, and the Senate will decide how it wants to dispose of the particular bill.

As for my using my influence in the other place, I will certainly try to do that, but I will not guarantee any startling results this afternoon.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SELF-GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I also have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. I want to assure him that it has nothing to do with icebreakers.

I would like to state that I have read the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development's comprehensive claims policy which he tabled yesterday in the other place. First of all, I want to say that I commend both the government and the minister for the efforts that they are making to solve very difficult problems.

My question deals with Indian self-government. I want to state right now, honourable senators, that I do not see Indian self-government and the comprehensive claims policy as a partisan issue. I see it as an issue that all parliamentarians have to deal with in a very serious manner. Could the deputy leader get me some information from the minister concerning the minister's statement that the new government policy will be consistent with the government policies on Indian-Inuit community-based self-government?

I have always been one of the people who have opposed Indian self-government based on what the Indian leaders themselves described as Indian self-government, which was a government that would be within the provinces but would have more power than even the provinces. The minister's new direction seems to be community-based self-government, which is totally opposed to what the Indian leaders themselves see as Indian self-government. I wonder if I could get the Deputy Leader of the Government to take that back to the minister and get me some clarification on exactly what we mean by "community-based Indian self-government."

• (1320)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would be pleased to make representations on behalf of the senator.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—FUTURE RAIL MARKET PROSPECTS—STATUS OF REPORT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, my question is for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure he and other honourable senators are aware of the great concern that has been expressed about the future of Sydney Steel Corporation.

He may also be aware that there is a delegation from Sydney Steel Corporation and from the general Cape Breton community in Ottawa today meeting with several cabinet ministers. Their concern relates to the future of rail orders from Canadian National for Sysco as well as the financing of phase two of the Sydney Steel Corporation modernization plan.

Awaited with great interest is the report by A.D. Little of Canada Ltd. on future market prospects in respect of rails. We understand that that report was to be submitted to the government some time this week.

I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government has any knowledge he would share with us as to whether or not that study has, indeed, been received by the government.

[Senator Lucier.]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am afraid I have no knowledge of that situation to pass on, but I will make inquiries for the honourable senator.

Senator Graham: Before the business of the Senate is completed today, I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government, on that particular point, might ask officials whether or not the report has been received and, if not, when it might be expected. Would he also ask when, indeed, we may have a decision?

Senator Doody: I will make an inquiry, but how quickly the results will materialize, of course, is out of my hands. However, I will certainly make the inquiry.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO POORER PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government, which he may want to take as notice.

My question concerns the controversial statements made by the New Brunswick Minister of Finance with respect to the presumed promise by the federal Minister of Finance that the poorer provinces were to expect an additional $175 million in equalization payments next year.

Comments from the New Brunswick Minister of Finance, as reported in the press, and comments from other sources involved in the deliberations where the federal minister, presumably, made that offer seem to indicate there was a universal understanding that the payment would be made in one block, in one year and not spread out over two years. Is there anything new with respect to that situation today?

I do not want to confront the deputy leader with the suggestion that someone is saying less than the truth. I would presume, though, that this could be the result of a basic misunderstanding. But it appears to be very clear in the minds of provincial representatives and provincial ministers that there was a commitment made for that transfer over a period of one year, contrary to what the federal Minister of Finance says. What is the situation?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I can only say that the allegation is, as the senator says, that some of the ministers of finance in the provinces seem to feel that the commitment was made for a one-year payment. The federal Minister of Finance says that the commitment was made and it would be spaced over two years. Other than that, I have no other information. However, I will make inquiries on behalf of the honourable senator. Obviously, there is a very serious difference of opinion.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I think the New Brunswick Minister of Finance must be in a total state of shock over what has been happening recently. They have been asked to carry a greater load of the fiscal burden. Because of the state of the economy, they are faced with diminishing revenue, and they are asked by the central government to take up an even greater share of the financial responsibility for administering the well-being of the citizens of New Brunswick. Just recently they were asked to pay radio licence fees for radios used by the RCMP, highway patrols, and what-have-you. The story goes on and on. The concern is over this important matter and sometimes over other picayune matters, and I do not see the climate of cooperation improving at all, contrary to what some sources in Ottawa say, in federal-provincial relations.

I would point out that it bothers me, too, as a New Brunswicker, that we are being treated like that. It bothers me, too, that the great, big, rich Province of Ontario is quoted as saying that it may not have been listening as it ought, not being one of the "poorer provinces."

What is going on in this country? Does the government not care any more about the outlying areas, the not-so-well-off areas? Where is this great agenda for national reconciliation? Back in New Brunswick people think that it has probably gone to the birds.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I can sympathize with the honourable senator. As a former provincial minister of finance, I know exactly what he is talking about. I dealt with the federal government, admittedly a different government, for a great many years and there was always a different set of priorities; the subject was approached from an entirely different angle. There were some serious differences of opinion, and I must say that our expectations from the central government were, to phrase it mildly, not always fully realized.

I would suspect that the situation, to one degree or another, will always remain the same. I do believe that cooperation is attempted and tried. There are differences of opinion. Particularly in this case there is a very serious difference of opinion. But I am really not in a position—nor does my honourable colleague expect me to be in a position—to be able to resolve them at this time and place.

Senator Corbin: I would like to thank the Deputy Leader of the Government for his frankness. I always appreciate that.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TOBIQUE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF IMPARTIAL NEGOTIATORS

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to return to a question I raised yesterday with the Leader of the Government concerning the Tobique Indian Band land claim. In response to the concern that I raised yesterday, the Leader of the Government referred to the new policy laid down by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to "comprehensive land claims." I should perhaps have been more specific yesterday. The item I was raising was one which is referred to in Indian Affairs as "a specific land claim". It does not come under the umbrella of the comprehensive or global Indian claims.

At issue was a profound difference of opinion over the qualifications of the negotiator or negotiators provided by the Department of Indian Affairs to come to an understanding with the Tobique band on their 14-year-old claim with respect to alienated lands which happened in the last century and early in this century. I would not say that the matter has been put on the back burner repeatedly, but the bureaucrats have always come back to square one and have told the Indians to go back home, do their homework, reconsider it and come back with another proposition when the issue is rather clear. So the band has come to the conclusion that there is ill-will on the part of the functionaries, and that is why they have pleaded with successive ministers to change the negotiating team.

That item is not covered by the comprehensive policy laid down by the minister yesterday, which is an entirely different matter. So I would like the Leader of the Government to take this comment as notice and perhaps provide me with a comprehensive response when we come back in the new year.

● (1330)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly make representations to the minister in that respect.

TRANSPORT

DISALLOWANCE OF INCREASE IN CN FREIGHT RATES

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, earlier this week I asked the Government Leader in the Senate whether he could facilitate the release of a Canadian Transport Commission ruling on freight increases that had been levied against western Canadian wood pulp. Obliging, he has done that, and the CTC has since handed down its ruling, which I received this morning. It stated that the 4 per cent increase levied in January of this year should be disallowed as well as the 4 per cent increase proposed for next year. I wonder whether the deputy leader could indicate to me whether or not there has been any indication from Canadian National that they will abide by this ruling and, second, will the money expended in the past several months as a result of the 4 per cent increase be refunded?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I regret to say that I have no information on that matter. However, I shall certainly make inquiries for the honourable senator.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a number of delayed answers.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED ABUSE OF MINISTERIAL DISCRETION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a response to a question raised in the Senate on November 6, 1986 by the Honourable John B. Stewart, regarding Immigration—Alleged Abuse of Ministerial Discretion.

The Minister of State for Immigration has full responsibility for the development and implementation of policy and the overall management of the immigration program. This includes also a relationship with the Refugee Status Advisory Committee. The Minister of Employment and Immigration maintains an overall co-ordinating role for immigration policy. The Immigration Act requires the Minister of Employment and Immigration to retain authority for certain functions such as those relating to security matters.

GRAIN

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—FINAL PAYMENTS FOR GRADES 1 AND 2 SPRING WHEAT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the delayed answer to a question raised in the Senate on December 16, 1986, by the Honourable Hazen Argue, regarding Grain—Canadian Wheat Board—Final Payments for Grades 1 and 2 Spring Wheat.

The current system for pooling is legislated under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It would be difficult to change the Act so as to deal with the crop year just past or the current crop year. Once prices are set, and the spread between accounts is established—once wheat is delivered into the system—it is difficult to make a retroactive change.

No announcement has been made as to whether or not there will be a 1985-1986 final payment for Canadian Red Spring Wheat Number 1 and 2. At this point it is not useful to speculate what they might be.

The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Agriculture and several members of Parliament have met with the Western Canadian Growers Association. Both sides have agreed to meet again and consider changes for the next crop year.

ILLITERACY

REMEDIAL MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 16 by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn with regard to Illiteracy—Remedial Measures—Government Policy.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: May I have that answer read, please?

Senator Doody: Certainly.

Through his visits to institutions and discussions with various officials in Corrections and related services, the Solicitor

[Senator Doody.]

General became increasingly concerned about the large number of inmates who lack a basic education and the diminishing ability of this group to compete effectively in the labour market upon release. Mr. Kelleher is anxious to bring some immediate improvement to what he considers this untenable situation and has directed the Correctional Service to expand its efforts immediately to increase significantly the number of inmates leaving prison who can read and write sufficiently to meet the needs of everyday life. This objective will be met through increased attention to the identification of illiterates upon arrival at penitentiary and measures to increase the participation rate in literacy programs through improved program quality and attractiveness.

The Solicitor General is confident that this enhanced response on the part of the Correctional Service will meet more effectively the urgent needs of this disadvantaged group.

The Minister is planning to implement this initiative sometime early in the new year.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I thank the deputy leader for the answer, and I applaud the Solicitor General. However, my question was: Would the government follow the excellent example of the Solicitor General in dealing with this problem within the prisons and deal with the question of illiteracy on a national basis? I wonder whether I can get an answer to that question.

Senator Doody: I shall certainly pass that revised question on to the appropriate department.

TRANSPORT

PROHIBITION OF SMOKING ON COMMERCIAL FLIGHTS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 17 last by the Honourable Senator Lucier regarding Transport—Prohibition of Smoking on Commercial Flights.

Hon. Paul Lucier: May I have that answer read?

Senator Doody: Certainly.

The Minister of Transport has recommended to the Governor in Council that a new air regulation be proposed to ban smoking on Canadian aircraft for both domestic and transborder flights of two hours or less. This new regulation will be published in Part I of the Canada Gazette to solicit public comment before a final decision is taken early in 1987.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SCIENTIFIC MEETING IN STOCKHOLM—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 17 last by the Honourable Senator Marsden regarding Research and Development—Scientific Meeting in Stockholm—Canadian Representation.

There was no Canadian representation at the recent meeting of the Eureka Program in Stockholm because Eureka is strictly a European endeavour. However, the government is very interested in pursuing matters dealing with research and development in co-operation with the Eureka Council.

ENERGY

MONITORING OF OIL AND GAS COMPANIES FOLLOWING TERMINATION OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 18 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding Energy—Monitoring of Oil and Gas Companies Following Termination of Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax.

The recent report of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency dealt with the energy sector up to and including June 1986.

Following the removal of the PGRT in October of this year, the PMA agreed to produce a special report on PGRT re-investment. The PMA has almost completed its interviews with the industry and expects to report before the end of January.

The Minister has been made aware of the concerns of Senator Olson and will be communicating directly with the senator as soon as more information is available.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 18 last by the Honourable Senator Marchand regarding Aboriginal Peoples—Post-Secondary Education—Government Policy.

The question raised by the Honourable Senator Marchand on post-secondary education for Indians of the Okanagan Indian Band in British Columbia, raised in the Senate yesterday, has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Minister will respond in writing directly to the honourable senator on this important matter at the earliest possible date.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 18 last by the Honourable Senator Marsden regarding Employment—Summer Youth Employment Program.

The final details on the Challenge Summer Program are now being worked out.

The Minister of State for Youth has met with groups affected by the program to seek their input and he will be making an announcement on the program early in the New Year.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISUSE OF MANITOBA INDIAN BAND FUNDS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 18 last by the Honourable Senator Molgat regarding Indian Affairs—Alleged Misuse of Manitoba Indian Band Funds.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I believe that that answer is a very short one. I wonder if the deputy leader could give us the information.

Senator Doody: Certainly.

The RCMP investigation into allegations made by the former Director of Finance in the Manitoba region is ongoing.

The office of the Comptroller General review of the financial and management processes of the Manitoba region is expected to be completed in early summer 1987.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I think it would be mean spirited not to thank and congratulate the Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Government on the improvement in the way they are handling the answering of questions. Senator Doody has just referred to several questions that were asked just yesterday. May I ask how many questions are left?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid that I do not have the answer to that question, but I can take it as notice!

Senator Frith: Anyway, well done.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

GUEST LIST AT HISTORIC PLAQUE CEREMONY

Question No. 3 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall

28th October, 1986—What are the names of those Canadians who were invited to the commemoration of two historic plaques at a special ceremony at Government House on 2 July, 1986?

Reply by the Minister of the Environment:

The attached guest list for the ceremony on July 2, 1986, to commemorate two historic plaques at Government House was prepared in cooperation with Government House officials.

EXCISE TAX ACT EXCISE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-14, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved the third reading of the Bill C-23, to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act.

He said: I promised Senator Godfrey I would give him a reply on the question of the alternative minimum tax versus capital gains exemptions.

I will simply read the official reply I have here:

[English]

The minimum tax was designed to prevent high income Canadians from using one or more tax incentives to pay little or no tax in any one year. However, the government recognizes that existing tax incentives were put in place for valid economic and social reasons. The lifetime capital gains exemption is one such preference. It was introduced to provide an incentive for investment, risk taking and jobs creation. The minimum tax will not remove this incentive. Although for minimum tax purposes, the full amount of any capital gain is included in taxable income, the individual will still receive the benefit of the lifetime capital gains exemption.

For example, on a total capital gain of $50,000 included in income for minimum tax, an individual can deduct the capital gains exemption for this year of $25,000. In addition, the individual is entitled to deduct his normal personal exemptions and the minimum tax deduction of $40,000. For the majority of Canadians realizing capital gains this year, minimum tax will have no impact.

I would say that generally speaking capital gains is available, but from the last sentence I have just read, it would seem we are sure for this year, but not absolutely sure for following years.

CANADAIR LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn, for Senator Asselin, moved the third reading of the Bill C-25, An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, before the bill receives third reading, I would like to say a few words about it. There are some aspects of it that touch upon my particular region.

I recognize that the matter of the CF-18 contract is not by any means an essential part of this bill. It only arises because the successful bidder did include a royalty on that contract as part of the bid. It is not my intention today to debate the award of that contract. There will be another opportunity to do that at a later date when the inquiry proposed by Senator De Bané comes forward for discussion. I do not want this occasion to pass, however, without making some comments on the general principle.

The minister assured us in committee that the awarding of the contract had nothing to do with the decision to sell Canadair to Bombardier, and I accept that statement. Those are two entirely separate matters. When questioned, the minister stated that the possibility of extra money going to the government was not a factor in the decision, in that the eventual awarding of the CF-18 contract was unrelated to the sale of Canadair to Bombardier. I think it is important, however, that those facts be stated, because when we come to a discussion of the eventual award of the contract, those pertinent facts must be kept in mind.

I have to say that I find it somewhat difficult to understand how a contract that will eventually, over its 20-year period, be worth somewhere between $1 billion and $1.4 billion does not have any material benefit to the company that received it. I find that an extremely difficult proposition to accept and it still escapes me, but we will eventually be able to discuss that as well.

I wanted to make those points now so that there can be no question when we come to the more in-depth debate on this subject as to the facts that were given to us at this time by the minister.

Senator Flynn: I think the point was discussed in committee and the report shows that the committee accepted the word of the minister. At the time the decision was made to sell Canadair to Bombardier, no decision had been made regarding the CF-18 contract. The honourable senator is free to draw whatever conclusion he wishes from these facts, but there is no doubt that the divestiture of Canadair to Bombardier does not include the CF-18 contract.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4, 1986-87

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-35, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1987.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Estimates of the Senate, 1987-88), tabled in the Senate on 18th December, 1986.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF DEBATES AND MINUTES—MOTION TO CALL PRINTING BUREAU OFFICIALS BEFORE THE SENATE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That officials from the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be called before the Bar of the Senate to explain the delay in the publishing of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate:—
(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this motion was adjourned yesterday on the basis that we would give the bureau an opportunity to explain what we consider to be a serious breach of our privilege, in the pure sense of the word "privilege"; namely, our inability to do our work because of the absence of the previous day's Debates and Minutes.

● (1350)

Under date of December 18—and that is important, because in the course of it the letter refers to "today" and "yesterday", so we will know what is meant by those words—a letter was sent to Mr. Greene, the Clerk Assistant of the Senate, on the letterhead of Supply and Services Canada, Communications Services. It is signed for Norman Manchovsky, Director General, Communications Services Directorate and Queen's Printer for Canada, and I quote:

The following is in response to your inquiry relating to delays in the delivery of Senate printing requirements on December 17 and 18, 1986.

The final copy of the Senate Debates for Tuesday December 16, was received at 7:25 a.m. on Wednesday December 17. This particular edition contained an unusually large number of appendices which were not of a standard format.

Based on our normal six (6) hour turn around time, this work should have been completed and delivered to you by 1:25 p.m. yesterday afternoon. However, the non-standard appendices created technical problems in the composing of the text which caused unusual delays.

As a result, photocomposition which normally consumes three (3) of the six (6) hours built into the turn around time, took in excess of six and one-half (6 1/2) hours to complete. As in the usual procedure in such circumstances, the Parliamentary Distribution Centre was kept up to date on this matter as the day went on. When it became apparent that the job would not be finished until later in the afternoon, we were advised to withhold delivery until early today.

I want to assure you that all of the available resources in Composition worked on this particular job throughout yesterday, on a top priority basis. As soon as it became apparent during the night that this was going to be a difficult job to process, several of our key daytime employees were called in early. Night time personnel were also kept on into the afternoon, until the work was completed.

This problem of non-standard format is one that comes up from time to time particularly when, as the result of a Senate recess, many appendices appear in the first publication of the Debates when the House reconvenes. I have been advised that certain measures could be taken by the Printing Bureau in cooperation with members of the Senate administration staff to minimize these delays in the future. I would like to meet with you and your officials in the near future to discuss and seek acceptable solutions on this matter.

Another problem was encountered today in our delivery of yesterday's Debates which, according to our normal delivery as specified above, should have been printed and received by the Parliamentary Distribution Centre by 1:05 p.m. this afternoon. This delay resulted from an instruction given to us by the Chief Legislative Counsel, Department of Justice, to print the proposed Environment Protection Act as a top priority.

This work was not ready to go to press until 8:25 a.m. today. At that time, one of the two web presses dedicated to parliamentary work had been out of order since 2:00 a.m. Technicians had been working steadily trying to fix the problem, however, parts needed to repair the equipment were not available, and had to be manufactured in our machine shop. This downtime situation prevailed until after 2:00 p.m. today. As a result, for the second day in a row, we were late in our delivery of the Senate Debates to you. Again, the Parliamentary Distribution Centre liaison staff were kept up to date on today's circumstances as information became available.

This series of unfortunate events regrettably led to our failure to maintain our usual standard of service to you. I would like to apologize for the disruptions and embarrassments this may have caused you and members of the Senate.

I propose to meet with you and your staff at your earliest convenience to discuss the issue of non-standard format as well as other steps that may be taken to prevent such occurrences in the future.

Meanwhile, please accept my regrets for the delays which have occurred in the last two days and rest assured that we will continue to do our utmost to liaise with you and your staff to ensure the best possible service.

Honourable senators, in commenting on that response—and I speak only for myself, because the privilege of all honourable senators is involved here—in general, it is my opinion that the Queen's Printer has given a technical explanation and has given an explanation bringing to the fore an aspect of the problem that was not related to technical difficulties. He appears to me to be pertinently penitent about the results—

Senator Doody: Is he purged?

Senator Frith: —and I suppose, to use somewhat arcane parliamentary language, has purged his contempt.

Senator Doody: Not quite.

Senator Frith: However, let me come back to one of the paragraphs and read it again:

Another problem was encountered today in our delivery of yesterday's Debates which, according to our normal delivery as specified above, should have been printed and received by the Parliamentary Distribution Centre by 1:05 p.m. this afternoon. This delay resulted from an instruction given to us by the Chief Legislative Counsel, Department of Justice, to print the proposed Environment Protection Act as a top priority.

Honourable senators, the question that remains unanswered is: Is there any priority? In other words, looking at this from the point of view of the Queen's Printer himself, what priorities is he to follow? Further, is it acceptable to the Senate—and I suppose to the House of Commons—that their Debates can be pre-empted by an instruction from a government official? It may very well be that it would not be an exaggeration to say that the Queen's Printer could use some help from us in this process in insisting that we find out if that is the order of priority—in other words, can a government official pre-empt priority over the Debates? If it is not, then the order of priority should be one that does not permit such pre-emption.

My suggestion—and it is only a suggestion—is that we adjourn the motion and refer to our Speaker the questions that I have raised, asking him to deal with the Queen's Printer on our behalf; to ask any questions that might flow from the ones I have asked, and to ask any further questions that he wishes to add and any that other honourable senators might wish him to add. However, the two specific questions that I would like asked are: Is there a system of priority in place? If so, does such a system permit pre-emption of printing jobs by a government official, and the resultant priority for those instructions, over the printing of the Debates of the Senate?

If there is no such system, perhaps the Speaker should ask that such a system be established, one that would not permit such pre-emption.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would the Honourable Senator Frith permit a question?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Molgat: In the letter which he has just read, was there any comment respecting the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Tuesday, which were not on our desks and, as far as I know, did not involve any tables or problems? Perhaps I missed the comment about that aspect.

Senator Doody: There is no mention of that.

Senator Frith: I just cannot find that answer.

● (1400)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question of clarification to Senator Frith. Did I understand him to suggest that we adjourn the debate and that in the meantime we refer the matter to the Speaker for examination, and following an eventual response from the Speaker that we then decide whether or not we will debate this matter further? Is that what Senator Frith has said?

Senator Frith: Yes, except that I did not say, "I move the adjournment of the debate." My suggestion was that I would do so after hearing comments from other senators, and that subject to the question being referred to the Speaker we adjourn the debate on the motion rather than disposing of it now.

Senator Corbin: You are not suggesting, Senator Frith, that we refer the matter to the Speaker for a ruling?

Senator Frith: No. I thought I made it quite clear that what I am asking the Speaker to do is find answers to the questions before we proceed with this debate. I suggested that because I want the answers to the questions about priorities and principles in place before we carry on with the debate.

Senator Corbin: I am curious as to why you would follow that course of action. First of all, there are two considerations that come to my mind when something is referred to the Speaker.

Senator Frith: I am not suggesting that this motion be referred to the Speaker. I am suggesting that we adjourn the debate on the motion, and that in the meantime the Speaker, on our behalf, contact the Queen's Printer and obtain answers to these questions. It is my suggestion that we proceed with the debate on the motion after we have received those answers.

Senator Corbin: Is Senator Frith addressing the Speaker in his capacity as Speaker of the Senate or as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration?

Senator Frith: As Speaker of the Senate.

Senator Corbin: Thank you for that clarification. Why would you not ask the Rules Committee to handle this matter instead of the Speaker?

Senator Frith: Because I do not treat the matter as one requiring an amendment to the rules. I do not think that the problem deals with the rules of the Senate, and I do not think the solution deals with the rules of the Senate. I think the problem resides with the administration of the Queen's Printer. I do not look at this matter as a rules question or as an administration question, at least the administration of the Senate. There is no indication that the Senate did not distribute the Debates. The problem was with the Queen's Printer. I see this as a matter of privilege for all honourable senators, and that is why I think the Speaker is the right person to deal with it.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, there is something very soft in the first part of the letter. We have been told that they will try to find an "acceptable" answer for the Senate. I do not think the Senate should accept an "acceptable" answer; it must be an obligatory answer that the Senate receives. It is their business to find the ways, and they should tell us the ways have been found.

As for the rest of it, I think we should be very harsh about our demands concerning the rights of the Senate and privileges of honourable senators.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not disagree at all with what Senator Le Moyne has said. Therefore, I repeat that the comments he has made are relevant to the motion. I think he should be free to repeat them when we receive the answers.

My suggestion is that before we proceed to debate the motion we obtain more facts so that we will have more material for our debate on the motion.

Senator Le Moyne: I hope that the Speaker will take that into account in his inquiries with the Queen's Printer.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, for further enlightenment only, I would ask Honourable Senator Frith whether, in his research so far concluded, he discovered if that pre-emptive development—there was reference to a high official of the Department of Justice—resulted in a delay of Senate Hansard only and not of Commons Hansard. I think there is a question of priority implicit there that might be important.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I asked Mr. Greene that question earlier on and, to the best of the knowledge of the staff, the documentation for the House of Commons was not interrupted.

Senator Macquarrie: That is what I thought.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to the Honourable Senator Frith and other honourable senators who have spoken. I tried to catch everything Senator Frith said, but not having a copy of the so-called explanation before us I was unable to follow what he said completely.

First, we had the apologies and regrets, then we were given a breakdown and an explanation regarding technical difficulties. Then, as I think I heard it, the Chief Legislative Counsel gave these orders.

What I should like to know is who gave such great authority to the Chief Legislative Counsel. I should like to know who in government gave that authority and what that authority actually was.

I am not a lawyer, regrettably, and I do not know the rules as well as I should, but if it is possible for government ministers to give instructions to the Queen's Printer that may affect the operations of the other place or this place, I ask it that proper and correct?

These are some of the questions I should like to have answered. I hope someone will make strenuous efforts to do that.

What was it, the environmental bill that was—

Senator Lucier: The draft bill.

Senator Doody: The proposed Environment Protection Act.

Senator Muir: All I can say about that is that the minister paid a visit to Halifax and commented that Sidney Harbour and Halifax were open sewers, but nobody mentioned anything about how many millions of dollars would be provided to clean up those open sewers. But that is another subject for debate at another time. I hope some of these things will be taken into consideration.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, what Senator Muir has said is what I had hoped would be one of the results of my suggestion. In other words, before moving the adjournment of the debate, I wished to know if other senators had questions to add to those I had asked, and Senator Muir has, in fact, added a question.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, would it not be helpful if copies of the letter which the Leader of the Opposition and I have been provided with were circulated? It is the alleged breach of the privileges of the Senate as a whole that we are talking about here. If that were done, over the next week or so honourable senators could have an opportunity to study the letter and make suggestions to the Speaker.

Senator Flynn: And cool down!

Senator Doody: Cool down? Never! But they could then make recommendations to the Speaker, if they so desired, and he, in turn, could examine them and use them as a base of reference for his discussions with the officials who are involved in this particular affair.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I recognize that one can have mechanical problems with the press in any operation; I doubt if we could ever have enough back up to protect every eventuality. That being said, if it now turns out that deputy ministers of any department can establish the priorities of the Queen's Printer, especially when there is a mechanical problem, then I suggest that before we adopt the budget we should examine the possibility of doing our own printing inhouse if we cannot get either total guarantees from the Queen's Printer or satisfaction.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, strictly speaking, I moved this motion and, therefore, I am not entitled to speak.

Senator Flynn: You did not speak to it, so go ahead.

Senator MacEachen: Thank you.

I want to reinforce one point which was made originally by Senator Muir, and that is: What is the status of the Chief Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice?

Senator Flynn: And of the Queen's Printer.

Senator MacEachen: And of the Queen's Printer, as Senator Flynn has added.

• (1410)

The letter, which has been circulated and read, is signed by an official of the Communications Services Directorate for the Director General of the Communications Services Directorate and Queen's Printer for Canada, and the letterhead is that of Supply and Services Canada. I ask myself: How is it that the Chief Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice can call up and tell an official under another minister what his priorities are to be? That is the question which has been raised by Senator Muir and Senator Frith. Indeed, if one wanted to be perverse, one could ask to have the motion amended to substitute "the Chief Legislative Counsel" for "the officials from the Printing Bureau," so that we could ask the Chief Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice why he has the authority to re-arrange the priorities of another department and to set aside the daily publication of the documents for the Senate of Canada.

I am quite agreeable to let this motion stand and have it adjourned pending further consideration, but I think it is a point that we have to follow so that this will be avoided in the future. I thank other members who have participated.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I think one should remember that the Queen's Printer is under the authority of the Minister of Supply and Services. The Queen's Printer acts for the Senate, given certain understandings; but I suppose the first department with authority over the Queen's Printer is the Ministry of Supply and Services. I think Senator LeBlanc is right: If we are not happy with the Queen's Printer, let us establish our own Senate printer.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I have not spoken yet—I asked for clarification on comments made earlier by Senator Frith. We are talking about faceless people here; we are talking about people with titles.

I have in my hand the Government of Canada telephone directory of the National Capital Region for July 1986. I looked under "Justice Canada, Department of." Who is the Chief Legislative Counsel? I have his name and phone number. I am grieved by the fact that we would question the integrity of G. Bertrand, QC. That I take to be Gérard Bertrand. I know of no greater devoted public servant, no meeker individual, un type plus serviable que Gérard Bertrand. It is beyond my understanding that this individual, on his own initiative, would give the instructions which are quoted in the letter read to us earlier by Senator Frith. I think our inquiry must go all the way. I am not satisfied that we should limit ourselves to the fact that the orders, or the instructions, came from the Chief Legislative Counsel.

Senator Frith: There is no limit.

Senator Corbin: We know how the system works. A minister in the cabinet wants a set of documents printed in a hurry. He tells his deputy minister or his officials, "Get off the fence and get the documents printed. I do not care how you do it, I want them and I want them for a certain hour on a certain day." So, the order goes down the line and at one point in time it becomes an instruction from someone in a position of authority. In this case the person in authority—unless the information contained in the telephone directory is not up to date—is Gérard Bertrand. It would be beyond my comprehension that Gérard Bertrand on his own would give instructions to the effect that have been quoted by Senator Frith.

What is at stake here is not personalities or individuals, it is the chain of command. Who would dare set himself above Parliament in a way that the documents of Parliament would be unduly delayed? This is what is at stake and that is what has to be investigated.

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between government and Parliament.

Senator Corbin: And what is the relationship between government and Parliament? Who has priority? I thought Parliament was supreme.

[Translation]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I fully agree with everything that has been said up to now.

Senator Flynn: Impossible, with all those contradictions!

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, it's like religion. We are often dealing with very contradictory phenomena. I'm sure that if we got into a philosophic debate, we could talk for hours about paradoxes like the Trinity, for instance.

It is also a matter of courtesy and good business practice. If we had a business agreement with a private printer who would deliver a specific order every day, and there came a time that he would be unable to do so, he would certainly call and try to accommodate us and explain what was going to happen. But that was not the case.

When the officials were ordered by one of the ministers to hurry up and get something printed, even if it meant displacing the job for the Senate, they should have advised their minister to call the Senate, to avoid creating a difficult situation. Officials are supposed to give that kind of advice to their ministers. It is not a matter of politics. Governments have always been prone to this kind of thing.

I don't think we should let the matter pass without making all this clear. Thank you, honourable senators.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by Honourable Senator MacEachen, that further debate on the motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: I do not know whether it is proper to add the words "pending the investigation by the Speaker and the report," but as long as that is clear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that this is to be taken up after investigation of all the facts as reported today in the Senate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO REPEAL—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-17, to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL SECTOR"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ian Sinclair rose pursuant to notice of earlier this day:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the document entitled: "New Directions for the Financial Sector", tabled in the Senate on 19th December, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-169).

He said: Honourable senators, the document "New Directions for the Financial Sector," tabled in the Senate today, deals with a part of the business community in our country that has a very wide spectrum, is extremely complex and is in the process of rapid change.

Reference has been made to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and its impact on the work of the minister. I would only suggest, honourable senators, that in that report there was reserved the question of concentration.

I would also draw to the attention of honourable senators that a market change has taken place in regard to the position of investment dealers which, as honourable senators will recall, is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, but concerning which, because of action being indicated in Ontario, action that has been taken in Quebec, and the concurrent action which is proposed here, some additional matters have to be considered.

I would expect, honourable senators, that in view of the importance of this matter, a number of senators would wish to comment on the documents that have been tabled and, indeed, further action may have to be taken.

Therefore, I adjourn the debate in my name to the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Sinclair, debate adjourned.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO REPEAL—SECOND READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, so many of our colleagues in this chamber start off their comments by saying, as though it were a badge of honour, that they are not lawyers, I gave my undertaking to Senator Flynn that I would start off by saying, regretfully, I am a lawyer.

Honourable senators, the effect of Bill C-17 is to eliminate the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax effective October 1, 1986. The tax is commonly referred to as the PGRT.

Honourable senators will recall that the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax was originally announced in October 1980 as part of the previous administration's National Energy Program. It came into effect in 1981. It has been a controversial and much criticized tax in western Canada and did considerable damage, I believe, to federal-provincial relations.

Major changes were made to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax when the Western Accord was signed with the producing provinces in March 1985. The most important change was the introduction of a phase-out schedule which terminated the PGRT at the end of 1988. The PGRT was eliminated for production from all wells drilled after March 31, 1985 and new enhanced oil recovery projects.

Economic conditions in the domestic oil industry today are much different from when the Western Accord was signed in 1985, and the government has concluded that the oil industry should no longer be subject to a discriminatory tax on its drastically reduced revenues.

The bill before you proposes to eliminate the tax effective October 1, 1986. It also proposes to do several other things, and I will highlight some of them.

It proposes to increase the annual small producer credit from $500,000 to $2 million effective May 1, 1986.

It proposes to exempt from PGRT all revenues attributable to synthetic oil production effective May 1, 1986.

It will provide retroactive relief effective January 1, 1986 for individuals and corporations. For corporations this relief will allow up to $1.5 million to be included in the income eligible for the small producer credit. For individuals this deduction replaces the existing $10,000 deduction.

It will introduce other changes to terminate the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, including a sunset provision for the use of the cumulative offset account against income taxes.

Honourable senators, a few moments ago in the other place third reading was given to Bill C-17. When the bill was called for third reading, no objection was recorded, not even by way of division. I therefore would assume it was passed unanimously.

Honourable senators, this bill has received pre-study by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which reported it without amendment. I therefore urge the Senate to give expeditious consideration to this legislation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to say a word or two about this bill in the context of its important policy dimensions.

The PGRT was announced, as we know, with the original National Energy Program of 1980. That program, I think, can be mildly described as a controversial one. The PGRT was a tax on the net operating revenue, after operating costs had been deducted, of oil and gas producers. Through this wellhead tax, the federal government sought an equitable share of oil and gas revenues. In a period of large oil price increases, the NEP projected that the world oil prices would rise to $56.50 per barrel by 1986, and most industry spokesmen and institutions did not quarrel with that projection.

The PGRT was also designed as a windfall gains tax. Against that backdrop, the NEP established a schedule of regulated domestic prices. The PGRT was instrumental in the NEP goals of Canadianization and energy security. It was a part of that program and, therefore, joined hands with those worthy objectives.

The PGRT collected large sums of money for the federal treasury. For example, in 1983-85 it was $6 billion. For 1985 the figure was $2.5 billion—and that is recent. Those funds were utilized for such programs as energy conservation, oil substitution, renewable energy, alternative fuels and construction of natural gas pipelines—initiatives designed to reduce Canada's dependence on oil.

In a recent speech to the Association Québécoise Pour La Maîtrise de L'Energie, the Energy Minister, Mr. Masse, praised the benefits of those conservation programs, and even noted:

[Senator Nurgitz.]

The amount of insulation installed in Canada over the last six years, has given rise in 1986 to energy savings equal to approximately 17 million barrels of oil.

Of course, the Conservative government has cancelled those programs. In addition, funds were also used to stimulate exploration for new energy supplies in the frontier regions. Under the Petroleum Incentives Program, PIP, Canadian-owned companies were encouraged to participate in and acquire expertise in energy exploration and development. The PIP payments played a very significant role in frontier activity. In the offshore areas payments jumped from $468 million in 1981 to $986 million in 1982, and to $1.36 billion in 1983. In 1984 the incentives were $1.59 billion. The government has since cancelled that program.

In November 1983 the present Prime Minister described all of that progress as "nothing more than a holdup at the corner gas station at 3 a.m." Remember, part of that "progress" to which I have just referred was described by his own present Minister of Energy. In the 1984 election, a former minister, the Honourable Pat Carney, called the PGRT "one of the most devastating financial hijacks that has ever happened to any region in Canada." Despite an agreement between federal and provincial Conservatives to keep the energy issue out of the election campaign, it did eventually come into the campaign, as we know, and the leader of the party, now the Prime Minister, promised to eliminate the PGRT.

However, under the terms of the Western Accord signed on March 28, 1985, under the present government, the PGRT was to be phased out gradually and totally eliminated by the end of 1988. For the first period, from January to December 1986, the tax rate was to be 10. It then reduced to 8 the next year, to 6 the following year and to zero on January 1, 1989.

Based on oil prices at that time, the Department of Finance estimated that the gradual removal of the PGRT would amount to a total transfer to the corporate treasuries of $5.6 billion by 1990-91. Of course, the value of those transfers have declined markedly due to the drastic fall in oil prices. Since January of this year the price has fallen by over 50 per cent. For the petroleum industry, whose cash flow is projected to fall by $5 billion, the elimination of the PGRT had become a matter of tremendous significance. Both the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, of course, had called for its total elimination.

Mr. Masse was expected to announce such a decision in Calgary on August 14. However, he stated that the removal of the PGRT would depend on royalty reductions by oil-producing provinces, principally Alberta—and honourable senators will remember the reaction of the Premier of Alberta to that suggestion. In fact, ten days later Mr. Mazankowski called Mr. Masse's comments "regrettable" and predicted an agreement to end the PGRT by early September. At the time the Pembina by-election was at stake, and Mr. Masse returned and purged his "regretability," or what Mr. Mazankowski found "regrettable," and on September 8 he announced the cancellation of the PGRT, some 28 months before its scheduled expiration.

It is estimated that falling oil prices, combined with the introduction earlier this year of a $2 million small-producer credit, the PGRT exemption, and the elimination of the PGRT on production from the Suncor and Syncrude oil sands plants, had reduced Ottawa's take to about $600 million for this year. Its removal will cost Ottawa some $150 million this year and an additional $500 million over the next two years. The industry's estimate of $1.5 billion in savings is slightly optimistic.

Mark Twain once remarked that "It ain't the things that people know that bothers me as much as the things that people know that ain't so." He may have had in mind the present government's theology or policy of market pricing for oil. On the international scene, Saudi Arabia's determination to regain its share of the world market has caused hopeless confusion. That, I suppose, is the free market activity. But to permit a cartel to decide Canada's future energy policies is crazy. The government abandoned the goals of Canadianization and self-sufficiency when it abandoned the NEP and dismantled it.

Of course, the consequences are well known. Big oil, the big boys, win again. The removal of the PGRT will not resolve the industry's problems, particularly the dilemma confronting the small predominantly Canadian-owned companies. Most of the benefits from the PGRT decision will flow to the from 10 to 15 largest companies, the big boys, such multinationals as Shell, Texaco and Imperial Oil—multinationals, not Canadian owned. To ensure that the corporate savings are reinvested, Mr. Masse has asked the Petroleum Monitoring Agency to review the industry's reinvestment over the next two years. In fact, it is a regular function of the PMA, anyway. So the question is still: What will the minister do if reinvestment is not sufficient? The multinationals must be shaking in their towers—but I doubt it.

Senator Nurgitz will, no doubt, point out that during the 1984 election campaign Mr. Turner described the PGRT as "a tax against production" and suggested that there were fairer ways of taxing the industry. He also stated that:

... the measures cannot be viewed in isolation but such items as PIP, PGRT and the Crown share have to be considered together and in the context of the overall objectives of an energy policy for Canada.

To address the plight of the small producers, Mr. Turner proposed on September 11 a price stabilization program which would provide a price of $20 U.S. per barrel for the first 15,000 barrels of production per month. At their conference in July, western Liberals endorsed the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources which had recommended a cash flow stabilization program. In fact, the Alberta government has recently invited Ottawa to join a federal-provincial stabilization program. The Alberta Energy Minister wants a federal decision by mid-October. It is apparent that Alberta may have to finance such a program itself. By removing the PGRT, as it does in this bill, the federal government seems to believe that it has done its share. I doubt that Alberta would agree.

Honourable senators, it is in that context that the bill is presented to us. It is in that context that we have reservations about it—namely, that it has not been replaced by an energy program which has the worthwhile objectives that the National Energy Program had.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a few comments to make on Bill C-17. Those comments will be focused in one area, namely, on the effect of Bill C-17, and other measures relating to the new energy policy of this government, on those people who live north of the sixtieth parallel.

The Prime Minister at one time stated in western Canada that as soon as the Conservative Party was in government, and introduced its new policy, it would create 300,000 jobs in the industry in western Canada and in other areas. I wonder if he would care to go back to Calgary and Edmonton and make those statements today. Though the people of Calgary and Edmonton may be suffering, they have many spokesmen to make representations on their behalf. They have cabinet ministers and members of Parliament on the back benches, so I have no reason to take up their cause. They can do that themselves.

I would like to speak about the effect of the energy policy not only of this government but of the previous government on native people in the north. We decided that we should explore the north to see how much gas and oil was there, how we could get it out and how we could help the people of the north. We went in and said, "This is not your way of living, but trust us. We are going to show you a new way to live with a lot of money. You will go to work on the oil rigs where you will make that money. No longer will you have to trap white foxes and other animals. We are going to show you how to live a different way. You can buy skidoos every year—the whole bit." I want to make it clear that I am not talking about one particular government, but about Ottawa in general. Regardless of whether we are Liberal or Conservative—what the Liberals do will be criticized by the other side and we will criticize what the Conservatives do—we have the habit of thinking that we know what is best for the people north of the sixtieth parallel. The people there are not accustomed to doing things the way we do. They have been living there for thousands of years and, as was eloquently pointed out by my colleague from the Northwest Territories, Senator Adams, a couple of weeks ago, they have been very successful at doing things their way. However, we think we can show them a better way. So we develop our energy policy and tell the oil companies, "Get up north, spend your money there, and we will let you write the whole thing off. All we ask is that you make sure that the native people are involved." To the credit of the oil companies, they have done that. They have helped educate native people and teach them technology that was required to make the people a part of the industries of developing, producing and finding oil and gas north of the sixtieth parallel. Here we go. They are now in the transition of changing their lifestyle, albeit reluctantly, but we told them that it was a good idea, so they are going ahead and doing it.

Then what do we do? Just as they get nicely into this transition and have abandoned the other activities they had been carrying on, we suddenly pull the rug right out from under them. That is exactly what we have done. We have totally devastated that area. We have pulled the rug completely out from under them. There is not one oil rig working north of the sixtieth parallel right now. Areas like Tuktoyaktuk are dead. There is nothing going on.

I do not wish to use this occasion to say that the PGRT should have been replaced or not replaced. All I want to say is that in dealing with this type of issue, surely we are intelligent enough and considerate enough to put something else in place. Surely we can take a look at the very people we are dealing with and say to them, "Trust us. Try this and we will take you along with us." If we change our minds, why can we not at least treat them decently and do something else for them? I do not think that now we are doing anything else for the north. I think we should, and I think that I had better stop now because I have said enough on the subject.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, may I inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have nothing further to add to the comments of Senator Frith and Senator Lucier. I urge the passage of this bill. As I indicated in my comments, it has received pre-study and been reported without amendment.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-16, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Bill read first time.

[Senator Lucier.]

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(f), I move that the bill be now read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, Bill C-16 is very brief. It contains only three clauses, including the clause designating the effective date, so that as far as the substance of the bill is concerned there are only two clauses.

The purpose of the first clause is to extend for one year the application of the provision by which the minimum number of weeks of insurable employment required to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits may vary from ten to fourteen weeks, depending on regional conditions. Without this extension, the minimum period would automatically be set at 14 weeks for all regions throughout the country, as of January 4, 1987. The result would be that 200,000 recipients would be deprived of their benefits in the coming year.

Actually, this particular provision, which allows for regional conditions by providing for a variable entrance minimum from ten to fourteen weeks, has already been in effect for nine years, and I believe 1987 will make that ten. It would seem that the reasons for introducing this provision are still valid and, I think, justify extending for one more year a provision that, I repeat, takes into consideration the unemployment situations in various regions across the country.

So much for clause 1 of the bill.

The purpose of clause 2 is to freeze the employee's premium rate at its present level of $2.35 per $100 of insurable earnings for 1987. Similarly, the employer's premium rate will be maintained at $3.29 per $100 for 1987. This provision is intended to remove the financial burden on employers, and especially small businesses, a burden that would otherwise slow down job creation and the current economic renewal process.

I may add that in any case, these premium levels provide the government with a surplus that is sufficient to reduce substantially the present cumulative deficit, which was also one of the effects of previous legislation.

That was the substance of the two clauses and, in fact, of the entire bill. Basically, as far as these aspects are concerned, the bill extends the status quo in 1986 for another year.

This does not prejudice in any way what may transpire from the study and reports submitted recently to the government, including the Forget report.

In fact, when tabling the report, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced that the government would make its position known sometime in May 1987. This is another reason, I should think, to extend for another year the system now in place concerning the two points raised in the bill.

To conclude, honourable senators, I would add that the Senate referred the subject-matter of this bill to the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. Earlier today I tabled the report of the committee which, as a result of explanations by Employment and Immigration Commission senior officials, recommends that the Senate favourably consider this bill once it has been reported. The time has come to make a decision on the recommendation of the committee. I hope we will proceed expeditiously to adopt this bill.

Hon. Yvette Rousseau: Honourable senators, Bill C-16 now under consideration has to do with one of our most important social programs, unemployment insurance.

The question of unemployment insurance therefore calls for utmost prudence in our approach, if only because Canadian workers consider that it is really important. When it introduced Bill C-16, the government wanted to reassure the Canadian public by extending for one year the variable eligibility standard and maintaining the present rates of unemployment insurance premiums. Even though the government does not seem prepared to endorse the more radical recommendations of the Forget report, the opposition parties and pressure groups do not intend to be less vigilant and be taken in by these pacifying gestures. Older workers who have been denied unemployment insurance benefits since January 5, 1986 know only too well that the Prime Minister, referring to the Forget report in the House of Commons last October 15, again repeated that "we are not undertaking the review with an objective of reducing federal contributions to the unemployed".

In that sense, if history repeats itself, Canadians can only be wary of a government which is going to wait until May 1987 before announcing its position on the contents of the Forget report and which, since September 1984, did not hesitate one moment before attempting to dismantle our social programs. First and foremost the legislators and the government should remember that, however commendable an unemployment insurance reform might be from certain viewpoints, it must not be considered solely in a context of impersonal statistics. We must always keep in mind that some individuals depend directly on the amendments which will be made to the unemployment insurance system, and that such decisions must not be prompted only by a desire to increase the administrative efficiency of such a basic program.

This is why it seems to me that, despite its positive points, the Forget report and the government approach to the unemployment insurance system lack compassion for Canadians and cause them worry.

Honourable senators, I take this opportunity to draw your attention to one of the negative chapters of the Forget report entitled "Annualization".

Should the government decide to implement the Forget report as it relates to part-time workers, to maternity and sick leave, and with respect to older workers, it should completely ignore the unemployment insurance benefit annualization system as proposed in the Forget report.

Right now unemployment insurance benefits are calculated on the basis of earnings during the preceding 10 to 20 weeks. The worker involved is also entitled to get benefits earlier if the unemployment rate in the region where he works is particularly high. If annualization were to become a fact, the unemployed worker would receive weekly benefits based on earnings in the preceding 52 weeks.

A person who became unemployed during those 52 weeks would therefore be entitled to lower average benefits than someone who had worked all year. One can easily imagine the tragic consequences of such a system for seasonal and part-time workers. Fishermen in the Maritimes and construction workers, for instance, would be especially affected.

This makes it easier to understand the reservations expressed by Minister Crosbie, who realized what would happen in Newfoundland under annualization. Women would also be affected by the report, since they hold 72 per cent of part-time jobs across the country, according to the statistics for October 1986.

By adopting this system, the government would save about $3 billion annually. On average, recipients would receive 30 per cent less in benefits per week. The Forget report recommends that the money thus saved should be used by the federal and provincial governments to set up social programs for people who are seeking employment.

The effect of annualization would be mainly to help people who work on a more regular basis, instead of helping those who are having trouble entering the labour market. The considerable negative impact that annualization would have on the labour force explains the dissent that arose within the Forget Commission. It also explains Minister Bouchard's restraint, when he stated upon tabling the report that the government was not endorsing any recommendations and that the document would be used as reference for future reform.

It is therefore to be hoped that the government will consider the points I raised earlier, when it announces its intentions to the Canadian people, so as to avoid doing irreparable harm by dismantling the social benefits of workers and people on low incomes generally, who have so often been made to suffer the consequences of budgetary cutbacks.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Will honourable senators allow me to put a question to Senator Tremblay?

Senator Tremblay: Very well.

Senator Corbin: Could Senator Tremblay tell me whether this bill was adopted unanimously in the House of Commons?

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, I watched the proceedings on television, and I think the bill was adopted unanimously on third reading, to the extent that apparently no objections were formulated.

To answer the speaker's question, the bill was not adopted by a majority, from what I heard on television. I'm not absolutely sure, since we do not always know what is happening from what we see on the screen.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, what Senator Tremblay has said confirms the difficulty in which some of us find ourselves. This bill has come to us in some haste.

For my part, I am very interested in this subject since, during my 16 years in the House of Commons, I spent a lot of time defending our unemployment insurance system with several of my colleagues from the poorer provinces.

I would have liked to look at all that has been said in the other place before making up my mind about this bill.

In any case, I do not plan to delay its adoption unduly. I know that the government has said in the past few weeks that it wanted some time to examine all the implications and positive impact of the Forget report on the unemployment insurance system.

What I basically want to say is that I shall not oppose passage of this bill. I support the comments made a short while ago by our colleague, Senator Rousseau. I shall also set aside my doubts until the government makes a definite announcement of the direction it will be giving to the Unemployment Insurance Plan beginning next May or June.

I repeat that the Forget report in itself and the intentions of the government can have a lot of impact on the workers of the eastern provinces. It is mostly on their behalf that I am concerned. Other senators can defend their own regions if they wish to do so.

I have often spoken up for the system in the past, and the most important thing to remember in my opinion is that, if the system is not as generous as it has been in the past in the case of seasonal workers in the non-industrialized regions of the country, this will impose an unacceptably heavy burden on provincial treasuries which are already hardly pressed by the shortfall of provincial taxes.

Having said that, I will add nothing. I will undoubtedly have comments to make later on, when we know definitely the government's intention concerning this.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you that if Senator Tremblay speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, I will be brief. I fully appreciate the concerns expressed by Senator Rousseau and Senator Corbin with respect to the importance and complexity of the whole unemployment insurance program. As far as that is concerned, I think we all share the same sentiment.

As a result of the publication of the Forget report, it is precisely because we are dealing, among other things, with a question which has to be fully explored that the government had decided to take the time required—as you have pointed out, Senator Corbin, I believe—to look into the problems as raised by the Forget report and as we might also imagine they present themselves.

[Senator Tremblay.]

The purpose of this bill is to maintain the status quo for another year on the two points it deals with. If we do not take specific action to maintain, for example, the principle whereby the time required to be eligible for unemployment insurance may vary from one region to the next, we will automatically end up with a situation where the period will be the same all across Canada, 14 weeks. When we suggest 10 weeks in certain regions, particularly the Atlantic region where unemployment is higher, we are helping a considerable number of recipients. Again I refer to the figures I mentioned earlier which came from data supplied by Employment and Immigration Commission senior officials. Those are impressive figures; they said 200,000 recipients would be affected if we failed to act on the point I have just raised.

I wish Senator Rousseau and Senator Corbin had also mentioned the point I just raised because their analysis does seem to support the government position, which is to maintain the status quo for another year to have time to reflect upon this matter. Their comments will undoubtedly be cause for reflection, and it is with respect to the Forget report that they will be most valid.

About the bill, I think their remarks went beyond the scope of the measure.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have nothing else before us at the moment. The Immigration Bill which I talked about a little while ago is currently being processed in the other place. I expect we will have it shortly. Rather than sit and wait, perhaps we should adjourn for half an hour and then we could deal with the two bills we are expecting at the same time. If that is agreeable to the Senate, that is what I would suggest.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-34, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, this is a bill which is designed to provide funding for a revolving fund which government has made available for some time to finance travel and transportation for new Canadians, for people who are coming to this country. Apparently it has been a very useful program. It was established many years ago, in 1951, and at that time the loan had a total funding of about $3 million. The amount of money has been increased many times since then and at present it is a $60 million fund, but it is not adequate to provide for the ongoing immigration transportation program. A shortfall has resulted from the large amount lent to the 60,000 Vietnamese refugees admitted in the early 1980s. A large percentage of this money remains due because a huge sum is being repaid at a very slow rate, due mainly to the employment difficulties encountered by this group of refugees.

Since 1951 the Canadian government has lent $177.5 million to immigrants and refugees. Of this amount, the government has had to write off only $4.4 million, or 2.48 per cent—which is an astoundingly small amount of money to have outstanding. The loans are subject to recovery at a rate of interest established each January 1 by the Minister of Finance. The 1986 rate is 9.175 per cent. Refugees and members of designated classes are exempt from the interest charges. The transportation loan is established to aid in the reunification of families, spouses and dependent children, displaced persons and persons whose occupational skills are in demand in Canada.

If we do not pass this bill today, I am told that it will affect many Canadian immigrant service organizations who have been preparing for the arrival of refugees. A great number of the organizations are involved with the successful settlement of refugees in Canada and they have committed personnel and funds based on our projected refugee flow. If the bill is not passed before the end of the calendar year, it may be necessary to cut back on the refugee flow to Canada. This will make it difficult for us to meet our 1987 refugee target of 12,000. It was also agreed with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration that commencing in January Canada would take in 1,200 refugees per month. These plans will be disrupted and we will be required to curtail this orderly movement of refugees if this legislation is not passed. This will mean that refugees who are preparing to move into Canada will remain in a refugee camp for several months.

Honourable senators, that is a very simple explanation of the fund and why extra funding is needed. I am pleased to say that the Minister of State for Immigration, Mr. Gerry Weiner, is available and will join us in Committee of the Whole to answer any questions that honourable senators might have on this particular piece of legislation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is apparent that we are being asked to waive all the customary notices and deal with this bill in one sitting. In fact, the bill itself was introduced yesterday in the House of Commons—the day before the last day of the sitting before the Christmas break. I will come back to that point later.

With respect to the substance of the bill, there certainly is no difficulty, as far as I am concerned, in increasing the aggregate limit of the loans which are made available to the classes of immigrants who require this particular assistance. As the deputy leader has said, the program has worked well. It has facilitated family reunification and it has assisted in the movement of refugees to Canada.

The bill itself seeks to increase the aggregate limit on loans to immigrants from $60 million to $90 million. The deputy leader has told us that unless the bill is passed and Royal Assent given before the end of the calendar year, before the end of December, the orderly flow of refugees will be impeded and that, indeed, refugees will be forced to spend several additional months in refugee camps. Of course no one wants that to happen. We all want Canada to live up to its commitment of admitting 12,000 refugees a year, and we want it undertaken on an orderly basis, which means the admission of 1,200 per month. All of that is acceptable. What is not so acceptable is the late realization on the part of the government that urgent action was necessary. Why is it that only on December 18 was it realized that it was urgent to have this bill passed and made law before the end of December? That certainly is not good public administration and it is certainly not good parliamentary practice. Maybe in a case of this kind, when the merits are so obvious, one ought not to raise these questions, but I think they must be raised, because one is left wondering who was asleep at the switch. Were the officials unaware until a few days ago that unless additional funds were made available the refugee flow would be halted and that refugees would be left in the refugee camps? Why did they wait that long? Or was the minister informed and did not take the action to bring the bill forward? Was it stalled in the legislative committee of the cabinet, or did the Deputy Prime Minister, as Leader of the Government in the House of Commons, just not bother? The result is that the bill was passed through all stages in the House of Commons after very little debate and, presumably, the line of argument would be: Why should the Senate bother examining the bill if it has received quick passage by the House of Commons?

Honourable senators, I do not intend to extend my remarks much longer except to say that we will be asking some of these questions of the minister. We will also be asking how much money is in the fund. If the aggregate limit is being raised from $60 million to $90 million, one would assume that the fund is empty and that there is nothing in it to finance a flow of refugees for a month or two or to help the refugees, in the number of 1,200, for the month of January 1987.

With these misgivings and reservations, we certainly will give passage to the bill. We do not want to be haunted over the Christmas recess or have our consciences irked by the knowledge that we have forced several thousands of refugees to stay in camps longer than necessary. I think that would be undesirable, but I hope that the minister will have some good explanations. Perhaps he should not try to defend the indefensible. If there has been a goof, perhaps it should be admitted and we will get out of here much faster.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody:—it is pleasant, indeed, to have touched that mainstream of kindness and generosity that the honourable Leader of the Opposition is so well known for. I know only too well that there was no question of his denying the refugees their opportunity to get to Canada as quickly as possible.

With regard to the suddenness of the arrival of the bill, I am told that this bill was part of a major restructuring of the Immigration Act and they had hoped to have the entire bill ready for this session, but that was not possible. Therefore, they had to proceed with this particular amendment because of its urgency.

In any event, I will not elaborate on that. I will leave the minister to answer Senator MacEachen's concerns when we go into Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole, and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Gerry Weiner, Minister of State (Immigration), was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, Mr. Minister, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-34, an act to amend the Immigration Act.

Do you have an opening statement to make, Mr. Minister?

The Honourable Gerry Weiner, Minister of State (Immigration): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Comments have been clearly set forth on how useful and important a process it is to continue to be helpful to refugees and their families and to immigrants.

The fund will be almost depleted—it is now in the process of being depleted—by the end of this calendar year. If we did not put the additional $30 million into the fund, it would mean that there might be a one-, two- or three-month delay in having refugees who have fear of persecution and fear for their lives come to this country. We would not want them to be delayed by a lack of funds for the trip here. We would certainly want to unite families as quickly as possible.

I am delighted to have an opportunity to meet with you this afternoon to be able, I hope, to clarify some of the matters on your minds.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wish to welcome the minister to the Committee of the Whole in the Senate and tell him that we appreciate his willingness to appear and to explain to us some of the concerns which we have about the late arrival of this bill.

None of us wishes to oppose the substance of the bill. We understand the good work that has been accomplished by making available the funds for the movement of refugees and for the unification of families. But the bill was introduced for the first time in the House of Commons yesterday. It arrived here only a few minutes ago. We have been asked to waive all the normal parliamentary rules of notice and to give the bill first, second and third readings and Royal Assent in an hour.

We are prepared to do that, because none of us wishes to have on his conscience the spectre of 1,200 refugees kept a moment longer than necessary in refugee camps.

We have been told that the objective is to bring 1,200 refugees into Canada in the month of January 1987, and if we do not provide the money they will not be able to come. The minister has mentioned one month, two months or perhaps three months. My simple question is: Why the late realization? Was it a goof in the public service? Did they wake up on Tuesday of this week to the fact that they had run out of money and rush to the minister saying that they needed a bill? Did the minister know about it and bring in a bill weeks ago to the cabinet only to have it sit there? I would like to know what happened.

I would be much happier to have someone admit that it was a goof rather than go into the intricate explanations which will not be convincing in light of the fact that this bill arrived in the House of Commons yesterday. This bill is a serious matter and we are asked to pass it within a few moments.

I should like to move to a second point which relates to the amount in the fund at the present time. The bill increases the aggregate limit from $60 million to $90 million, an additional $30 million. So, presumably the fund must be virtually empty. I would like to know how much there is in the fund and how much you estimate you will spend in January and February. Those are my questions, honourable senators.

Mr. Weiner: As at November 30 we had used some $57 million of the $60 million. I was not apprised of the situation as early as I might have wished. However, there were some important reasons for this. First, amendments to the Immigration Act involve important processes and are not undertaken lightly. In fact, we have not opened the act for many years. We are in the process of studying a new refugee determination process, and we had hoped that the Transportation Loan Fund could be put through at the same time. However, senators are no doubt aware that the cabinet decision is now undergoing some review, and the refugee determination process will now be brought forward in the very near future. Therefore, there is need to bring this forward immediately.

Why the delay in payment? A good deal of the fund was expended, particularly to look after the boat people during the period between 1979 and 1982. They have been a little slower in repayment than one might have expected, but they have been faced with some higher levels of unemployment. We are quite generous in the payment schedule that we allow refugees. We know that the payments come back to us at the rate of almost 98 per cent. We recognize that one of the most joyous events for a refugee or an immigrant—the status symbol, the showing that he has succeeded—is to be able to repay the payment from the Transportation Loan Fund.

So while we admit that the $60 million has almost gone and that we have to add another $30 million in order that that very effective program can continue, I would indicate that certainly the officials should have been able to bring the bill forward somewhat earlier this month. However, knowing the desperate need and the importance of putting it through before the end of this calendar year, I would ask your forbearance and allow the fund to continue so that the program in January will be as active as it has been throughout the rest of 1986.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I understand what the minister has said, but I would like to ask one or two further questions. The first is: When did the government decide that it could not bring in the immigration bill—the total package? Presumably the intention had been to include this additional provision in an overall bill. It seems to me that any government would have realized at the end of November that it would be impossible to put through Parliament before Christmas an overall immigration bill. That is one of the most difficult bills. Anyone who has tackled, or observed, immigration bills going through the House of Commons will know that they take a long time. So even the most sanguine minister could never hope to have completed the bill in two or three weeks. I would say it would take two or three months. At the end of November $56 million had already been spent. Did the officials at that time not ring the alarm bells and say, “We are in trouble; let us get a bill forward.”?

At the end of November there was $4 million left in the fund. It is now December 19. Is it down to $2 million or $3 million? What is the cost of a month's refugee movement? We have been asked on a sympathetic basis to give speed to this bill or 1,200 refugees will languish in refugee camps for an additional month. That is pretty heavy stuff to lay upon Parliament at the last minute. Therefore, I think it is reasonable to ask how much money you have now and how much you expect to spend in the month of January.

Mr. Weiner: The program runs about $2 million a month. If one looks at my figure of $57 million at the end of November, one can further estimate further expenditure to the end of December of an initial $2 million. So the $6 million would be almost completely depleted. Those are averages. We must also reflect on the increased cost of bringing people here. We have had increases due to rates of inflation, which we know about. We can operate, on the average, on approximately $2 million per month.

You asked me about the refugee determination process and what we felt might have been taking place. You are well aware that on June 30 I was named Minister of State for Immigration, and at that time I was given the opportunity, with my staff and officials, to begin a review of a process which had been approved by cabinet in the spring of this year. We went in not knowing that it might be difficult; but that process has continued very successfully and, as I have indicated, we kept hoping that the complete bill could be brought forward sooner. There were some difficulties in the drafting phase, and apparently those have now almost been overcome. We look forward in the very near future, when the House resumes, to being able to bring forward a package which will include the refugee determination process and the amendments to the Immigration Act.

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, I thank you for the answers you have given. We wish to be sure that you understand, as I am sure you do—but we would like to know that your officials also understand—that we have a second-sober-thought function under our Constitution. We are to review bills and study them—and, as you know, we study them rather thoroughly in our committees. Normally, had this bill been presented to us, there would have been a second reading debate, and at that stage, as Senator MacEachen has said, it would have been quite clear that the bill has a great deal of merit. Many of the questions which we are now asking would have been raised in committee, to which the bill would have been referred after second reading. We want to be sure that you realize that you are asking us not to do those things which we consider to be our constitutional duty to do. We would rather that you did not do that to us in the future, and we want to be sure that you understand why we are asking for an explanation for the legislation being brought to us at the very last minute.

Mr. Weiner: I fully realize and sincerely appreciate what you are about to do—not only for myself and the process but for all of the refugees and immigrants who look forward hopefully to being able to come to our shores over the next few months. So I do appreciate it. The message will be sent very clearly to my officials. As I have indicated, I was not apprised of the situation as soon as I would have wished. It has been a rather interesting period. As Senator MacEachen has indicated, amendments to the Immigration Act are serious concerns and obviously the whole refugee determination process has occupied a lot of time and energy. We certainly understand and welcome your helpful remarks and we will make use of them in the future.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do not intend to proceed further. I thank the minister for his accommodating attitude. I do not want to prolong his presence or to try to punish him in any way; but it is quite clear that at some point the system broke down. It is not a sudden emergency. If it were an event which arose very quickly, then one could understand. But this is a matter that has been within the knowledge of officials of the government and the government itself for some time and, therefore, it is a clear example of the system's having broken down. I do not think it is too harsh to say that somebody has been asleep at the switch. If that slumber had not taken place, neither we nor the House of Commons would be asked to pass this bill in all its stages. It is not that we are, in a sense, inconvenienced or pained by what has happened. What is painful is the realization that such inefficiency exists within the apparatus of government. I hope that it will not occur too frequently in the future.

With those comments, honourable senators, I wish the refugees quick entry into Canada and a Merry Christmas to the minister.

Mr. Weiner: Thank you. In the spirit of the season, may I add my best wishes for a Merry Christmas and happy holiday season to the members of this house.

The Chairman: The Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

[Senator Weiner.]

Shall discussion on the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, on your behalf, I should like to thank the minister and his official for their attendance.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-34, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SALARIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-36, to amend the Salaries Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be read the second time now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators will recall that recently we had the somewhat unpleasant duty of passing Bill C-20, which dealt rather harshly with members of Parliament. One of the three items in that particular bill was an explanation of the formula and the percentage to be used for the indexing of salaries. This bill deals with the same thing, except that it deals with salaries of lieutenant governors. The Statistics Canada Industrial Composite Index is no longer used and has not been used since 1984. To replace it, they began to publish an Industrial Aggregate Index. However, the Industrial Composite Index was published for the two subsequent years in order to allow adjustments such as the one involved in this bill to be made. The salaries of lieutenant governors are based on the lesser of the indexes used, or 7 per cent. In order to make an adjustment in their salaries effective January 1, the technical amendment must be made or no increase will take effect.

Honourable senators, before I conclude, may I say how pleasing it is to see Honourable Senator Lapointe sitting in the Chair again. I realize that she will not be with us for a great deal longer, but it is indeed a great pleasure to see her occupy once again the position of Speaker of this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I understand that this particular bill was passed in the other place with the consensus of all the parties so that the measures can take effect before the new year. I commend this bill to you for second reading.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the deputy leader a question. Is the sole effect of the bill to change the indexing system? The deputy leader suggested that the bill was similar to the bill dealing with the salaries of members of Parliament and senators. I take it that it is not correct to say that lieutenant governors are being subjected to the same severity as members of Parliament and senators in the loss of income for 1986. Is it correct to say that their income is protected, but that the indexing system has changed?

While I am on my feet, I would like to ask one more question. Is it not true that the salaries of lieutenant governors are paid by the Government of Canada and not by provincial governments, as was suggested in the House of Commons a few moments ago by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council?

Senator Doody: To answer the honourable senator's last question first, it is absolutely correct that the salaries of lieutenant governors are paid by the federal government or, perhaps more precisely, by the taxpayer. Despite the impression given in the other place earlier today, that fact is true, remains true and will continue to be true.

The cost of the establishment of the lieutenant governor is carried by the provinces. The size of the establishment and so on is pretty much in the domain of provincial governments. I am pleased to say that our provincial government provides very elegant and substantial quarters for the lieutenant governor, and a good colleague of ours, the Honourable James McGrath, occupies that post. I am pleased to say that the answer to the first question will please the Honourable James McGrath just as much as it will please members of this chamber. The salaries of lieutenant governors are protected. The only similarity—and I thought I had pointed this out in my opening remarks—between this bill and Bill C-20 is that the Industrial Aggregate is changed. There were three parts in Bill C-20; there is only one part in this bill. They are not being dealt with harshly. Quite honestly, I think they are being dealt with generously.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the intervention of the Deputy Leader of the Government, the questions posed by the Leader of the Opposition and the answers given by the Deputy Leader of the Government leave very little else to be said. When I first heard about this bill, I thought that it would be a step towards the principle that misery loves company, but as the debate has disclosed, the only similarity between this bill and Bill C-20 is that the name of the formula will be changed to "the Industrial Aggregate" from "the Industrial Composite," so the mechanism that gives Their Honours what I am sure we all agree is a well deserved increase will be effective.

We have to see that this mechanism is triggered or, of course, there will be no formula upon which it could operate. It would be mean and miserable of us, simply because of Bill C-20, not to do this for Their Honours, so I think we should send them this Christmas greeting.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: I just wanted to say thank you, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on third reading, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether the salaries for all lieutenant governors, regardless of province, are the same or are there variations in them?

Senator Doody: It has been my understanding that they are the same. Certainly when I was working for the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance in Newfoundland they were all the same. I assume that no change has been made since that time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL
19 December 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Eric LeDain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 19th day of December, 1986, at 4.55 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—FUTURE RAIL MARKET PROSPECTS—STATUS OF REPORT—DELAYED ANSWER TABLED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I undertook today to try to get a reply to a question asked by Senator Graham on the situation at the Sydney Steel Company. I would like to table that answer.

I also notified Senator Frith that there are six questions currently unanswered.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Well done!

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Doody: Three of them were asked this week. The other three must be lulus—I have no idea where they are, but they are out there somewhere.

Senator Frith: It is your undertaking, I gather, to look into the lulus.

Senator Doody: It is my hope that we will have plenty of time to do that.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, when I put the adjournment motion today I intend to move that the Senate stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 3, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It seems that we have cleared up all of the legislation that has been sent to us. Three or four other bills are at the report stage in the other place, but I can detect no immediate urgency for the passage of those. If something else comes up, of course, we are subject to recall, and that is understood at all times.

Several committees have undertaken the pre-study of bills and others are working on reports and studies which they have undertaken. I know that the Foreign Affairs Committee is particularly concerned about establishing some time in which it could schedule meetings. There are witnesses to call from afar and the members of that committee need to be able to plan in advance. This will certainly give them an opportunity to do so.

I would like to take this opportunity to wish all of my colleagues in the Senate and, indeed, all of the staff and those people who have worked so well for us during this year a very Merry Christmas and a happy festive season. I hope they have a good year coming up, and I sincerely hope that I do, as well.

Having said that, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g):

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 3rd February, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5:45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gerald Eric LeDain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Railway Act (Bill C-4, Chapter 49, 1986)

An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (Bill C-20, Chapter 50, 1986)

An Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (Bill C-26, Chapter 51, 1986)

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act (Bill C-31, Chapter 52, 1986)

An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act (Bill C-32, Chapter 53, 1986)

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act (Bill C-14, Chapter 54, 1986)

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and a related Act (Bill C-23, Chapter 55, 1986)

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 (Bill C-16, Chapter 56, 1986)

An Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadair Limited and to provide for other matters in connection therewith (Bill C-25, Chapter 57, 1986)

An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act (Bill C-17, Chapter 58, 1986)

An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 (Bill C-34, Chapter 59, 1986)

An Act to amend the Salaries Act (Bill C-36, Chapter 60, 1986)

An Act to amend and repeal The Alliance Nationale Consolidated Act, 1945 (Bill S-3)

The Honourable Steven E. Paproski, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987 (Bill C-29, Chapter 61, 1986)

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987 (Bill C-35, Chapter 62, 1986)

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

• (1700)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS TRIBUTES TO HON. RENAUDE LAPOINTE, P.C.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just before the motion for adjournment, I should like to echo what Senator Doody said on two points. I would join him in wishing all of our colleagues a very merry Christmas and a nourishing and restful, if somewhat extended, holiday season.

I should also like to say how glad we are that Senator Lapointe presided over the end of this year's sittings. Senator Lapointe was Speaker when I was appointed to the Senate, so I share with everyone who has ever had anything to do with her a feeling of pride in having her as a colleague and as a friend.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, occasionally I find myself in agreement with Senator Frith, and this is one of those happy occasions.

We shall miss Senator Lapointe's presence. As one who often finds himself looking around for a quorum, I shall especially miss her because I always knew Senator Lapointe would be in her place, regardless of the hour.

Earlier today Senator Doody expressed the greetings of all of us on this side. I merely wish to say "Joyeux Noël" and move the adjournment of the Senate.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis: Just a word in French to wish everybody a Merry Christmas and a Very Happy New Year, and may you rejoice in Heaven after this land of sorrow. But, just the same, take your time.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 3, 1987, at 2:00 p.m.

APPENDIX*(See p. 390)UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971*REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE
ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-16

FRIDAY, December 19, 1986

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-16, intituled: "An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, November 4, 1986, examined and considered the said subject-matter.

On Tuesday, November 25th, 1986 the Committee heard from senior officials from the Commission of Employment and Immigration.

Your Committee now reports that it recommends that the Bill C-16, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY
Chairman

THE SENATE

THE LATE HONOURABLE LAZARUS PHILLIPS
THE LATE HONOURABLE SALTER A. HAYDEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it is with deep regret that I rise to record the death, since last we met, of two former senators who were among the most eminent Canadians ever to serve in this chamber. The Honourable Lazarus Phillips died on December 30, 1986. The Honourable Salter Hayden died on January 5, 1987.

Lazarus Phillips was already 72 years of age when he came to this chamber in 1968 with an illustrious career of public service to Canada behind him, a career that went back 50 years. A veteran of World War I, awarded the Order of the British Empire in 1946, he was an expert in constitutional, corporate and tax law, and senior partner in the distinguished Montreal law firm of Phillips & Vineberg.

[Translation]

Widely known as a philanthropist, a leading member of the Jewish community in Montreal, and a respected lawyer, Lazarus Phillips, in the course of his all too brief career as a senator, became well known as a parliamentarian and earned the respect of all his colleagues.

[English]

Lazarus Phillips gave the Senate the full benefit of his wide experience, his superb intellect and his gift of oratory, and when he left this chamber in 1970, after a short career of less than three years, it was said of him, and by no less an authority than Paul Martin:

... as I survey Parliament Hill, that at the present time there is no greater parliamentarian than Senator Phillips.

The short speech that Senator Phillips gave on the occasion of his departure from this chamber on October 7, 1970, was a masterful exposition of the responsibility of the Senate in our system.

Senator Hayden was named to the Senate by Prime Minister King on February 8, 1940, and he remained here for 43 years. For more than 30 years, he was chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Toward the end of his career, I had the honour of serving under his chairmanship on that committee. In his late eighties, he was still a formidable advocate, thorough, incisive and persuasive. I well recall during my first month in this chamber sitting with my then seat-mate, Robert de Cotret, the two of us marvelling at how Senator Hayden could speak in this chamber for 40 minutes, without a note, on the background and implications of a number of what seemed to us to be very complex provisions of Canadian tax law. I was to observe in the next few years that that was by no means an uncommon occurrence in this chamber with Senator Hayden.

One of the accomplishments of which Senator Hayden was proudest was the introduction of the pre-study procedure in this place. Under the so-called "Hayden formula," the Senate could now study House of Commons legislation when it was tabled in the other place instead of waiting until it passed the Commons. Some years ago members of the Senate commissioned a portrait of Senator Hayden, which now hangs in our Reading Room, a mark of the respect and admiration of his colleagues. After his retirement from the Senate, he continued as a senior partner in McCarthy & McCarthy, one of Canada's foremost law firms.

He was named an Officer of the Order of Canada in December of last year.

Senator Hayden served in this chamber for more than 43 years; Senator Phillips for less than three years. While it is with much sadness that we record their passing, it is also with great pride that we recall their considerable contributions to this place, to the parliamentary process and to our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, like Senator Murray, I regret the necessity of rising on this occasion to mark the passing of two former distinguished members of this chamber. I certainly join with Senator Murray in paying deserved tribute to their memory. It is not my intention to cover the detailed ground covered by Senator Murray, as he has outlined for us the notable career of each of these persons.

I had the good fortune to know each of them and I can certainly concur with Senator Murray in his elaboration of the impacts they made on the parliamentary system in Canada.

When Senator Phillips left the Senate, as Senator Murray pointed out, a number of his colleagues paid tribute to his work, one of those being Senator Croll, who is present with us this afternoon. I want to quote briefly from what Senator Croll said at that time:

No senator here... in so short a time has endeared himself so completely to his colleagues and made so great a contribution to the Senate and his beloved country as has Laz Phillips.

He went on to comment on Senator Phillips' "special knowledge of the law, constitutional, corporate and tax, and his personal qualities of loyalty, integrity and above all, compassion." I am sure that those words spoken at that time are still relevant today.

As Senator Murray pointed out, Senator Hayden had a very long career in the Canadian Senate, having been appointed many years ago by the late Mr. King. Obviously, Senator Hayden's work on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce constitutes a notable landmark in parliamentary history. The committee, under his leadership, attracted a great deal of attention, was respected and, indeed, became the ornament, in a sense, of the Senate itself. That same tradition, so well entrenched by Senator Hayden, has been continued by his successors.

I had occasion, as a minister, to deal with Senator Hayden. I recall in particular while I was Minister of Finance observing how patiently Senator Hayden dealt with one of the most complicated tax bills that I am sure ever passed through his hands. He was patient on that occasion and patient on many other occasions, although his patience was not a substitute for clarity of mind and detailed knowledge which he possessed with respect to the intricacies of the matters on his legislative agenda.

So, honourable senators, I add in conclusion that the tributes paid by Senator Murray call to mind the careers of two former members of this chamber and serve as a reminder to us that there can be carried out in the Senate significant work by each of us, even though the exact significance of that work may not be realized at the moment.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I thoroughly agree and concur with what has been said about Senator Hayden and Senator Phillips.

Senator Lazarus Phillips was my friend for 56 years. He was a Talmudic student. He loved the Book. He was a descendant of a long line of eminent rabbis. His religion was very important to him.

His profession was law. But more than that, he was a lawyer's lawyer, a paragon of efficiency, a wizard in the tax and corporate law field.

He represented notable causes and important corporate interests, and had a profound influence on the economic growth of our country. He involved himself in charitable institutions, both Jewish and non-Jewish, and he always gave and gave well.

In the short time that he was here, he won our admiration, confidence and respect—and he won it on both sides of the chamber. He endeared himself completely.

I can say of him that he was a wise and just man. During his lifetime many honours came to him: from McGill University, B.C.L. 1918, honorary LL.D., 1965; honorary Fellow of the Society of Fellows of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1972; honorary LL.D. of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1978; honorary LL.D., Yeshiva University, New York, 1979; honorary Fellow and honorary LL.D., Bar-Ilan University, 1979.

He sat on the boards of many organizations: Inter-City Papers, Trizec Corporation, Steinberg's Ltd., Great Universal Stores of Canada Ltd. and Domco Ltd. He was a member of the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts and the Royal Empire Society. He was a former president of Jewish Parochial Schools in Montreal and an honorary vice-president of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

In his first speech in the Senate in 1968, he said:

I come, honourable senators, from an ancient and proud race, and I practise a religion which has not been unconnected with the spread of civilization on this planet. I should like to feel that when the Right Honourable Lester Pearson recommended my appointment to this chamber he had in mind giving recognition to the ethnic group to which I belong. I hope honourable senators will agree with me that in the development of our beloved Canada this group has contributed its fair share to the country's communal, political, economic, cultural and intellectual activities.

Moreover, in that speech he pointed out the objectives to be attained. The first priority was to reduce poverty and bring about a higher standard of living. There are many other instances of his contributions, but I will not recount them here.

Not only was Laz Phillips a great lawyer, he was also an outstanding parliamentarian. As has been said, in his short two-year period, in a most remarkable way, he gathered to himself a reputation which has taken many men and women many years to acquire. He was a man who had a deep and abiding dedication to Canada. He had a strong affection for and infatuation with the State of Israel. We shall miss him.

Hon. Leo E. Kolber: Honourable senators, I do not aspire to the eloquence of the preceding speakers, but I could not let the occasion pass without saying one or two words about my late dear friend, Lazarus Phillips. I knew him I think in a way in which the preceding speakers perhaps did not. He and I were associated for a little over 30 years as co-trustees of the Bronfman Trust, amongst other things, and I can say that he certainly was one of my mentors in life.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORTS OF THE COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the following: reports of the Commissioner of Official languages submitted to the Governor in Council pursuant to section 34(2) of the Official Languages Act, Chapter O-2, R.S.C. 1970, concerning CN and VIA Rail, dated December 1986, National Defence, dated January 1987, and, finally, Anglophone Participation in the Federal Public Service in Québec, dated January 1987.—Sessional Paper No. 332-177.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

Thursday, December 18, 1986

ORDERED,—That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours of the following order adopted by the House:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, and for the remainder of the present Session, when a bill has received second reading and has been referred to a legislative committee, the Striking Committee shall prepare and report, not later than the following Thursday, a list of members to compose the legislative committee which shall consist of not more than thirty (30) Members. Upon presentation of such a report of the Striking Committee, the same shall be deemed adopted and the Speaker shall appoint a Chairman to the said legislative committee, pursuant to Standing Order 93(2).

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 93(6), the Government House Leader shall, after consultation with the House Leaders of the other parties, establish the order in which the several legislative committees shall consider bills, on the basis that no legislative committee shall sit at the same time that another legislative committee is sitting on a bill emanating from or principally affecting the same department or agency;

That, notwithstanding Standing Orders 92(2) and 96(1), Standing and Standing Joint Committees shall not sit at the same time as a legislative committee on a bill emanating from or principally affecting the same department or agency;

That legislative committees sitting during periods coinciding with the hours of sitting of the House, shall have priority over Standing, Standing Joint and Special Committees; and

That priority shall be given to Standing, Standing Joint and Special Committees in periods when the House stands adjourned, according to the schedule of meetings as established, from time to time, by the Chief Government Whip, after consultation with the other parties.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION—FISH ALLOCATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask questions respecting the recently concluded agreement between Canada and France on fisheries and boundaries.

Today the Premier of Newfoundland stated at a press conference that his government had rejected the agreement and that he was calling upon the Government of Canada to withdraw entirely from the agreement.

I should like to know what happened to the process of consultation which had been a characteristic of fisheries matters and which had been one of the principal objectives of the new, then fresh, government of two and a half years ago.

Senator Perrault: It isn't fresh any more!

Senator MacEachen: What happened to that spirit of consultation which, obviously, was not observed and which now finds the Premier of Newfoundland asking the Government of Canada to withdraw from the agreement, and finds the Premier of Nova Scotia almost equally explosive in his denunciation of this bad deal for the Atlantic provinces? What happened to federal-provincial consultation on this grave subject?

Senator Perrault: You forgot to telephone!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it is a fact, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, that the Government of Newfoundland and, indeed, the industry and the union were fully and actively involved in this matter right up until the Paris meeting at which the agreement was reached to negotiate the boundary dispute and fish quotas in the future.

That has happened. The Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister have expressed the government's regret to the Premier of Newfoundland, and it is the government's hope that when we resume negotiations with the French, the Government of Newfoundland, the industry and the union will see fit to resume the active role that they had played in this matter until now.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Premier of Newfoundland has not only attacked the process which, presumably, has been remedied by the apology of the government and its resolve to do better in the future; he has equally attacked the substance and claims, among other things, that the new commitment for allocation of northern cod is without precedent and threatens the livelihood of Newfoundland fishermen.

I am really asking for some information, because I don't understand what led the Government of Canada to enter into this agreement. Perhaps the Leader of the Government can help me, because all the French have agreed to do is discuss an arbitration. That is all they have agreed to. They have agreed to come to the table to discuss the terms of reference and to allow a group of judges to handle the arbitration.

Senator Perrault: There is something fishy about the whole thing!

Senator MacEachen: The Canadian government, in return for that, has given, for the first time, a commitment that for the years 1988 onward there will be an allocation of northern cod. It has also given a fresh allocation of fish in northern Labrador, and it has increased the allocation of fish in the Gulf to the vessels from Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Senator Perrault: Unbelievable!

Senator MacEachen: There are three big "sweeteners" there, and one of them is a jawbreaker for the Premier of Newfoundland, namely, the commitment to allocate northern cod.

Why did the government give so much for so little?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I disagree with the interpretation that is being placed on the agreement by the Leader of the Opposition. The agreement was to a process of negotiation, and the reason for entering into that agreement must be clear to the honourable senator whose government negotiated the 1972 treaty with France. Unless some process was agreed to, we would have had to go back to the 1972 conditions, with all of the risks that they imply for the fishery in Atlantic Canada.

Officials from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and officials from the Department of External Affairs will be meeting with Premier Peckford in the next day or so, as will the Minister of Transport, Newfoundland's representative in the federal cabinet. I hope that these discussions will lead to a better understanding of what is involved in this agreement and to a better understanding of the policy of the Government of Canada.

Senator MacEachen: I hope they will, because I have been trying to understand why the negotiators in Paris gave away a pre-commitment to allocate northern cod, why they gave a new, fresh allocation in northern Labrador and why they increased the allocation in Saint Pierre and Miquelon while the French are still, in the words of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, blatantly overfishing in the disputed area, taking, according to the minister, 20,000 tonnes of fish a year.

In light of all that we gave in the way of new allocations, why did we not secure from the French a commitment to desist from overfishing in the disputed area, which the Premier of Newfoundland has said is threatening the livelihood of the fishermen of that province?

Why did the Government of Canada turn a blind eye to overfishing in that huge amount, which will probably grow this year, and, at the same time, give this additional bonanza—well, I will not say “bonanza”; perhaps that is excessive—why did it give to the French these additional allocations and the pre-commitment to allocate northern cod for a five-year period?

Nobody in Newfoundland can understand that; I cannot understand that. Why has the Leader of the Government said, “Well, we had a fisheries agreement in 1972.” There is nothing in any of the previous exchanges of notes that obligated the Government of Canada to do any of the things it did in the recent agreement. I say if there are to be discussions in Newfoundland with the Premier, that is fine, but can we get some light on what seems to be a give-away on the part of Canada with nothing in return except a commitment by the French to go to the table and walk away, if they wish—

• (1440)

Senator Perrault: And just talk.

Senator MacEachen: —and at the same time continue their flagrant overfishing in the disputed area.

Senator Perrault: Plundering; plundering.

Senator MacEachen: They have received everything.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator talks about pre-commitments on the part of Canada. What is a pre-commitment? The commitment that we have made is the commitment that the French have made. We have committed ourselves to a process of negotiation that we trust will lead to arbitration of the boundary dispute—

Senator Perrault: What did they give?

Senator Murray: —that is the commitment we have made.

The treaty in 1972, to which I referred earlier, gave the French unquantified but perpetual fishing rights in Canada's 200-mile zone. That treaty was signed by the government of which my honourable friend was a member. Canada has always taken the position that that means that the French can fish where we let them fish, but the French have taken the position that that means that they can fish anywhere within the 200-mile limit. If we fail to negotiate this boundary dispute and the related matters, we will find ourselves back with the 1972 treaty. The matter of the treaty, the 200-mile limit and the rights of the French within that 200-mile limit will go to international arbitration, which might then start setting quotas for the French in that area. This was an agreement to negotiate an end to a boundary dispute, a dispute which has to be ended in the interests of Canada and of the Atlantic fishery.

If the Leader of the Opposition wants to debate the matter, he can launch a debate or, indeed, he can have the whole matter go to the Fisheries Committee, if he wants, and we will have the appropriate officials and ministers there to discuss it in detail; but I am telling the honourable senator that this deal ended 12 rounds of negotiations that go back to 1967—

Senator Frith: Ended?

Senator Murray: —and up until now had produced nothing but failure.

Senator Frith: How could it have ended? You just agreed to start negotiating it.

Senator MacEachen: What have you produced?

Senator Frith: An agreement to negotiate.

Senator MacEachen: Nothing. The honourable leader referred to the history—and there is a fishing history—between Canada and France. France has had traditional fishing rights—they were protected by treaty and otherwise—and they have to be dealt with by any Canadian government; that is not in dispute. The minister took exception to the statement I made that there was a pre-commitment. There is a pre-commitment.

The minister in his statement, which was released on January 27, entitled “Canada and France Agree On Steps To Settle Maritime Boundary Dispute” states, in part: “Mr. Siddon also referred to an undertaking given by Canada to include some 2J+3KL cod,”—that is northern cod—“in the French quotas to be negotiated for 1988 to 1991.”

The Government of Canada has agreed in advance that it will give some northern cod in that area to the French. That is a pre-commitment. That is what has infuriated the Government of Newfoundland, namely, that there has been a commitment by Canada to give an allocation for the northern cod and no commitment—

Senator Murray: If it goes to arbitration.

Senator MacEachen: It does not even make that qualification in the sentence; that may be the case. There has to be a fisheries agreement at some point, but it says "Mr. Siddon also referred to an undertaking given by Canada to include some 2J+3KL cod in the French quotas to be negotiated for 1988 to 1991."

If there are any quotas for those years for the French, there will have to be northern cod included in those quotas. That is what is killing this approach in Newfoundland. We have done that and we have said, "We will turn a blind eye to your blatant overfishing in the disputed area, which is threatening not only the stocks of fish but also the livelihood of Newfoundlanders," and France has made no commitment.

Senator Perrault: Shame!

Senator MacEachen: That is what it is. If I can be told that I am wrong in these conclusions, fine. I am looking for information. I am trying to read the papers—

Senator Perrault: So is the government.

Senator MacEachen: —to see what has happened. That is my interpretation; if I am wrong, let us hear it.

Senator Murray: What I am trying to tell the Leader of the Opposition is that all of the substantive issues remain to be negotiated.

Senator Frith: That's right.

Senator Perrault: Give away the fish.

Senator Murray: I am informed that without this agreement we would revert to the 1972 agreement, the implications of which would be that in the Gulf the French would demand—because the Gulf was part of the 1972 agreement—as a minimum, what they caught last year, namely, 3,500 tonnes; outside the disputed zone they would claim 17,000 tonnes of cod, mainly in the 2J+3KL area; second, they would act to protect their legal position in the disputed zone with unilateral enforcement measures—and we would be obliged to respond in kind; and third, if we do not move to negotiations and the French invoke the dispute settlement provisions of the 1972 treaty, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, it could well result in a tribunal awarding specific and quite substantial cod quotas to France in 2J+3KL. That is the reality of the situation and that is the position we were left with as a result of the history to which the honourable senator refers.

Senator MacEachen: I find it incredible that the minister is making the French case. We expect Canadian ministers to make the Canadian case.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: That is what he is saying.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the purpose of the agreement is to protect the fishery of Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland. Without the agreement, the consequences are as I have described them. If my honourable friend has any other information or, indeed, any other alternative to offer, let him do so; let him take advantage of some opportunity for debate to do so. Neither he nor any of the critics of this agreement have offered any alternative whatsoever.

Senator MacEachen: The Premier of Newfoundland has offered an alternative.

Senator Perrault: Yes; he certainly has.

Senator MacEachen: He has asked you to get out of the agreement because it is bad.

Senator Murray: He accepts what the consequences of that will be.

Senator MacEachen: The minister has said his objective is to protect the Canadian fishermen. If this is protection, let us have less of it!

RESOLUTION OF WEST COAST BOUNDARY WATERS DISPUTE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As all of us are aware, on a section of Canada's west coast we have a long-standing boundary waters dispute with the United States. Will the leader provide an assurance today that in the Conservative government's effort to entice or encourage the Americans to agree at some point in time to consider at least the possibility—however remote that possibility—of negotiating the issue, or in efforts to tempt them into taking into consideration or advisement the concept of negotiating or sitting down and submitting this dispute to a discussion or arbitration, that we will not turn over huge quantities of our west coast salmon stocks, as he has done with cod on the east coast? Will the leader also promise to have the Minister of Fisheries telephone Premier Vander Zalm when he, the Prime Minister, and Mr. Clark decide to make a deal with our American cousins?

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—UNANIMITY OF CABINET DECISION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question concerning fish. I understand the Premier of Nova Scotia said that Nova Scotia will lose about $200 million because of this deal; the Province of Prince Edward Island will lose millions of dollars because of this deal; and Newfoundland, they tell me, will be almost bankrupt because of this deal. The federal Minister of Transport from Newfoundland says that he did not know too much about it; yet the federal Minister of Fisheries says it was unanimous in the cabinet. Can the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations tell us if it was the unanimous decision of the cabinet and whether the minister from Newfoundland, the Minister of Transport, was talking through his hat?

• (1450)

in question were taken by the government. As for the preface to the statement of the honourable senator about enormous losses, of provinces going bankrupt, and so on, such statements are simply nonsense.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISH ALLOCATIONS—EFFECT ON NORTHERN COD STOCKS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I have a further question for the Leader of the Government. Why did we allow the federal government to license six freezer trawlers to come here from France and catch the fish before they got down to Prince Edward Island and the Gulf? Now we shall get no fish in Prince Edward Island. We had two Canadian freezer trawlers before, but now we have six French freezer trawlers coming in from continental France to catch our cod stocks.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think the honourable senator should take advantage of some early occasion to raise these matters with the appropriate officials or ministers in committee. I do not think that the honourable senator understands the agreement.

An Hon. Senator: Nor do you.

Senator Bonnell: Let me say to my good friend, the Leader of the Government, that he is 100 per cent right. I do not understand it, the Canadian people do not understand it, Newfoundlanders do not understand it, the Premier of Nova Scotia does not understand it, the Premier of Newfoundland does not understand it—and, I repeat, I do not understand it. The fishermen in my province do not understand it, the fishermen of Newfoundland do not understand it, the industry does not understand it. For gosh sakes, someone should get up and tell us what is going on. You gave away our lumber to the United States, you gave away our fish to France, and the next thing you will give away is our water.

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—UNANIMITY OF CABINET DECISION

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I have listened to the Leader of the Government in the Senate explain the rationale of this matter. I was tempted to say very little on this issue because I know that these boundary questions become very complex, particularly as lawyers endeavour to draw lines all over the place, which fish blithely ignore.

However, the fact is that he made the case for France, and, frankly, that worried me very much; and out of that worry comes one concern. Did the cabinet, wanting to buy peace with France and guarantee the success of the Francophonie summit, and so on, overrule the Minister of Fisheries—because there is one lesson that I learned as Minister of Fisheries over a number of years, and that is never to allow the linkage between your problem and problems which other ministers might have, including possibly the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister.

I should like the Leader of the Government to tell us whether, in fact, the Minister of Fisheries was overruled by his colleagues in the cabinet, who obviously were chasing other game.

Senator Frith: Or other fish.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT—U.S. SUBSIDIZED EXPORTS TO CHINA—EFFECT ON CANADIAN FARMERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, last Monday my wife and I heard on the radio that there was likely to be a sale of American wheat to China in the amount of one million tonnes at subsidized prices.

That announcement represented such a danger for the very existence of western grain farmers that Jean, who is president of Farm Women's Action, and I decided to do an unusual thing, namely, to picket or demonstrate outside the United States Embassy.

Before going there, we phoned the American ambassador to ask whether he might see us. He said that he wished to see us before we undertook the demonstration. I said that we were going there to demonstrate and that we would be prepared to see him afterwards.

Mr. Thomas Niles, the United States Ambassador, met with Jean and me for three-quarters of an hour when we protested against United States policy. It became crystal clear that it was fully the intention of the United States administration to proceed with the sale. As a matter of fact, Mr. Niles said it was to be announced in Washington that same day.

The result of the American policy has been to put the Canadian Wheat Board in jeopardy to the amount of $200 million. The reason for that loss is because the United States Treasury subsidized international prices and we had to compete. The Canadian farmer has been robbed of his final payment on high grade wheats—the highest grade having a surplus of approximately 30 cents per bushel.

It seems to me that the policy of the President of the United States is to play Santa Claus in China by offering cheap grain.

Senator Perrault: And Scrooge in Canada!

Senator Argue: When the President looks to Canada, he envisions himself as the United States marshal leading a posse on Canadian farms to deliver orders of foreclosure and eviction. There is collapse in Canadian agricultural communities at this time, precisely because, and only because, of the aggressive, unfair and unconscionable attack of the United States on Canadian grain markets. They can use the excuse of the EEC, but they are attacking the Canadian markets. China was not the market of the EEC; it was the market of Canada.

When will this government stand up to President Reagan? When will the government make some critical statements to them and ask them to cease and desist this kind of unfriendly action toward a country which has been an ally of the United States in many fights over many years? When is the government going to call on the President of the United States with strong representations that this sort of action should stop?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the government has been doing just that for some considerable time. There have been statements by various ministers, particularly the Minister of State for the Wheat Board, Mr. Mayer. But we have done even better than that. Because of the leadership of Mr. Clark, Ms. Carney and Mr. Hockin, who attended the preliminary discussions on GATT at Punta del Este, we have succeeded in getting these agricultural subsidy programs and related matters into a multilateral forum where they have not been for 40 years. That is what the Canadian government has done, and that, as the honourable senator must recognize, is the only road to a solution, not rhetoric from Ottawa.

Senator Argue: To my knowledge, there has been no strong statement issued by this government against the actions of the United States. When it comes to softwoods and other things, yes. I say this with great respect: When the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board stands up to discuss the question, he says that the problem is with the EEC and the United States—and that is not the way it is. Before the United States took this aggressive position, our prices were holding up. I ask the Leader of the Government: Do you realize just how very serious this whole matter is?

● (1500)

On January 22 the Canadian Wheat Board asking price out of Vancouver for high quality wheat was $196 a tonne. A year ago January 21 the price was $257 a tonne, which means that the price has dropped $1.60 per bushel. At the St. Lawrence Seaway ports, last year the price was $260 per tonne; this year it is $176 per tonne, and that works out to a drop of $2 per bushel.

Honourable senators, it was hell last year, it will be double hell this year and many farmers will not be able to survive. This government is getting ready to drop the initial price for wheat and other grain. Simply putting the matter before another forum for another general discussion is not good enough.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: If the Prime Minister of this country has any influence with the United States, he should be able to get them to renounce this ruinous policy. It does not help the U.S. farmer; it does not affect him; he gets $6 per bushel out of the U.S. Treasury. Every time there is a drop in the world price, Canada suffers, Canadian farmers suffer.

Senator Murray: Surely the senator is not suggesting that the insane subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community is unrelated to the trends he has described in terms of prices. Surely he is not suggesting that the fact that the world demand for grains has been almost stagnant since the early 1980s is not a factor. In addition, that countries that were once great importers of grain are becoming self-reliant. These are all conditions that the senator, as an experienced legislator and a former minister in charge of the Wheat Board, is well aware of.

We believe—and the international community that is affected believes—that our success in getting these issues into a multilateral forum for the first time since the Second World War is a very important step. It is the only way to achieve a solution. A solution will not come simply as a result of statements from the honourable senator or a minister of the Crown in Ottawa reminding the President of the United States or the ministers of the European Economic Community of the ruinous effects of their policies. They are speaking to their electors.

Senator Argue: I am greatly disappointed, if I may say so with respect, with the statement that has just been made. This shows the misconception of the government. Government ministers seem to think there is only a kind of fight between the United States and the EEC. That is not the position of the American authorities at all. They may be trying to make something of their attack against the EEC markets, but Canada's markets are the markets they attack. The Americans do not give any thought to whether the EEC is in a market or not. If they think they can get that market, they are going to try to get it through give-away prices, even if Canada is the main country involved. There are many examples of that.

If this were a sort of cozy little competition between the EEC and the United States, so be it. But the United States policy by subsidizing sales into our markets is closing down the agricultural industry in this country, and this government is doing nothing about it.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—SECURITY OF SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations regarding the federal-provincial conference on energy that was held last week. I have to say in advance that I have read as many of the press releases and, indeed, the press comments on that meeting as I could, and I find it difficult to comprehend from them exactly what is the position of the federal government; that is, whether or not it has a policy with respect to, at least, one important element of the energy sector, and that is security of supply. I also received a little pamphlet that was prepared by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, but from that, too, it is difficult to discern the position of the federal government with respect to security of supply.

What seems to have happened is that it was agreed that a task force be set up to come forward, three or four months down the road, with some proposals for doing a number of things. One of them is to reduce still further the reserves of energy, particularly natural gas, in Canada so as to shorten the supply. It was not a proposal, as I could see it, to add to the reserves that are there and to provide a policy framework within which that could happen.

Therefore, I ask the minister if he can tell us whether security of supply and something close to self-sufficiency is the policy of this government.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have read the same communiqués from the federal-provincial conference that the honourable senator has read. I will not, therefore, read them or place them on the record now. The working group has been appointed with a July 1 deadline. There is an agreement to continue with a cooperative approach to problem solving. They have taken the position, of course, that the reference should in no way impede or delay the conclusion of negotiations on various specific projects which will contribute to security of supply.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is not very comforting in view of the answer that I got from the minister just before we adjourned for Christmas on December 18. I asked him, for example, what assurance we have that the reduction in the PGRT was going to be used for further development, which was an undertaking that the government gave when it announced the relief in that tax area. All the reply stated is that the matter will be studied for another month or six weeks.

The problem with that is that the winter season is now over. It is too late to make any plans to do a lot of work out in the field in much of the area which requires that the ground be frozen when the machinery is put on it. I still do not have a reply and I asked that question back in October.

In addition, there was a flurry of activity because the Government of Alberta had in place a subsidized program for some work in the field, but that ended on December 31 of last year. Now the whole industry is slowing down. I believe that the number of rigs operating in the field today is 50 per cent of the number that were operating at the end of December.

Does the government not have a policy that will deal with this serious problem of additional work in the field that will add to the reserves of natural gas, light crude oil and whatever else Canada will need? Even this paper admits that before the end of the 1980s Canada will again be a net importer of light crude oil.

I suppose I could also ask the minister to tell us what the Government of Canada may be planning to do with plants such as Syncrude. I asked him about that, too, on December 18, and he did not give any reply as to whether or not there was going to be a response to Premier Getty. Since then, of course, the Alberta government—in frustration, I guess—has decided to go alone. I ask him now: Does the government have a policy to bring on additional supplies of crude oil, whether it be synthetic crude or light crude, from the conventional fields or even from the frontier areas, or will all of that wait for another report that is not due until July 1?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I thought I had made it clear that the federal and provincial ministers had agreed that the work of the working group that has been appointed would in no way impede the negotiations on some of these specific projects that the honourable senator mentioned; for example, the new grade upgrader, the Husky upgrader, the Wolf Lake expansion, Hibernia and, in the field of nuclear power, Lepreau II.

The honourable senator also mentioned the question he asked me before Christmas about the monitoring of the revenues that go back to the industry as a result of the cancellation of the PGRT. I told him at that time that the report of the monitoring group would be available in late January and that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be in touch with my friend directly. I am now advised that the report has been delayed until the first quarter of this year and that, in fact, there is a letter to that effect on its way to the honourable senator.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am sure that you all realize that those are very disconcerting answers to the people who are involved in and get their living from this industry that is now very quiet, almost at a standstill, because of the lack of policy announcements by this government.

I ask the leader again: When will we get an announcement about the federal government's policy with respect to increasing supplies of synthetic crude from Syncrude or from other plants out of those known deposits, or from further activity in the conventional oil fields, or, indeed, even from the frontier areas? Or is it a situation where the government does not have a policy and does not intend to give any date as to when one will be announced?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have already indicated that negotiations on some of those projects are continuing. As for the rest of it, there will not be an announcement today.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF RURAL POST OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning rural post offices. I read an article in the Globe and Mail of today, February 3, that says that 188 postmasters will retire this year; and that last November the government took the decision that these 188 postmasters would not be replaced. The article also says that another 1,700 smaller post offices in rural Canada will be closed out and that yet another 1,500 will be given out to private operators. I understand that the minister responsible for the Post Office has said that no post offices will be contracted out to private operators without consultation with the Member of Parliament for the area or with the community. First, I wonder if the minister includes among "Members of Parliament" senators, who are also members of Parliament, because Parliament consists of members of the House of Commons, members of the Senate and the Governor General. Second, will the consultation process be the same process as the government carried out with the Government of Newfoundland with regard to fish? That is, it talks to them, but pays no attention to what they have to say and goes ahead and signs an agreement anyway! In other words, will the government say, "I have consulted" and then close out the post offices? Because then, of course, it can say, "We have consulted." Third, will the Leader of the Government dig out for me the information on how many of these post offices will be closed or contracted out this year and over the next ten years in Atlantic Canada? I know that the honourable senator does not have that information in his head, so he may consider this as notice, and I hope he will be able to provide the answer tomorrow or the next day.

ENERGY

COST OF TRANSPORTING WESTERN COAL TO ONTARIO— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in connection with the renewed hopes of western coal producers for the sale of low-sulphur coal from the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia to the province of Ontario. This information became public thanks to a recent act of civility by the Deputy Prime Minister directed toward the province of Ontario. Can the Leader of the Government advise us whether it is the intention of the government to assist in a subvention for transportation costs for western coal coming to the province of Ontario, and whether or not this is the reason why the Deputy Prime Minister sought urgent meetings with the Premier of Ontario?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government explain why the Deputy Prime Minister is so insistent in seeing the Premier of Ontario in this matter when meetings were being actively conducted at the official level?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Deputy Prime Minister is a distinguished representative of Alberta and of western Canada's interests in the federal cabinet, and naturally takes a personal interest in these matters. I think, understandably, he wants to use his position to forward the interests of the coal producers in that area and of the people who are dependent upon the industry in that area. He has been seeking some meetings with the Premier of Ontario to discuss the matter. The fact is that Ontario Hydro, as my friend knows, imports coal for its needs from the United States and, as I understand it, has contracts to fill all its projected needs for the next little while. Nevertheless, those agreements will come to an end and at that time, if not sooner, everybody who is interested in the coal industry in western Canada would like to see Ontario Hydro, for economic, patriotic and environmental reasons, give favourable consideration to the coal producers of western Canada.

[Senator Bonnell.]

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I wonder what the Deputy Prime Minister can bring to the table, given that Ontario has been conducting active discussions with the Province of Alberta and with the Province of British Columbia. There is an impression that the Deputy Prime Minister is really a kibitzer. If he wishes to assist Ontario with respect to purchases of western coal, what is the proposal that he has in mind? Certainly, western coal producers would be anxious to know the thinking of the federal government in this particular area.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would hope that Senator Austin and others would grant the Deputy Prime Minister the courtesy of allowing him to make that case to the Premier and the Government of Ontario before making any public statements about the possible positions of the Government of Canada.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, let me conclude by saying that I take it that the Leader of the Government knows of no policy being directed in terms of these possible western coal shipments to the province of Ontario which could be advanced to the Premier of Ontario and which would engage his possible interest?

Senator Murray: There are a great many things that might engage the possible interest of the Premier of Ontario and the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada. My specific reply to the question put by Senator Austin was that no decision of the kind he mentioned concerning possible subventions for western coal coming to the province of Ontario had been made by the government.

ILLITERACY

REMEDIAL MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In the Speech from the Throne of last October the government undertook to take measures to produce programs that would ensure that Canadians would have access to literacy skills which the Throne Speech describes as "the prerequisites for participation in an advanced economy." I wonder if the government leader could tell me where this proposition stands, what measures are in the works and whether the government has a commitment yet to a national campaign to fight illiteracy.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the honourable senator raised this question on several previous occasions, specifically on December 16 and 19. There is a delayed reply. If she can wait for it, Senator Doody will table it in a few moments. If she would prefer that I anticipate the delayed reply, I can read it now.

Senator Fairbairn: Would you read it now, please?

Senator Murray: The federal government is well aware that illiterate Canadians are at a disadvantage when it comes to participating in the social, economic and political life of Canada. In the Speech from the Throne the government made a commitment to work with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop measures to ensure that Canadians have access to the literacy skills that are the prerequisites for participation in an advanced economy.

In following through on this commitment, the Secretary of State is working with the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State for Youth in developing federal initiatives to combat illiteracy. In particular, the Secretary of State is trying to develop a consensus on future courses of action in support of increased public awareness of the issue; networking and information sharing; and greater co-ordination of literacy activities.

The Secretary of State is also consulting with specialists on literacy and asking for their advice in helping to define an appropriate role for the federal government to play. The government is confident that a co-ordinated approach to illiteracy can be put in place in the near future.

● (1520)

Senator Fairbairn: I thank the Leader of the Government for that response. Given the fact that there is a great deal of knowledge and a great body of recommendations already in place from national organizations, can the government leader give me any indication of the timing for some actual programs arising out of these consultations that the ministry is having?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would have to make further inquiries. What I have just read is a prepared reply furnished by the Secretary of State to the two questions asked previously by the honourable senator.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if I could prevail upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate to table for us the agreement which we were discussing earlier today. If there is a copy available, it would be good to have it.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION AGENCY RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In a preliminary way, may I say that there is great concern on the part of the dock workers on the west coast, particularly in the Port of Vancouver, and on the part of the maritime employers with respect to the future of that port. I have some preliminary background facts to outline for you. This will not take too long, and they will be followed by a question.

The government mandated the Grain Transportation Agency a while ago to measure the impact of the present system of shipping grain and grain-related commodities, among other products, through west coast ports and other ports. My question relates to the impact of the recommendations contained in their review of the Western Grain Transportation Act with respect to the definition of "export".

The federal government mandate to the Grain Transportation Agency was to provide recommendations which would move the product to market at the least cost to the producer, to provide equity between different modes of transport and to achieve western provincial governments' objectives of obtaining the least-cost system of getting products to market.

The recommendations have been discussed in their preliminary stage by Mr. Jack Horner with representatives on the west coast. I can report, honourable senators, that there has been a very serious and negative reaction. It is felt that there would be bad consequences for the Port of Vancouver and the western provinces generally should the recommendations with respect to the elimination of the definition of "export" be adopted by the government.

Honourable senators, I will not go into all of the details. The source of real concern is that it is believed that the recommendations, if implemented, would provide disincentives for container shipping lines to continue to call at Vancouver if specialty grains in containers could be trans-shipped via north-west U.S. ports such as Seattle and Tacoma. Already some agricultural products from British Columbia, such as apples, are being shipped through Seattle rather than Vancouver. It seems to me that that process is very counterproductive. Now it is feared that if the GTA recommendations are implemented in total, this would provide further marketing problems for the Port of Vancouver in its efforts to establish itself as a major load centre.

Honourable senators, it is felt that the recommendations would result in both direct and indirect loss of jobs on the west coast of Canada to the U.S. Pacific northwest. Approximately nine jobs are created off-dock for each on-dock job. As honourable senators know, we have a very high unemployment rate in British Columbia.

Honourable senators, if the Canadian farmer received no government or taxpayer subsidy or support whatsoever, one could well agree with the producers shipping their product anywhere they wished and using any mode of transportation. However, honourable senators, Canadian farmers are provided with subsidies to transport products to the west coast. This proposed change would allow the subsidized products to be trans-shipped through U.S. ports, putting Canadian taxpayers out of work—the very same taxpayers who are providing money to help pay those subsidies.

More significantly, it is felt on the west coast that there are no cost savings generated by allowing shipment from U.S. ports for Canadian farmers.

Honourable senators, there are other concerns as well, but I want to shorten this by suggesting that these issues which address a much broader question than that covered by the GTA mandate cannot and must not be ignored. The consequences to the Canadian populace in general, and to British Columbians in particular, in both the short and long term, must be given proper weight.

The leading container lines on the U.S. west coast, Sealand and American President Lines—which do not call at Vancouver and have no intention of so doing—are hungrily awaiting the outcome respecting the subject recommendations. Again, the Americans talk in terms of unfettered free enterprise. They say that they want the market to determine costs and prices. The U.S. shipbuilding and shipping industries are heavily subsidized, and the Seattle and Tacoma terminals are similarly subsidized by way of a direct property tax on King County rather than having to pay property taxes. When the Americans talk about playing on a level field, that field is already tilted in their favour. As our Senate colleague, the Honourable Hazen Argue, said today, it is difficult to track some of their movements these days. In certain areas, such as grain sales, the Americans are treating the Soviet Union and China like Santa Claus and treating Canada—their best friend and ally—like Scrooge.

Unlike Seattle and Tacoma, Washington, Vancouver terminal operators pay direct property taxes to the surrounding municipalities and the city of Vancouver, except for Vancouver Port Corporation terminals which pay grants in lieu of taxes.

The resultant question I have for the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Will the Leader of the Government give assurance that it is not the intention of the government to implement the Grain Transportation Agency recommendations holus bolus without any changes or amendments? Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate can tell this chamber what degree of importance the government places on these recommendations which are causing so much disquiet on the west coast.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on October 9 last by the Honourable Senator Grafstein regarding Human Rights—Japanese Canadians—Government Apology and Compensation.

[Senator Perrault.]

(The answer follows:)

The press is correct in reporting that the Secretary of State is prepared to take whatever time is needed to arrive at a fair and equitable resolution of this matter. The government is conscious of the importance of such a resolution to our Japanese Canadian citizens, who have contributed so much to society.

TRANSPORT

DISALLOWANCE OF INCREASE IN CN FREIGHT RATES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 19 last by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn regarding Transport—Disallowance of Increase in CN Freight Rates.

CN will comply with the direction of the commission. The commission has powers under section 45 of the National Transportation Act to issue and enforce orders consistent with that act and the Railway Act. As one would expect, CN has not contemplated taking action in defiance of the authority of the commission.

The law contains no provisions for the payment of refunds in cases where the commission, following the investigation of a complaint, disallows a rate increase. Under sections 289 and 290, rates charged under a tariff that has been filed with the commission are the legal rates and must be charged by the carrier until such time as they are either “superseded by another tariff or disallowed by the Commission.”

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY DRAFT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon the draft Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, tabled in the Senate on 17th December, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-160); and

That the Committee present its report no later than 30th April, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF CANADA BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the second reading of Bill C-7, respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend other acts in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, during consideration of this bill in the other place, two ministers of the Crown, and others who supported them, drew liberally from the great words of great men to underline the significance of the collective memory of the state for that, indeed, is what the Archives represent. I know that I was impressed when the Honourable Flora MacDonald quoted Nobel Peace Prize winner, Elie Wiesel, "Without memory there would be no future... Memory is what God gave to man to make him human."

Honourable senators, in the wake of such eloquence, I would be remiss if I broke the chain and did not draw upon the wisdom of others to reinforce what I have to say about Bill C-7. I would not want it said of me, "But you forgot, remember?" That accusatory line is from Irving Berlin's romantic ballad of the twenties.

I could go back a distance and quote Pierre Corneille, who walked this earth between 1606 and 1684, and who reminded us that "a good memory is needed after one has lied." That sentiment, of course, is archaic, which might also be said of the conclusion of John Viscount Morley, who died in the year of my birth. Morley said, "The proper memory for a politician is one that knows what to remember and what to forget."

Better we should stick with Alexander Smith, who died in the year of our Confederation. Smith told us, "A man's real possession is his memory. In nothing else is he rich, in nothing else is he poor."

In truth, we could not be giving intelligent consideration to this bill if it were not for archivists and their persistence in the past. In their work, you will find the origins of the collections that form such a vital part of the record of the achievements—and the follies—of our governments and, indeed, the history of Canada.

The Archives date back to 1872 when the work had already begun on the gathering of historical records of every kind from all parts of the country and where copying of significant documents and journals from England and France was under way. The Archives were officially given the job of preserving such records in 1902, and in 1912 the Public Archives Act of Canada made the institution autonomous. Before 1912, and certainly afterward, the Archives went well beyond their official mandate to achieve their purpose, and in 1903, and even in 1912—that year of spectacular progress, the year the "Titanic" went down—there was no anticipation of the fact that the collections would become the principal repository of documentation of the mood and the nature of our country at any given time, that they would become a principal source of genealogical data. There was no anticipation of the time when film, audio material, computer sources, discs and television print-outs would become as important as the printed word in sustaining the national memory. There was certainly no anticipation of the avalanches of material that would have to be screened and sorted as the population of our country multiplied and our governments grew in size to meet those complex new needs of our people. Some idea of the nature of the workload of the Archives can be summoned up if we take note of the fact that less than 10 per cent of the words that flow from government are kept in archival records.

Any honourable senator who surveys his own desk each morning, picking wheat from chaff, will appreciate the magnitude of the sorting operation. Like the man who goes through the beans on the coffee commercials, the archivist must be aware of what should be discarded if the brew is to be rich, to say nothing of being manageable.

The act of 1912 is totally inadequate. It not only ignores modern technology and the ever-spreading sources of supply, it simply does not provide for access, and that access has everything to do with the relevance of the collections. We are dealing here with a service that employs close to 800 people and in the year 1986-87 will spend $42 million.

The need to clean up our act—the act of 1912—has long been evident. It was recommended in 1962 by the Glassco Commission, in 1975 by the Symons Commission, in 1982 by the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, and by inter-ministerial consultations during the past two years. The various recommendations proposed have been studied and amended by legislative committee.

I am sure that you will share my relief that we are not being asked today to undertake another study or appoint another commission. After 74 years, we have a new act to set in place. Memory hold the door!

Bill C-7 is an act respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions and to amend other acts in relation thereto.

The National Archives are to "conserve private and public records of national significance and facilitate access thereto, to be the permanent repository of government institutions and of ministerial records."

Among other duties, the National Archivist may provide information, consultation, research, and make known information concerning archives by means such as publications, exhibitions and the lending of records. It may advise government institutions concerning standards and procedures pertaining to the management of records. It provides record storage facilities to government institutions and, not the least, it provides training for people expert in handling such tasks.

Subject to the terms and conditions under which records have been acquired or obtained, the archivist may, in consultation with the advisory board, destroy or dispose of any record where the retention of the record is no longer deemed necessary. Clause 5(1) of this bill states:

No record under the control of a government institution and no ministerial record, whether or not it is surplus property . . . shall be destroyed or disposed of without consent of the Archivist.

Clause 8(2) of this bill states:

The producer or distributor of a recording shall, within six months after a request in writing is made by the Archivist, provide the Archivist with a copy of the recording in such form as may be specified in the request.

Of course, the Archivist shall pay for the copy.

● (1540)

The bill also states that the minister shall establish an advisory board consisting of the Archivist, the National Librarian, the Secretary-General of the National Museums of Canada and not more than seven other members.

Perhaps honourable senators will be most interested in matters relating to access to what might be archival material. In closing, I will quote five subclauses which touch on access. They are on page 4 of the bill and read as follows:

(2) Subject to subsection (5) but notwithstanding anything in any other Act of Parliament, the Archivist shall have access to any record in respect of which the consent referred to in subsection (1) has been requested.

(3) Notwithstanding anything in any other Act of Parliament, any officer or employee of a government institution may grant to the Archivist access to any record in respect of which the consent referred to in subsection (1) has been requested.

(4) The Archivist and every person acting on behalf or under the direction of the Archivist shall, with respect to access to the records referred to in subsection (2), satisfy any security requirements applicable to, and take any oath of secrecy required to be taken by, persons who normally have access to those records.

(5) For the purposes of this section, the Archivist shall have access to

(a) a record to which subsection 69(1) of the Access to Information Act applies, only with the consent of the Clerk of the Privy Council; and

(b) a record of a government institution that contains information the disclosure of which is restricted by or pursuant to any provision set out in Schedule II to the Access to Information Act, only with the consent of the head, within the meaning of that Act, of that government institution.

The records of government institutions and ministerial records that, in the opinion of the Archivist, are of historic or archival importance shall be transferred to the care and control of the Archivist in accordance with such schedules or other agreements for the transfer of records as may be agreed on between the Archivist and the government institution or person responsible for the records.

[Senator Doyle.]

Honourable senators, may I urge your support for Bill C-7 which will become known as the National Archives of Canada Act.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Doyle a question, the answer to which may be more readily accessible to him than it is to me, considering the resources he has at his disposal.

I refer to page 6, clause 9 of the bill, where it states:

A member of the board, other than the Archivist, the National Librarian or the Secretary-General of the National Museums of Canada, is entitled to be paid such amount in respect of each attendance at meetings of the board as the Governor in Council may fix . . .

That is understandable. However, it goes on to state:

. . . and the members of the board shall be paid reasonable travel and other expenses incurred by them in connection with the business of the board.

Does that mean that the Archivist, the National Librarian and the Secretary-General of the National Museums do not get their expenses if they attend meetings, for example, outside of Ottawa, or are they paid through the Financial Administration Act or some other act?

I ask that question because that is a rather common clause and I have never before noticed that it raises the question, albeit an esoteric one, of whether public servants who are members of the board are not entitled to have their travel expenses paid.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF DEBATES AND MINUTES—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—SPEAKER'S STATEMENT—DEBATE ON MOTION ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That officials from the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be called before the Bar of the Senate to explain the delay in the publishing of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate:—
(Honourable Senator Frith).

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have received a letter, copies of which I have sent to the leaders and deputy leaders, from Mr. Manchovsky, the Queen's Printer, concerning this matter.

I assigned the Clerk Assistant to consult with the Queen's Printer and to make recommendations to me with respect to the complaints raised by honourable senators during debate on Senator MacEachen's motion on December 19.

On January 27, 1987, I met with the Clerk Assistant and Mr. Manchevsky to discuss recommendations which would improve our efficiency, as well as the setting of priorities for the printing of parliamentary documents in the future.

The Clerk Assistant reported that improvements and upgrading of our word processing equipment will increase the efficiency of the system by 60 per cent. This upgrading of equipment will eliminate any future delay in the preparation and transmission of text sent by the Senate to the Printing Bureau.

With respect to the question of priorities set by the Printing Bureau with regard to the printing of parliamentary documents, I have been informed by Mr. Manchevsky that the printing of documents of both houses is treated equally. With respect to the printing of Hansard and the Order Paper, priority has been given to the House of Commons due to the fact that the house sits at 11.00 a.m. four days a week. However, I have been informed by our officials that the printing of Senate Hansard and Minutes has not been delayed in the past because of the priority being given to the House of Commons Hansard.

The Queen's Printer has proposed the establishment of a formal process for setting priorities when a normal delivery schedule cannot be met.

Consequently, I have appointed the Clerk Assistant to be the liaison officer to act on behalf of the Senate when priority decisions have to be made. I understand that the Clerk Assistant will liaise with the Director of Parliamentary Reporting whenever normal printing schedules cannot be met.

With regard to the authority of the Chief, Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice in determining printing priorities, I am informed that when urgent bills have to be printed, a letter of priority prepared by the Department of Justice is sent, and this requirement has, in the past, been given absolute printing priority. I am informed by the Queen's Printer that as far as it can be determined, this understanding has no official status. Therefore, in future the priorities for the printing of parliamentary documents will be established by the liaison officers of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

The one outstanding problem we are currently studying is the question of implementing an automated system for inputting the translated copy of the Debates of the Senate and committee proceedings which will eliminate major interventions by the Printing Bureau, a costly and time-consuming operation. Our officials are presently discussing the matter with the Director of Translation Services, Secretary of State, and officials of the House of Commons Reporting Services in order to arrive at a solution which will result in a more efficient and cost-effective operation.

Honourable senators, this is my report on this matter, and if honourable senators have any further suggestions I am prepared to hear them.

● (1550)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to make a comment or two under Order No. 2, to which this report of the Speaker relates. First, I would like to thank him for providing us with copies of this report and for the work that he has done arising out of the motion which is the subject matter of Order No. 2.

First, I draw attention to the fourth paragraph, which is of substantial importance, in which the Clerk Assistant is stated to have reported that:

... improvements and upgrading of our word-processing equipment will increase the efficiency of the system by 60 per cent. This upgrading of equipment will eliminate any future delay in the preparation and transmission of text sent by the Senate to the Printing Bureau.

That is very important; I underline the word "eliminate." That is quite a substantial undertaking that the Clerk Assistant has made, namely, to say that he will undertake that this upgrading will "eliminate" those delays.

The other important substantial item is the third paragraph on page 2, and involves the authority the Chief Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice has in terms of priority. The statement is as follows:

I am informed that when urgent bills have to be printed, a letter of priority prepared by the Department of Justice is sent, and this requirement has, in the past, been given absolute printing priority.

That has brought us right to the essence and the heart of the problem that we were trying to get at when this question arose before Christmas. Then it states:

I am informed by the Queen's Printer that as far as it can be determined, this understanding has no official status.

Now there is another important statement:

Therefore, in future the priorities for the printing of Parliamentary documents will be established by the liaison officers of the Senate and of the House of Commons.

Those two are the substantial answers, it seems to me. Perhaps I will be permitted to make a couple of less substantial comments and recommend that in the second paragraph on page 2 we eliminate the word "liaise" as a verb. It states:

I understand that the Clerk Assistant will liaise—

I hope that that word is still not a verb—at least we should mount some sort of fight against it as a last-ditch stand here. Then, on this third paragraph, I wonder if that comma is right where it states:

With regard to the authority of the Chief, Legislative Counsel of the Department of Justice—

Or is it "the Chief Legislative Counsel"? That is a matter of punctuation.

There is one other verbalization that we should stand against, and that is in the penultimate paragraph, which states:

The one outstanding problem we are currently studying is the question of implementing an automated system for inputting the translated copy—

Perhaps we could find a better verb than "inputting."

There is a story of the Chief Editor of the New York Times, who got so fed up with the people on the second floor—he being on the third floor—using the word “upcoming” that he went down to the second floor, called for attention and said, “The next time anyone uses the word ‘upcoming’ I will be ‘downcoming’ and he or she will be ‘outgoing.’”

Honourable senators, since we have just received this report, may I ask for the adjournment of the debate in my name in case there is anything I can add? If not, I can yield to someone else.

Since this motion dealt with the privileges of all senators and was not just a matter of administration or techniques, I would like all honourable senators to have a look at the Hansard tomorrow—because I am sure it will be here on time!—and consider whether they feel that this is a satisfactory answer, because before withdrawing the motion—a move that will be consistent with our having achieved our purpose—I want to be sure that all honourable senators are satisfied, as I consider this a matter of the privilege of each senator and not just a matter of a motion or proposal by one or two of them.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

“A PEOPLE APART—NATIVES IN SASKATOON”

SPECIAL NEWSPAPER REPORT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Buckwold calling the attention of the Senate to a special report by the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix entitled “A People Apart—Natives in Saskatoon”.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to stand debate on this question once again.

However, if other honourable senators are willing to speak today or within the next few days, I should be delighted to step aside and give them an opportunity to speak.

Actually, I want to consult with some of my colleagues before commenting on the articles that appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, to determine whether it is opportune or necessary to set up a committee of this chamber with a special mandate to consider “Indian affairs”, although I do not particularly like this term. Let us say, to use another expression, affairs that concern the aboriginal peoples of this country.

I believe the Senate has a duty to focus special attention on the problems of the aboriginal peoples of this country. For the time being, I would like to stand my comments on this fundamental issue.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 4, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask for an explanation?

Senator Doody: I understand from the chairman of the committee that in their ongoing study of legislation they have an important witness from the United States appearing this afternoon. Apparently, the witness is on a tight schedule, and in order to accommodate the witness the committee has asked for permission to sit this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENTS—GROUNDS FOR NOT PROCEEDING

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of clarification with respect to the negotiations which are expected to take place between Canada and France on the fisheries and boundary dispute. The need for clarification is derived from a statement which was made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans in the House of Commons on January 29, 1987, in which the minister states:

I have indicated several times in the House that it is important that all Atlantic Canadians understand that the only agreement is to negotiate the reference of the boundary dispute to compulsory third party arbitration, and to negotiate corresponding fisheries arrangements for the period after 1988.

The key sentence is as follows:

If, in negotiating these two agreements between now and the end of the year, the conditions required by France are unsatisfactory to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador and Atlantic Canada, then there will indeed be no agreement.

I am not quite sure what that means and, therefore, I ask the following question: In view of the stand taken by the Premier of Newfoundland and the Premier of Nova Scotia that the proposals are unsatisfactory, is that not to be taken as sufficient grounds for the government not to proceed to the making of an agreement? What additional expression of opinion is required having regard to the statements by the provincial premiers?

We will be consulting closely with government and with industry in trying to achieve the agreement to send those matters to arbitration and to put a cap on the overfishing.

As Mr. Siddon says, if any proposed conditions are unsatisfactory to the Atlantic provinces, then there will be no agreement.

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS—ALLOCATION OF NORTHERN COD QUOTAS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer, which leads me to put a further question. One of the elements which have been put forward by the Canadian government to be included in a fisheries agreement for 1988 onwards is an allocation of northern cod. That is quite clear from what has been stated.

In view of the fact that the Premier of Newfoundland has become enraged at the allocation of the northern cod, is that not enough evidence to the government that the proposed conditions sought by France are unacceptable to the Government of Newfoundland?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): As I told the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, there are discussions taking place imminently between representatives of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Fisheries and the Government of Newfoundland as well as between Premier Peckford and the Honourable John Crosbie. We will have to see what those discussions produce by way of an understanding before commenting further on the honourable senator's question.

Senator MacEachen: I take it that at some point the government will indicate whether the precondition, namely, the allocation of the northern cod for 1988 onwards, which has been objected to by the Premier of Newfoundland, will continue to remain an important part of the objectives of Canada. From my reading of the situation, unless Premier Peckford withdraws his objections, the government will find itself in extreme difficulty in proceeding with the negotiations with France.

I want to ask another question which also has to do with northern cod. We have heard from the minister that Canada has given an undertaking to allocate some cod in that fishing area to the French from 1988 onwards. I wonder whether the Government of Canada has put a limit on the amount that will be allocated, whether there is a range, or whether the proposed allocation is open-ended, meaning that it could be increased in the negotiations, depending on the pressure that will be put upon the Canadian negotiators by the French. Up to the present, the French have shown an extraordinary capacity to get the Canadians to agree to what the premiers of the two Atlantic provinces find outrageous.

Senator Murray: One would never suspect that that was the case from reading the newspapers in France today and yesterday, which are screaming at the French government for having sold out the interests of that country to Canada and to Canadian fishermen. The honourable senator, I think, when talking about northern cod, is discussing the cod in what is called division 2J+3KL. He can read the language of the agreement himself, but what is contemplated there is that from 1988 to 1991 those quotas would be negotiated between the two countries. I fully agree with his earlier statement that, if the Premier of Newfoundland did not withdraw his objection to that aspect of the agreement, then the Government of Canada would be proceeding without consensus with him and his province on that point.

I think that the final judgment on the matter would have to be made on the basis of the entire package and what it contains.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I would make just one other point. The minister stated that these northern cod allocations would be a matter of negotiation. That is not quite the case, because the Government of Canada has made a pre-commitment that it will allocate some cod before going into the negotiations. That commitment, presumably, is not negotiable.

What I am really asking is this: Having made that commitment, has the government established any limit? Would it go up to 10,000 tonnes or 20,000 tonnes? Is there any range within which the government is operating? That is my last question on this point.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my information on the matter is that the quotas themselves would have to be negotiated between Canada and France. The fact is—and I presume that the honourable senator knows this, having been involved in these matters in the past—that the French have been telling Canada for some time that there would be no reference of the boundary dispute unless there was some quota from that 2J+3KL division included in the overall quota.

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS—EXCLUSION OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government did not explain or link in any way access to northern cod to moderation in terms of fishing in area 3Ps. That area is already an overexploited zone, one in which all fishermen, Canadian and Saint Pierre and Miquelon fishermen alike, have an interest in establishing some management regime. I find the absence of linkage rather significant. Surely there should be some reference to the willingness on the part of the French to moderate their fishing appetites in the Gulf; that is, in area 3Ps.

I should like to put the following question to the Leader of the Government: There seems to be a strange coincidence in the two following facts. Until the end of 1986, the Canadian delegation was led by the Department of Fisheries. In the recent negotiations—I believe on January 20, 1987—the direction of the delegation was taken over by the Department of External Affairs. In the course of the negotiations in January, the normal consultation process—which is deep and well established in relations between government, fishermen and the industry, and which goes back to the Law of the Sea Conference—broke down and, in fact, the representatives of the fishermen were left out. They were not even invited to the antechamber. They were not even taken along. They were left at home.

• (1410)

I should like the minister to tell us if that is coincidence, or whether, in fact, it was a diktat from higher up, that this was to be a "quick fix," that a deal had to be settled, and that there were "superior interests involved." If that is the case, then the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces should know that when their interests were involved they were not represented.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there was no such motivation involved in the matter. The absence of representatives of the Government of Newfoundland and of the industry was an error for which we have apologized to the provincial government and to the industry.

Senator LeBlanc: Can the Leader of the Government give me an explanation as to why the Department of Fisheries was left out in the leadership of the delegation and replaced by the Department of External Affairs?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware that that is the case. Both departments were represented. I cannot say that there had been a change in the leadership of the delegation at a given point; but I can make inquiries and advise the honourable senator.

Senator LeBlanc: If the Leader of the Government checks the draft of the agreement, he will find that the top signature is that of Lorne Clark, who is an official in the Department of External Affairs.

Senator Frith: For that we get a Trudeau shrug.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC MARINE AND CN MARINE BOARD OF DIRECTORS— LACK OF FRANCOPHONE MEMBERS

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. For once, my question has nothing to do with fisheries or the economy.

This morning, I was somewhat offended, in the presence of Atlantic Marine officials, when I was advised that the board of directors appointed by the present government for Atlantic Marine and CN Marine was made-up of twelve people from the four Atlantic provinces and the State of Maine, with not a single Francophone among them.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate explain this situation?

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON U.S. CHRISTMAS TREES AND ENGLISH-LANGUAGE BOOKS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Last summer Mr. Wilson, the Minister of Finance, put a 30 per cent duty on Christmas trees coming into Canada from the United States. Since only approximately $5 million worth of trees are coming into Canada from the United States, if they should retaliate and do the same thing to us, it would be a catastrophic blow to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, because 90 per cent of Christmas trees exported from Canada to the United States, to a value of $40 million, are exported from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate use his good offices to persuade the Minister of Finance to remove the tariff on American Christmas trees imported into Canada, in case the United States should decide to retaliate and destroy Atlantic Canada further? While he is at it, perhaps the leader could ask the minister to remove the tariff on English-language books coming into Canada, because only we English-speaking Canadians must absorb that cost. Books in other languages have no duty on them.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if the United States retaliates, it may find that it will cost them some money, too. My information is that our tree exports to the United States are bound under the GATT and that if they were to erect barriers we could demand compensation from them.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. I wonder whether we have the same arrangement for English-language books with regard to the GATT. Do we have a retaliation clause there, too?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator knows perfectly well why that decision was taken. It was taken to demonstrate to the United States that it is a two-way street and that they cannot with impunity impose restrictions of the kind they imposed on our exports of, as it happened, shakes and shingles. We think that we have made that point. We think they understand it, and we hope there will be a resolution of the matter, as a result of which we will obtain the access we should have for those products to the American market.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. That is all well and fine with regard to the shakes and shingles. But what did England and Queen Elizabeth II do to us with regard to the shakes and shingles that we have put a tariff on all the English-language books coming from that country?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, those questions have been answered here on a previous occasion.

TRANSPORT

FUNDING OF MUNICIPAL AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last year the Minister of Transport announced a change in the policy of the government with regard to funding of municipal airports. At that time a large number of airports, and certainly many airports in our part of the country, indicated that they would be unable to continue operating unless the funding from the government continued. There was then some discussion between the municipal authorities and the government, but, so far, there has been no announcement as to policy. Would the minister find out for us what the policy is or when we might expect a definite announcement?

REGINA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—CONSTRUCTION OF HOTEL—LOCAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is my information that Transport Canada is indicating that it would like to accept offers for the building of hotels very close to existing airports in or near many urban centres in the country. I understand that an announcement has been made with respect to Regina. I can say that for a number of reasons there is a great deal of opposition to a hotel being built beside the airport in Regina. The feeling is that the prospects for the hotel and convention centre already going forward in that city could be severely damaged by an additional hotel which, in the opinion of community leaders, is not required. The Regina airport is really a downtown airport, if ever there was one, because it is only five minutes from the airport to downtown Regina. I do not expect the minister to know the details about the Regina airport, but would he look into this matter and would he endeavour to find out from Transport Canada whether, before this announcement was made, any consultations were undertaken with His Worship, Mayor Larry Scheider, the Hotel Association of Regina and the community leaders, and would he find out whether Transport Canada would entertain a cancellation of any suggested tendering if, in fact, the community felt that an additional hotel alongside the airport was not required and would be detrimental to the development of Regina at this time?

● (1420)

CONSTRUCTION OF HOTELS ADJACENT TO MAJOR AIRPORTS—
GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hazen Argue: I do not expect the minister to have details about Regina, but I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could ask the minister to say whether it is a general policy of Transport Canada to promote the building of hotels alongside many of the major airports in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I will ask for a statement on that matter.

[Senator Molgat.]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—RESTRICTION ON EXPORT OF CANADIAN RAW CEDAR LOGS

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A partial answer to Senator Bonnell's question with respect to the tariff on books and Christmas trees might well be to abandon those retaliatory actions, as our exports of shakes and shingles to the United States are presently higher than they were before this contretemps arose.

What I would like through the Leader of the Government in the Senate is an undertaking from the government that in settling this matter with the United States they will not authorize the export of raw cedar logs for the manufacture of shakes and shingles in the United States.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that is a new issue that has arisen quite recently, and I assure the honourable senator that the whole matter is under review.

I do understand that the shakes and shingles industry has been operating at almost full capacity, although there were dire reports from his colleague, Senator Perrault, just before Christmas about the state of affairs in that industry.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

THE CONSTITUTION—ENTRENCHMENT OF RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to the ministerial meeting that took place in Halifax in relation to the aboriginal people. At that meeting was discussed what should be the definition of the rights that are to be entrenched in the Constitution. That meeting took place on January 18, 19 and 20, and from what I have gathered from my colleagues and native leaders who were present at that meeting, the minister has put forward a proposal in connection with that definition and to whom that entrenchment should apply.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry, I missed the last few words.

Senator Watt: I am saying that the minister put on the table at that meeting a proposal as to what should be entrenched in the Constitution and how that entrenchment will apply to a certain number of native people across Canada.

I understand from the minister's proposal that he has decided to entrench the concept of self-government in the Constitution, but to make that apply only to the communities that lie north of 60° and to the people who live on the reserves. If that is the case, looking at the matter geographically, the concept of north of 60° first, leaves out one community called Belcher Island, because it lies south of 60°. That community is currently under federal jurisdiction.

Also, if north of 60° is to be the policy followed by the government, that will also include approximately six or seven communities in northern Quebec, because they, too, are north of 60°. Therefore, I do not see how, in practice, that proposal will work.

My question is whether this is a cabinet decision and, if not, I would like to suggest to the government that this proposal will not work, either in theory or in practice.

The Constitution cannot apply to some people and not to others. As I understand the Constitution, the broad principle of constitutional rights applies equally to everybody. I think you had better take a good look at how those rights will be applied at the administrative level and what that will mean at the political level. You should ask whether it works in realistic terms.

I should like to have answers to my questions in the very near future, as the First Ministers' Conference is scheduled for March.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me make a couple of statements in reply to what the honourable senator has said.

First of all, he knows, of course, that it is not for the federal government to entrench the right of self-government in the Constitution. If that could have been done by the federal government alone, that would have been done many years ago. It will take the federal Parliament and seven of the provinces of Canada having 50 per cent of the population to do that, in addition to having the agreement of the aboriginal groups.

The conferences that we have been having at the ministerial and official level have been for the purpose of trying to achieve the necessary consensus to make an amendment on self-government possible at the time of the First Ministers' Conference, which will be held in March.

With regard to the right of self-government that we would want to see entrenched in the Constitution, our view is that the right of self-government would be implemented in accordance with agreements with the various aboriginal groups, depending upon the circumstances and the conditions of each of those groups.

I assure the honourable senator that there is absolutely not the slightest intention on our part to contemplate that the right of self-government would apply only to the Indians living on reserves and aboriginals living north of 60°, and so on. That would not be our intent at all.

I think my honourable friend is referring to a controversy that arose in the course of the last ministerial meeting. I am not fully at liberty to go into that because it was a private meeting, but the controversy concerned not the right of self-government but rather the role of the federal government vis-à-vis status Indians, non-status Indians, Métis, on the one hand, aboriginals north of 60° and aboriginals south of 60°, on the other.

There was a brief contretemps on this issue during the course of the meeting, and I think we will be hearing more about that as we seek to clarify the situation.

With regard to the federal responsibility, I assure the honourable senator that we had no intention, and have no intention, of trying to change the status quo in terms of our responsibilities.

[Later:]

Senator Watt: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Let us assume that the discussions have taken place on the basis of what the role of the federal government should be leading towards defining the rights of aboriginal people. I am talking more about the fiscal arrangements that might or might not exist in regard to the financial responsibility of the federal government. From what I understood, the federal government is prepared to pay the expenditures involved in the negotiations by the people living above the 60th parallel, including the people living on the reserve.

Assuming that is the case and that was the intent of the minister—

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me interrupt my friend for one moment. None of that has been settled.

Senator Watt: It has not been settled, but it has been talked about and it has been discussed. One of the co-chairmen of the ICNI came to visit me at my house when I was up north; I know what took place.

What I would like to emphasize to you, and what requires some clarification, is that Quebec's native people, the Inuit, have made a settlement with the Government of Quebec—we are not hiding that. But the fact is that the Government of Canada still has a responsibility, which is clearly defined in the James Bay Northern Quebec Agreement. The Government of Canada still has a constitutional responsibility to the native people. Just because they have made a settlement with the Government of Quebec does not mean that the Government of Canada relinquishes its responsibility.

So, there is quite a bit of clarification required in that area, and I would like to have some clear indication—when you find the time—and some answers before the First Ministers' Conference takes place.

Senator Murray: I will do my best, honourable senators.

THE SENATE

USE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER'S STATIONERY FOR COMMUNICATION RE OERLIKON AEROSPACE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he can throw any light on the communication, which reached my office on the letterhead of the Office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, having to do with transactions on the site of Oerlikon Aerospace.

I have two or three questions. First of all, did the minister authorize the circulation of this communication on his letterhead? Does he take responsibility for its contents, and are the two individuals listed at the bottom of the second page, for information, members of his staff?

• (1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, those are quite proper questions. The answer is that during the time that the Senate was not sitting, our new colleague, Senator Bazin, issued a statement relating to some of those matters. I thought that it was a matter of sufficient interest and importance that all honourable senators would want to have a copy of it, and I instructed my office to see that copies were sent to all honourable senators, whereupon I left for the ministerial meeting on aboriginal affairs in Halifax. That is the meeting that has just been referred to. In my absence and without my knowledge, I am afraid the communiqué was typed on my ministerial letterhead. I quite agree with the implication in the honourable senator's question that the only statements that should go out on my ministerial letterhead are statements by me. I regret any misunderstanding that occurred as a result.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask who wrote the letter and who are the persons listed at the bottom of the letter?

Senator Murray: I am sorry, I do not have the names, but I take it that they are either members of Senator Bazin's law firm or are people who were employed by that law firm to put out that statement.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The names are André Sormany and Richard Vigneault. The area code in both cases is 514. Did I understand the minister to say that he assumed they were employees in Senator Bazin's office?

Senator Murray: Now that the names have been placed on the record, the first one, Mr. Sormany, I know and saw here yesterday. He was acting, as I understand it, in an advisory capacity to our new colleague on communications matters, and I take it that the other person was doing the same thing. They are not from my staff.

Senator Frith: Then the author of the material is either Senator Bazin or someone on his behalf.

Senator Murray: That is correct.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO POORER PROVINCES— GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I was somewhat disappointed yesterday when Senator Doody rose to give delayed answers to previous questions. In any case, today I should like to direct my question to the Government Leader in the Senate and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

On December 19 I drew Senator Doody's attention to the controversy reported in the media concerning a difference of opinion between the New Brunswick Minister of Finance and the federal Minister of Finance to the effect that the New Brunswick Minister of Finance was under the clear, precise and definite impression that next year the province would get $170-odd million more in equalization payments, whereas the Minister of Finance of the federal government did not see it quite that way: there had been no such firm intention nor any specific promise to that effect.

I asked my question on December 19. On behalf of the government, Senator Doody did commit himself to seeking the information and, I presume, giving me the answer upon our return. Well, I did not get the answer yesterday and I waited patiently.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me whether this matter or this disagreement between New Brunswick and the federal government has been settled, or can we expect a clarification which might be part of the forthcoming federal budget?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the commitment of the Minister of Finance towards the provinces was to make certain technical changes through the equalization formula. New Brunswick was to benefit from these changes by I do not know how many dollars, but in any event the Province of New Brunswick was to gain something from these changes.

The decision of the Minister of Finance was to make these changes, authorize the funds involved, and pay them to the provinces over two years, not in only one year. That is the disagreement between the Province of New Brunswick and the Government of Canada.

All I can add to this is that the honourable senator knows full well that the existing agreements will end in late March. So the Canadian government will have to introduce a bill to renew the equalization agreement for the next five years. This will be done before the end of March, obviously.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—SECURITY OF SUPPLY— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations a couple of questions respecting the energy policy of the government and, indeed, when they expected to make an announcement about the federal government's policy.

I read very carefully the replies that he gave because I suspected that he said nothing in those replies, and he certainly did. In fact, the last sentence is:

As for the rest of it, there will not be an announcement today.

I am very serious about this. Does that mean that the people who are desperately looking for jobs in this industry and looking for the federal government to set up a policy so that the industry will know what involvement the federal government policy will have with respect to such things as fairly important investments, and so on, will have to wait until after the task force reports on July 1, and then a further period while the government considers what the task force may have in their report and their recommendations?

● (1440)

In the meantime, are we to go completely without any indication of what the federal government's position is with respect to creating some activity in this area?

Again I have to remind the minister that there was a flurry of activity. The international price has gone up and the Alberta government had a reasonably generous subsidy program that ended on December 31. Since that time there has been a great deal of shutdown in the industry, which is awaiting some assurance of a policy that has a sufficient time stipulation to encourage investment.

I would like to know whether or not we are going to hear from the federal government between now and July 1 on whether there is a policy so that some of these people can get some comfort from the fact that action is being taken.

As I told him yesterday, the agreement between the federal government and the provinces at the recent ministerial meeting was that the work of this task force should in no way inhibit, retard or impede negotiations that are going on on various specific projects. These will go ahead. Announcements will be made when the negotiations are concluded. By way of example, I mentioned several specific projects that are now under negotiation.

If the honourable senator has some other things in mind, he can say so. Even if he does not, I can make some inquiries of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to see whether there is some further information that I can bring to the honourable senator's attention.

In the absence of some response from me, I would not want it to be taken for granted that the honourable senator is correct in implying, as he does, that the federal government has done nothing about the energy industry since December, 1984. The federal government has taken a very positive, creative and, if I may say so, generous attitude towards the energy sector and has cleared up the major areas of conflict between Ottawa and the producing provinces.

The honourable senator knows as well as I do that much of the recent difficulty in that sector is due to international conditions. There again we have done our best, within our means, through phasing out the PGRT faster than we had contemplated, to bring very considerable assistance to the industry and the people who depend on it.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is one of the points I wanted to make. The Leader of the Government in this place and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the other place and, indeed, in public said a number of times that they had a commitment from the industry that the $500 million or $700 million, whatever it may be, resulting from PGRT relief was going to be used for other activity that would create jobs such as, I suppose, exploration and development. The government, including this minister, gave an undertaking last fall that the monitoring agency would tell us whether or not that money was being used according to the commitment made to the government. Yesterday he replied that they still needed more time. He talks about something at the end of the first quarter, March 31, 1987, but I am not quite sure what he means. Now the situation is being delayed until the agency can report as to what their recommendations are.

Living in the midst of this, we have reason to believe that the hundreds of millions of dollars that mostly the multinational corporations have saved—there was already a $2 million exemption for every oil company—are not being expended in Canada. Surely we have a right to know now, and not later in the winter or even when winter is over, whether that money is being used to relieve the unemployment problem.

Senator Murray: I shall certainly bring to the attention of the minister the honourable senator's statement that the indications are that those companies are not putting that money to the purposes for which it was committed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—ITEMS FOR NEGOTIATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the question of negotiations for a comprehensive trade agreement between Canada and the United States, there has been quite a focusing of attention recently on the question of cultural sovereignty and whether or not certain Canadian cultural industries are on the table.

Would the minister get some information which would help us to understand this ongoing saga? I do not expect him to furnish me with an answer today, but I would appreciate it if he were to ask the minister in charge to try to give us some definition so we can better understand the story as it unfolds.

In the first instance, can he tell us what is meant by "cultural industries"? I have no difficulty in understanding, for example, the book publishing tariff, the book publishing trade provisions or the Broadcasting Act which flowed from Bill C-58. Are there others? What other cultural industries are included when the government, the Prime Minister or their representatives in the negotiations say that cultural issues or cultural industries are not on the table? Can he give us a list of any others?

Second, can he tell us if there would be certain corollaries to those principles, that is, where the withdrawal of cultural industries from the table would have a corollary effect on some other industries? For example, if it is decided that some other cultural industry is not to be negotiated and is off the table, might that affect some industry in the negotiations that would be on the table and might it have a corollary effect on ones that are meant to stay on the table?

Third, would he also tell us the exact context of certain issues being not on the table and give us a description of the negotiations directed towards a comprehensive trade agreement? I have always understood the word "comprehensive" in this context to be distinct from "sectoral" trade agreements. There have been proponents for agreements in certain sectors, but what I understand the government is proposing is a comprehensive agreement. What is the relationship between that word "comprehensive" and the fact that certain issues or industries are not going to be on the table?

● (1450)

With regard to what constitutes a comprehensive trade agreement, there are definitions of that under the GATT and elsewhere.

Senator MacEachen: The definition will be made after the agreement is signed. Anything that is signed will be regarded as comprehensive.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition has said that anything that is signed will be considered as comprehensive, and I thank him for that commitment. The question of what is a "comprehensive" agreement under the GATT is treated in numerous places, among them in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is chaired by Senator van Roggen. That report has to do with Canada-U.S. economic relations.

Senator Frith: Yes, I understand that, but I believe the Leader of the Government also understands that I am asking about the relationship between the expression "comprehensive" as used by the government and the matter of certain industries not being put on the table.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHING AGREEMENT

AGREED RECORD PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while I am on my feet, the document with reference to the Canada-France fishing agreement has been tabled. Being tabled, of course, it will not appear in Hansard nor will it appear in today's Minutes unless we ask that it be so included. I think it would be a good idea to do so. It is not a lengthy document and should not threaten our agreement not to append documents of too great a length. Just so that today's record will be complete, and for the assistance of senators wanting to focus on that expression as it appears in the agreement, the reference that was made by the Leader of the Opposition to the pre-commitment is found in the agreement in subparagraph (b) of paragraph 2. Paragraph 2 states:

[Senator Frith.]

Furthermore, the representatives of the Parties will meet before March 15, 1987 in order to initiate negotiations with a view to concluding, concurrently:

(a) a Compromis (Special Agreement) which shall submit to compulsory third party settlement the dispute regarding the maritime claims by the two countries off the coasts of St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada;

(b) a procès-verbal establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive. These quotas will include cod quotas in NAFO Divisions 2J+3KL.

The only other aspect we might emphasize is that, as Senator LeBlanc of New Brunswick stated, the first signature is that of Lorne Clark. I am not sure whether the minister, in his answers, told us who the other signatories are and their offices, but their names are Gilbert Guillaume and Bob Applebaum. He might give us that information, if he has not done so already.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable Senator Frith, you asked earlier that a certain document be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Would you specify to which document you were referring? There are two here.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is a document which Senator Doody added later after "Reading of Petitions". He asked for leave to add another document.

[English]

It is the "Unofficial English Translation Subject to Confirmation with the French."

[Translation]

The French text is that of the agreed record.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Are both documents to be printed as an appendix?

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Please. There is no need to translate the agreed record because we have an unofficial translation. For this reason, I suggest that this not be translated, but included in both the French and English versions.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT

ST. BONIFACE, MANITOBA—CLOSING OF HOG DIVISION OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would ask him whether he could make appropriate representations to the cabinet with respect to Canada Packers in Winnipeg, in the St. Boniface community, where the hog division of Canada Packers is going to close its doors. The reason the company is being forced to close the doors of the hog plant, it claims, is because of a grant from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to another group in Manitoba which opened a new plant of the same type. This has caused a problem such that 340 employees will lose their jobs immediately. These are what we call the hourly wage earners. Because of the severance pay that the company is going to give them, they will not be eligible for unemployment insurance payments. The balance of the employees, who are paid by salary, will be let go by April 10. A total of 710 employees will be out of work. I would suggest that most of those people have made a career of working in that plant. They have made mortgage commitments and so on, and this closure will affect their lives and the lives of their families drastically. These people have no other chance, it seems, for employment elsewhere.

It is for that reason that I plead with the Leader of the Government to make some representations to the cabinet whereby some relief could be given. Perhaps the government could aid Canada Packers or these employees in some fashion. Honourable senators can rest assured that in a community like mine the loss of 710 jobs—jobs paying fairly good salaries, I might add—really does constitute quite a disaster. I repeat my request to the Leader of the Government to make appropriate representations in cabinet so that those people who are being laid off can be given some consideration.

SHIPBUILDING

DESIGN OF CLASS 8 ICEBREAKER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I believe some consideration has been given to going offshore for the design of the Class 8 icebreaker that will be built in Canada in the near future. I know that the government leader will not have this information at hand, but I ask him to find out if this is true. Is consideration being given to going offshore, or does the government intend to have the design carried out in Canada and to use the technology that has been developed in this country for the building of the icebreaker?

will not be long delayed.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SEVENTY-SIXTH CONFERENCE, BUENOS AIRES

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 16, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the 76th Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, from 6th to 11th October, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, it gives me great pleasure to report on the Seventy-Sixth Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held in Buenos Aires between October 6 and 11, 1986.

The Canadian delegation was made up of Mr. Benno Friesen, Mr. Bob Hicks, Mrs. Carole Jacques, Mr. Howard McCurdy and Mr. Marcel Prud'homme representing the House of Commons; Senator Rhéal Bélisle, Senator Eymard Corbin and myself representing the Senate. Mr. Friesen was the chairman of the Canadian delegation and I was vice-chairman. The delegation was accompanied by Mr. Stephen Knowles of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat, who served as our executive secretary, and by Mrs. Barbara Reynolds who served as our adviser.

The meetings of the Association of Secretaries-General of Parliament were held concurrently with the IPU Conference. Canada was represented at those meetings by Mr. Charles Lussier, the Clerk of the Senate. I would like to extend a word of congratulations to Mr. Lussier on his election as First Vice-President of the Association of Secretaries-General.

Before leaving home, the Canadian delegation was briefed by officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Department of National Defence, the Canadian Red Cross Society and the International Committee of the Red Cross. We also received background papers and bibliographies prepared by the Library of Parliament. In Argentina we were ably assisted by the staff of the Canadian Embassy. The Ambassador, Her Excellency Mrs. Louise Frechette, invited us to the embassy to review the current political and economic situation in Argentina as well as the status of Canadian-Argentine relations. She noted the similarities between our two countries, particularly with respect to geography and natural resources. There is increased interest on the part of the Argentine government to examine the Canadian experience in regional economic development, because Argentina has numerous isolated communities.

Madame Frechette is a very capable individual and Canada should be proud of her work in Argentina. I would also like to mention the assistance provided by Mr. Jacques Crête, political counsellor at our embassy, who attended our daily briefing sessions at 7.45 a.m. and provided invaluable assistance throughout the conference.

The Republic of Argentina, which has an area of over 2.8 million square kilometres, occupies a large portion of the South American continent. Its population is around 30 million, of whom one third live in the capital, Buenos Aires. Its main exports are wheat, corn, sugar, linseed, cotton, beef, leather and wool, while its main imports are farm implements, fertilizers and chemical products.

Trade between our two countries amounts to $137 million, with Canada importing twice as much from Argentina as we export to it. In 1985 we imported almost $90.8 million worth of goods, of which $36.7 million, or 40 per cent of the total, consisted of manufactured and semi-manufactured products in leather. Canada exported $46 million worth of goods to Argentina consisting of general purpose turbines and motors, auto parts, sulphur and wood pulp.

The Canadian government has actively supported the efforts of Canadian companies in Argentina. Recently the Canadian International Development Agency approved funding for a traffic control study in the City of Rosario, a liquefied petroleum gas processing plant study in Bahia Blanca, and an energy management systems viability study. The cumulative value of those studies approaches $1 million.

In 1985 the Foreign Minister of Argentina visited Canada. Our Secretary of State for External Affairs paid a reciprocal visit last September. A formal invitation has been extended to President Alfonsín, who indicated that he would like to come to Canada in 1987.

The day before the conference began, Mr. Friesen and I represented Canada at a meeting of the Twelve-Plus Group. Basically, this is a meeting of the western and like-minded delegations. It began a few years ago with the ten members of the European Economic Community, and subsequently countries from western Europe, North America and the Pacific region decided to join. The name "Ten-Plus" was chosen because the group was formed from the ten members of the European Economic Community plus a number of other countries. The name was changed to the Twelve-Plus at our last conference in Mexico City in recognition of the recent admission of Portugal and Spain to membership in the EEC.

The Twelve-Plus discussed the following matters: the agenda of the Seventy-Sixth Conference; the possibility of a joint resolution concerning items 3 and 4 on the agenda; the chairmanship of the Twelve-Plus Group; the report of the working group of Canada, Italy and Switzerland on a new strategy for IPU; enlargement of the Twelve-Plus Group; a report from the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security held in Bonn in May, 1986; items for the agenda of the next conference; modification of the statutes and rules of the IPU; support for the work of the Special Committee on Violations of the Human Rights of Parliamentarians; a publication on the occasion of the centenary of the IPU; and co-operation among Twelve-Plus members between conferences.

During the conference I served on an ad hoc committee of four persons to prepare proposals on the funding and chairmanship of the Twelve-Plus. At the present time the costs are paid by the country which chairs the Twelve-Plus, but it was felt that some countries might be reluctant to accept the chairmanship of the group because of the high administrative costs. It was agreed that all members should share the costs and that the chairmanship would rotate alphabetically beginning with Norway in 1988. Spain will continue to chair the Twelve-Plus meetings until the end of 1987, making it a record of three consecutive years. We are grateful to the Spanish group for providing leadership to the Twelve-Plus while its members were trying to sort out a way for the succession to the chairmanship.

I also served on the working group of Canada, Italy and Switzerland which presented a short report on a new strategy for the IPU, including new proposals on the format and rules. The Twelve-Plus decided to forward those suggestions to the executive by way of a letter to the president.

The Twelve-Plus also agreed to accept the invitation of the West German group to hold a special meeting in Berlin in March, 1987 as part of the celebrations of the 750th anniversary of the city.

The opening ceremony of the Seventy-Sixth Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union took place in the Colon Theatre on the morning of Monday, October 6, in the presence of His Excellency the President of the Republic, Dr. Raul Ricardo Alfonsín. His Excellency Dr. Alfonsín; Senator Edison Otero, President of the Argentinian IPU group; Mr. Hans Stercken, President of the Inter-Parliamentary Council; and Mrs. De Guerrero, representing the United Nations, addressed the assembly.

Following the inaugural ceremony, the Inter-Parliamentary Council met and welcomed Angola and El Salvador to membership in the Union. It also readmitted Bangladesh. The report of the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security was reviewed. Subsequently the council unanimously passed a resolution presented jointly by the British and Hungarian delegations recognizing the results of the security conference and welcoming the forthcoming meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev.

During the first plenary session, the conference considered requests for possible inclusion as supplementary items on the agenda. Eight items were suggested: the impact of the new critical situation in the Middle East; the preservation of the international legal order, especially the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice of The Hague; the transformation of the Mediterranean area into a zone of peace; the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union; the summit talks; an international conference of peace in the Middle East; the subsidization of agricultural products; and the cessation of all nuclear explosions. The last item was accepted on the agenda.

[Translation]

Resolutions in the area of international human rights and decolonization were also on the agenda. Mrs. Jacques dealt with the international human rights issue. She emphasized that Canada has always actively defended international human rights and strived to respect the humanitarian principles codified in various international conventions.

Over 120 nations, 50 non-government organizations and 11 national liberation movements had participated in the 1974 conference to draft the two memoranda annexed to the 1949 Geneva Conventions. So far, some 60 countries have ratified or adhered to either one of these memoranda.

The draft resolution presented by the Canadian delegation urged nations who have not yet joined to take the necessary steps to ratify the two memoranda. In this connection, Mrs. Jacques reviewed the initiatives taken by Canada, including the work carried out by our interdepartmental committee responsible for studying the implications of each clause of both memoranda.

Finally, she strongly urged all nations to abide by the basic humanitarian principles by signing the memoranda and meeting their obligations.

[English]

Mr. Hicks and Mr. McCurdy spoke on decolonization. Mr. Hicks pointed out that Canadian parliamentarians and their governments have supported the principle of the right of colonial people to self-determination and to independence if that is their desired choice. Canada has condemned the policy and practice of apartheid in South Africa as a gross violation of fundamental human rights. He reviewed the various attempts over the past year to deal with the escalating situation in South Africa, including the meeting of the Commonwealth heads of government in Nassau, the Eminent Persons Group, and the Commonwealth Leaders' meeting in London. With reluctance, Canada has agreed to implement economic sanctions as a means of obtaining action to end apartheid. There is also much concern that some of the front line states will be seriously hurt by sanctions. He concluded by urging the wider economic community to join with Canada in sending a clear message to Pretoria by adopting strong, effective economic measures to help bring apartheid to an end.

Mr. McCurdy pointed out that although 1986 has been designated as the International Year of Peace, there is no peace for people in South Africa, Namibia, Angola or the front line states who are victims of the outlawed apartheid regime. There has been angry condemnation of apartheid, but some nations have been paralyzed in their response by feigned concern about the cost of sanctions to the very people who have demanded them. Canada will be hurt a little by its loss of trade with South Africa, but the situation is very different for the front line states. He referred to the two parliamentary committees which have recommended the immediate severing of all economic relations with South Africa and aid for front line states hurt because of retaliation by the Botha regime. He urged total commitment to effective mandatory sanctions and to financial and other aid for those nations whose sacrifices in the fight against apartheid and South African tyranny are greater than ours.

In the debate on the general world situation, Mr. Friesen and I both spoke. Mr. Friesen congratulated the Argentine Inter-Parliamentary Group on their hospitality in hosting the conference. Noting that 1986 has been designated as the International Year of Peace, he underscored the importance of pressing toward this goal. But this should not be seen as man's greatest hunger. The struggle against apartheid as well as the fight for freedom in Afghanistan could eventually lead to peace. Man's greatest hunger is for freedom. Only through free expression can man's spirit find its fullest development.

I spoke about the meeting of the cabinet ministers from the GATT countries in Uruguay to set guidelines for a new round of talks on removing barriers to trade. As the talks began, there was fear that the contentious issues would have the subscribers to GATT deeply divided. That these nations were able to negotiate new guidelines is a tribute to the sense of commitment and co-operation among the trading nations. I also noted the troubled situation in Central America and the influence of the super-powers in that region. Canada does not approve of third party intervention anywhere in Central America. It supports the Contadora initiative. Differences between the parties should be resolved peacefully through dialogue.

Referring to the malfunction of a submarine-launched Soviet ballistic missile, the Chernobyl nuclear accident and the explosion of the U.S. spaceship Challenger, I spoke about the inherent dangers in modern technology. For these and other reasons, there is increasing pressure on the superpowers to move towards an arms limitation agreement. The preliminary meeting between Mr. Gorbachev and Mr. Reagan is an encouraging sign, as is the announcement in Stockholm of the agreement of the 35 member countries of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

There were also some committee meetings dealing with specific questions, one of which considered the contribution of parliamentarians to the cessation of all nuclear explosions. Mr. Prud'homme assisted with the committee work and served on the drafting committee. The Soviet delegation submitted a draft resolution and amendments to this resolution were proposed by several countries. There was some concern about a clause in the U.S.S.R. text referring to the moratorium on nuclear testing. At the suggestion of Mr. Prud'homme, the drafting on the subject was suspended until the rest of the text had been discussed. Agreement on a suitable reference to a moratorium was then achieved. The revised resolution was unanimously adopted by the full committee and by the plenary session.

At the Seventy-fifth Inter-Parliamentary Conference in Mexico City, it was decided to hold a one-day meeting of the women parliamentarians who will attend the next conference to allow for a full and complete discussion of the various agenda items. Canada was represented by Mrs. Jacques. Among the items discussed were: the participation of women parliamentarians in activities of IPU, procedures for implementing the resolution adopted at the September 1985 meeting on the progress of initiatives and measures to promote equal rights and responsibilities for men and women, and the emancipation of women in the world of work, especially with respect to employment, training and promotion opportunities.

The second item, the preparation of a report on measures to promote equality between men and women, is one where the Canadian group has taken a lead role at previous conferences. Mrs. Jacques continued this initiative by presenting a draft questionnaire for use in collecting data for the report to be presented in September 1987. On the subject of women in the world of work, Mrs. Jacques reported on Canada's new employment equity legislation as well as the requirements for measures to encourage the employment of women in companies contracting with the federal government.

During the conference a meeting of the European groups and those of Canada and the United States took place to review implementation of the final resolutions of the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on European Co-operation and Security held last May in Bonn and developments in East-West relations since that date. Mr. Friesen and I attended this session. Participants expressed their satisfaction with the decision of President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev to meet in Reykjavik and felt that there was more cause for optimism in relations between the super-powers than there had been a few months ago.

The Council resumed work on the final morning by observing one minute of silence for the victims of the El Salvador earthquake. It then considered invitations from Portugal, Nicaragua and Costa Rica to host the next IPU Conference. The latter country withdrew its invitation and voting began on the other two choices. The results were Nicaragua—80, Portugal—70. The council also voted on names to be forwarded to the plenary session for consideration as members of the executive committee. The Report of the Special Committee on Violations of the Human Rights of Parliamentarians was received. It was gratifying to learn that two imprisoned parliamentarians had been released since the committee's last meeting in July. The proposal by the Federal Republic of Germany to amend the Statutes of the Union to encourage greater participation of women in delegations, in the council and in the executive committee was referred to a committee.

At the final plenary session there was a tribute to Mr. Pio-Carlo Terenzio who would retire as secretary general of the union at the end of 1986. The reports of the various committees were also received.

The Inter-Parliamentary Union, during its history, through its conferences has brought together parliamentarians from every region of the globe. During these meetings, members have had opportunities to get to know one another and to learn at first-hand each other's point of view on the many issues which trouble the world. The union has also successfully promoted a number of international initiatives—for example, the founding of the International Court of Justice. Through its conferences, the union has focused the attention of the world on the many crucial issues which stand in the way of advancing peace, security and harmony among nations. The strength of the union lies in the fact that its members are representatives of parliaments and not of governments. As such, they are in the unique position of being able to influence their respective parliaments as well as fellow delegates at union conferences.

In 1989 the Inter-Parliamentary Union will be celebrating the 100th anniversary of its founding. I hope Canada will find an appropriate way of celebrating this very important event. I am proud of the work the IPU has accomplished and I look forward to its continued success.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION, ISTANBUL, TURKEY

Hon. Duff Roblin rose, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, December 17, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the 32nd Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Istanbul, Turkey, from 14th to 18th November, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, it is the responsibility, I believe, of members of the Senate who attend meetings on behalf of the Senate to take an early opportunity to report on what transpired, even though much of what one has to say can hardly be described as news. I would like to offer a few comments on the 32nd meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly which was held in Istanbul on November 14 to 18 last, because this was the first occasion on which I had attended an important gathering of this kind as a member of the Canadian parliamentary delegation. I have no doubt that my perhaps somewhat impressionistic views as a newcomer to the proceedings and the significance of the assembly will be well balanced by the views of Senators Hastings, Haidasz and Lefebvre, who, I am pleased to say, were also part of the Canadian delegation and whom I am willing to describe as veterans of the assembly. I can report that their considerable experience appeared to good advantage for the reputation of Canada and for the progress of the proceedings.

One of the first things that struck me deals with that very point: the depth of knowledge, the range of opinion and the capacity for working together which was demonstrated by the delegates. I suppose everyone knows that there are 14 nations in the North Atlantic Assembly, but delegates were not there so much as representatives of governments—although perhaps in part as representatives of nations—but certainly as representatives of parliaments, and they brought with them a variety of political opinions and much skill in debate and discussion. These men and women did not represent governments as such and thus were considerably freer, I suggest, in offering differing opinions and were well able to express a variety of shades of democratic politics and philosophy.

For me, this freedom of expression offered a useful opportunity for a delegate to be exposed to the political forces that are at work within the Western Alliance, because I found that there certainly was no uniformity in the views that were expressed. There was, however, a very considerable capacity and willingness to search for a consensus which, though not always arrived at, was usually achieved in the end. This variety of personality and of national idiosyncrasy and of philosophical leanings of the various delegates to the assembly found its expression, of course, in the proceedings of the five or six committees into which the work of the assembly was divided.

I was on the political committee, and I can report that in my committee—and no doubt in the others—we were asked to deal with draft papers that had been prepared in advance by various members of the committees, in which we examined a very wide variety of subjects dealing with the North Atlantic Assembly. We either agreed or did not agree with those recommendations and, where we did agree, they were passed on to the plenary sessions where, as you might expect, they received final consideration. I would like to say that if any member of the Senate has an interest in the details of those recommendations or the proceedings of the committees, those can certainly be provided.

In any event, the business of the assembly as a whole, of course, was to deal with this wide variety of resolutions and other domestic matters such as the election of officers. I can report that the new president is a gentleman called Ton Frinking who comes from the Netherlands. However, it seemed to me that the real meat or the real subject for thought that was given to us, over and above these relatively routine proceedings, was to be found in three addresses that were delivered, and they are worthy, I think, of comment. The first was given by General Bernard Rogers, who is the military head of NATO. The second was given by Lord Carrington, who is the General Secretary of the organization, and the third was a speech delivered by Mr. J.W. Mollema who is a minister in the Foreign Office of West Germany.

General Rogers gave us an exceedingly frank and open expression of the military point of view, as you might well expect. He pulled no punches as to his views on the position of NATO and expressed what, I suppose, has become an expected observation on the part of a man in his position with respect to what he conceived to be the imbalance of power between NATO and the Warsaw alliance and conventional arms. While I know there is a good deal of dispute in the world as to the exact nature of that imbalance, it certainly was clear to me, at any rate after listening to him, that the imbalance was to the detriment of NATO and to the advantage of the Warsaw alliance. He also made it very clear that until this imbalance was substantially rectified, there was little to be said or done about the flexible response theory by which the Western powers rely on a nuclear back-up to come to their aid if they should be engaged in conventional warfare and find that the imbalance indeed exists and weighs against them. He expressed the opinion—and I must say I support it—that peace still depends now, as it has done for the last 30 or 40 years, on a credible nuclear deterrent. Therefore, nuclear disarmament and the equalization of conventional forces in Europe are indeed closely intertwined, and I shall make a brief reference to this fact again before I conclude.

He gave us to understand that the main conventional operational problem that he faces, besides this one of inequality between the two sides, is his ability to sustain a conventional battle for a protracted period of time. He has a modest target of securing for the NATO forces a sufficiency and back-up of men and materials to enable a battle to be conducted for 30 days, but that relatively modest total has not been reached as yet. We know from our discussions during meetings of the Senate Committee on National Defence how badly positioned we Canadians are in respect of this very same matter—our ability to sustain a battle should we become involved in one. But he did not go beyond his military brief.

Lord Carrington gave another view of the world environment in which NATO finds itself, I think particularly influenced by the fact that the Reykjavik Summit had recently been concluded with the consequences of which we are all aware. He expressed some optimism that the logjam, which for too long has impeded progress in arms control, showed some signs—at least to him and I think to some of the rest of us—that it might be breaking up, at least to a degree, and that we might expect in the relatively near future that the Reykjavik initiative would not be lost but would be the basis on which further developments might be expected. Lord Carrington expressed his opinion that the view of the Soviet Union that nuclear arms control should be absolutely linked to the question of the Strategic Defense Initiative was an obstacle to progress, as one might well expect.

I found it rather interesting to read in a report the other day that Andrei Sakharov had come to the same conclusion in Moscow. He is quoted as saying that to lose a possible disarmament agreement today because of fears linked to the creation of SDI in the 21st century is not constructive. I agree with that.

I think there are some small signs that maybe some formula may be found to finesse the SDI question when the great powers get together, as they are doing now, to discuss ways and means of building on the Reykjavik activities. I for one certainly hope that may be the case.

Lord Carrington also made an interesting observation to the effect that some of the policies being advocated by opposition parties within the NATO circle might be the cause of some serious difficulty, and that if they were carried through in a unilateral manner by those countries concerned, should a change of government take place in those countries, they might pose the severest strain on the collective security system that NATO represents.

He didn't mention Canada, he didn't mention the British Labour Party, although perhaps he might have done both. I, myself, will make no reference to those interesting matters in the course of this report.

Senator Murray: Did he mention the Liberal convention of last November?

Senator Roblin: I thought it discreet not to mention that at the moment.

The representative of the West German government made a most interesting speech. His contribution was to offer an appreciation, as he saw things then, as to the changing policies, if indeed they are, with respect to the Gorbachev regime in the Soviet Union. He expressed the opinion that the key to internal Russian politics had to be the capacity of the government to inspire the citizenship to be ready to increase their output and develop personal initiative and responsibility in the economic affairs of that nation, and to do so on an unprecedented scale.

I suppose that is not an unfair observation, but none of us at the moment knows whether, in fact, that will happen, and neither did the gentleman who spoke to us on that occasion. He offered the view, and I agreed with it, that the Soviet Union was not on the verge of collapsing, but also that without reform—and I think he went so far as to say “not in the economic sphere only but in the political sphere”—in those two spheres—that country would not be successful in keeping abreast of the technical and economic development taking place in other parts of the world. I suspect that to be true, otherwise, why would Mr. Gorbachev be stirring his stumps at all? But for the present, he reported that there was no evidence of fundamental change in Soviet interests, that they were still concerned to consolidate their hegemony in the socialist world; that they were anxious to maintain a global presence; that they were not averse to any weakening of the cohesion of the Western Alliance; and that they were, indeed, obsessed—I think I extracted that word from his statement—with the idea of military and political equality with the United States of America.

He said that for our part we should avoid outdated, hostile stereotyping, and that we should seek careful and realistic examination of the policies of the Soviet Union as events unfold, which seemed to me to be a reasonable proposition in the circumstances.

Although Herr Molleman did not say it, I noticed that Andrei Sakharov did, because in the same interview to which I previously referred he is credited with saying that the West must never give anything away for nothing; this is not blackmail on the part of the West, it is no more than helping those progressive tendencies in the Soviet Union which, with great difficulty, are trying to assert themselves. There is food for thought in that remark.

These three speeches, plus everything else that I heard at the Assembly, led me to reflect a little on Canada's position and policy in NATO and to think about why we were there at all. I recall that some 40 years after the event which brought us into NATO there are people and some politicians who forget the reasons we entered into NATO in the first place. There are some of us who succumb to wishful thinking, which obscures the reality of the real political world in which we live.

I recall, as I suppose all honourable senators do, that NATO did not come from nowhere, and that when Louis St. Laurent sanctioned our joining that body and led us into it, he did so because he had had the experience of two great world wars in which Canada was intimately involved, an experience which no doubt guided him, because history makes it clear that Canada does not, and Canadians do not—and, indeed, I suppose I could go so far as to say cannot—defend Canada by themselves. They never have done so; not ever in our history. Our country is too large, our means are too few. We perforce must share with others in what was called, when I was a little younger, collective security. That, to me, is the kind of thing that NATO speaks of.

Our policy as Canadians, our goal, to paraphrase John Holmes, a wise man in his field, is to work for the preservation of the kind of world order in which countries like ours, widely exposed and living on world trade, have the best chance to grow in peace, and that we need an international world order favourable to Canada to maintain that situation. The submission is that NATO helps us, in part, to do just that very thing.

Although a great deal was not said about it at the meeting, there was an unspoken agenda, and it is in the minds of everybody here, I have no doubt. The members of the Assembly, although they did not focus on the subject in a direct way on this occasion, were not unaware of the overarching issues of war and peace, which are epitomized in what we saw take place at Reykjavik, and what we seek in the days that lie ahead. The world longs for an end to nuclear weapons, or, if that is out of reach, at least for a reduction in the immense overkill that threatens the world. In the private conversations that took place in the corridors, it was made clear how great a concern the representatives had in that respect, and also how that issue impinges profoundly on the collective security system that NATO itself represents.

The Europeans, in particular, were anxious to underline and to emphasize the connection that there is between nuclear disarmament and the conventional system that they have for the defence of Europe, as well as the need to proceed to some kind of balanced conventional force in Europe, and also the fact that that necessity derives even more importance when one considers the implications of the Reykjavik conversations.

While Canada is not the prime mover in these momentous issues, we are not entirely silent or disinterested. We must lend all the support and all the encouragement we can to reinforce and to reinvigorate the initiatives that we saw started at Reykjavik last year, because change and movement we must surely strive for. However, Canada outside NATO is surely not going to make us any safer and it is not going to make the world any safer.

The structures of NATO are surely not perfect, but I think wise men will not abandon the best structures we know until we have some reasonable assurance that there is something better we can grasp.

I returned from this 32nd Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly impressed with its capacity to refresh the lines of communication between the parliamentarians of the 14 countries in the system; with some appreciation of the capacity of the assembly to examine differences, to exchange political opinions between parties of various philosophies as distinct from the views of the government which lie behind them; and an appreciation of the opportunity that it provides for education and enlargement of our concept of what the NATO system means to us and to the rest of the world.

The Assembly, I think, can help that institution which, like all others, after they have been around for a while, becomes bureaucratized—to use a common word which perhaps explains my meaning—to do its part to retain the vigour, the adaptability and the freshness that we must bring to our consideration and reconsideration of all the momentous issues involved in the defence of the West and to revive or reanimate the spirit of community among its members, which is the secret of its great success.

I conclude that the collective security which NATO provides is, in the present state of the world, appropriate to world peace and in the best interests of Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered debated.

AUDITOR GENERAL

REPORT REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, the motion before you today, of which I gave notice yesterday, reads as follows:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the Report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1986, tabled in the Senate on 28th October, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-77).

Of course I could make a long speech to support this motion, but I shall refrain and merely refer to two documents that support this request, the first being the Rules of the Senate of Canada, on page 27, rule 67(1), which reads as follows:

The Senate Committee on National Finance, composed of twelve members, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, to which shall be referred, if there is a motion to that effect, bills, messages, petitions, inquiries, papers and other matters relating to federal estimates generally, including:

(i) national accounts and the report of the Auditor General;

(ii) government finance.

As honourable senators have heard, according to the Rules of the Senate of Canada, the Senate Committee on National Finance is authorized to examine the Auditor General's Report.

I would now like to refer this chamber to the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance of Wednesday, May 14, 1986, where we find the committee's sixteenth report, with which honourable senators are of course familiar, dated Wednesday, May 28, 1986. The report lists the witnesses who were asked to appear before the committee, including those for the Treasury Board, the Department of Finance, Revenue Canada and the Office of the Auditor General of Canada.

The report itself is rather long, so I will not read the whole report. I would like to read the conclusion, because it supports the motion before you this afternoon. The conclusion appears on page 49:11 of Issue No. 49 under B.5 Conclusion, and reads as follows:

The Committee believes that the recommendations in this report are a logical extension of the comments made in the Nielsen Task Force report Services and Subsidies to Business and the comments made in the 1984 and 1985 Auditor General's reports. However, it is also aware that all of these reports, comments and recommendations are only the beginning; sustained efforts by Parliament will be required to ensure that the real cost of these tax expenditures are no longer represented by guesses nor their total effects a mystery. In this regard, the 1986 report of the Auditor General is expected to contain a major chapter on tax expenditures and Mr. Dye has agreed to appear before the Committee to explain his findings.

Now that the report has been tabled, the Senate Committee on National Finance would like to hear again from the Auditor General, Mr. Dye, to pursue the representations made on the occasion of his previous report.

That is why I ask the Senate's permission to have this order of reference adopted today.

Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 440)

AGREED RECORD OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND FRENCH REPRESENTATIVES WITH RESPECT TO THE CONDITIONS FOR APPLICATION OF THE CANADA-FRANCE FISHING AGREEMENT

UNOFFICIAL ENGLISH TRANSLATION SUBJECT TO CONFIRMATION WITH THE FRENCH

Negotiations were held from October 1986 to January 1987 between Canadian and French representatives in order to determine, concurrently, the conditions for application of the March 27, 1972 Canada-France Treaty after December 31, 1986, and the process to lead to settlement of the dispute between France and Canada with regard to the maritime claims of the two countries off the coasts of Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon.

At the conclusion of these discussions the two Parties agreed on the following:

1. No agreement has yet been reached between the two delegations with regard to application of the 1972 treaty in 1987.

Canada has unilaterally established fishing quotas by Notes Verbales of December 1986 and January 1987. France has protested such action by a Note Verbale of January 1987. The negotiations are continuing.

2. Furthermore, the representatives of the Parties will meet before March 15, 1987 in order to initiate negotiations with a view to concluding, concurrently:
 - a) a Compromis (Special Agreement) which shall submit to compulsory third party settlement the dispute regarding the maritime claims by the two countries off the coasts of St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada;
 - b) a procès-verbal establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive. These quotas will include cod quotas in NAFO Divisions 2J+3KL.
3. The negotiations shall be pursued to a successful conclusion with the greatest dispatch. The procès-verbal shall, if possible, be finalized before September 30, 1987 and the Compromis (Special Agreement) before December 31, 1987. The Compromis (Special Agreement) and the procès-verbal shall come into force on the same date. Each will be contingent on the other.

4. It has also been agreed that Canadian and French scientists will meet shortly in order to prepare a report on the state of the cod stock and the annual total allowable catch (TAC) limits in NAFO Division 3Ps in conformity with the attached annex.
5. The arrangement concluded in the form of an exchange of diplomatic notes dated June 20 and 28, 1984 pursuant to which each Party will abstain from regulating the vessels flying the flag of the other Party in the zone claimed mutually by France and Canada will remain in place until the rendering of the decision on the dispute regarding the maritime claims of the two countries off the coasts of Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon.
6. This Agreed Record, (including the Annex) is without prejudice to the legal positions of either Party in particular as regards:
 - the maritime claims of France and Canada off the coasts of the two countries;
 - the application and the interpretation of the March 27, 1972 Treaty;
 - the positions which they may take in the negotiation of the procès-verbal mentioned in Paragraph 2(b) above.

No provision in this Record may be referred to with regard to the dispute mentioned in paragraph 2(a) above.

ANNEX

MANDATE FOR THE CANADIAN AND FRENCH SCIENTISTS
WITH REGARD TO NAFO DIVISION 3Ps

The Canadian and French scientists:

- a) shall evaluate the state of the cod stock
- b) shall formulate, if possible, a recommendation on the TAC for cod for 1987
- c) on the basis of the current size of the biomass and the catches, shall forecast the future development of that biomass and shall formulate, if possible, recommendations for the TAC of cod for the years 1988 to 1991.

Note Verbale

The Canadian Embassy presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and refers to the Embassy's Note Verbale No. 353 of December 30, 1986.

The Embassy has the honour to inform the Ministry that, in exercising its right to establish fishing quotas in Canadian waters, Canada has decided that the 1987 allocations for France will be modified as follows:

Cod 2GH	3,200 mt
Cod 4RS 3Pn	2,300 mt
Cod 4Vn *	1,200 mt
Cod 4Vn (May-December)	100 mt

The Embassy emphasizes that these quotas exceed the legal obligations of Canada resulting from the Canada-France Fisheries Treaty of March 27, 1972 and have been granted only so as to facilitate the process leading to the settlement of the dispute between Canada and France over the maritime claims of the two States off the coasts of Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The Embassy advises that the cod allocations in NAFO Divisions 4RS+3Pn and 4Vn may be fished outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence in 1987 notwithstanding the geographic restrictions set out in Article 4(b) of the Canada-France Fisheries Treaty of March 27, 1972.

The Embassy also informs the Ministry that the prohibition against French fishing vessels in the Burgeo Bank sector of NAFO Division 3Ps has been removed, on the understanding that should difficulties arise in this sector, consultations will be held between Canada and France.

In addition, the cost of the fees for the licences issued by Canada to French fishing vessels will be calculated for 1987, as for previous years, on the basis of fishing activities carried out by these vessels in conformity with the quotas granted by the Canadian authorities.

The Canadian Embassy avails itself etc.

* The rules concerning the management of the stocks which were applied during the preceding years will be applicable.

UNOFFICIAL ENGLISH VERSION

French Note Verbale

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the Canadian Embassy and has the honour to refer to the Embassy's Notes Verbales No. 353 of December 30, 1986 and No. 026 of 27 January 1987.

The French authorities strongly protest the unilateral establishment by Canadian authorities of the fishing quotas allocated to France in Canadian waters for 1987. They consider such action to be contrary to both the letter and the spirit of the Treaty between Canada and France of March 27, 1972 and to the practice followed by the Parties in the application of this Treaty: the fishing quotas allocated annually to France by Canadian authorities have, in fact, always been established by the two countries by agreement and usually recorded in procès-verbaux, the most recent of which was signed on October 3, 1980. The French authorities also reserve their position as regards the interpretation given by Canada in its most recent Note concerning Article 4(b) of the Treaty of March 27, 1972.

Furthermore, the French authorities regret that the quotas Canada intends to allocate to France for 1987, both within and outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence, are so low. They consider that such quotas will not permit French vessels to benefit effectively from the permanent fishing rights to which France is entitled to in Canadian waters pursuant to Articles 2 and 4 of the Treaty of March 27, 1972.

The French authorities have taken note of the anticipated re-examination of the cost of the fishing licence fees, and the removal of the prohibition against French fishing on Burgeo Bank. They assure the Canadian authorities that in the event of difficulties in this sector, consultations will take place between France and Canada.

The French authorities trust that the continuation of discussions with the Canadian authorities will improve the current situation as soon as possible and permit a return to the proper application of the 1972 Treaty.

The French authorities point out that it is self-evident that the quotas allocated to France in sectors 3Ps and 4Vs cannot affect the part of these sectors which lie within the French economic zone off the coast of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself etc.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 458.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

NINTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the the following report:

Thursday, February 5, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

NINTH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its study of the Consultation Paper on Training, and the document entitled: "Employment Opportunities: Preparing Canadians for a Better Future", as authorized by the Senate on October 30, 1986. The said supplementary budget is as follows:

Transportation and Communications	$4,300.
-----------------------------------	----------

Respectfully Submitted,

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I propose to move that we consider this report at the next sitting of the Senate, so that in the meantime honourable senators will have an opportunity of reading the report. Then, when it comes up for consideration, they will be au courant.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Frith, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that I propose to move, with leave:

That the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada and France, recently tabled in the Senate, be referred to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing Ministers, officials and other interested parties, including provincial premiers.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I propose to move the adjournment of the debate if the honourable senator does not intend to speak to this matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, notice has just been given that the motion will be moved later this day. So, it will come up under "Motions" in due course when, I am sure, Senator MacEachen will speak to it, and we can discuss it at that time.

Senator Doody's usual motion for adjournment might better wait until we have sorted out whether we want to proceed with the motion. If the Senate decides that it wants to deal with this motion and deal with the matter in Committee of the Whole, we might want to sit next week in order to do so. I do not mean to tie the deputy leader's hands at all, but I suggest that the two are interlocked, and we might want to leave both motions until later.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would like to move another motion, honourable senators, if we have finished with this particular item.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand, Senator Doody, that you want it debated later this day?

Senator Doody: No, I have another motion that I want to move. I understand that this item will come up later this day, anyway, under "Motions." However, I have another motion I want to put, with leave, which is on a different matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-37

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-37, An Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as has been suggested, this is the time when we usually put the adjournment motion. However, I now ask that leave be given to revert later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—LICENSING OF FRENCH VESSELS IN DISPUTED ZONE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government with respect to the issues surrounding the agreement between Canada and France on fisheries and boundaries.

The Minister of Justice, in the other place, referred to an agreement concluded by an exchange of notes between Canada and France in June, 1984, providing that there would be no boarding of each other's vessels in the disputed zone south of St. Pierre et Miquelon. Then the Minister of Justice went on to say:

That is why today when France says it wants nine vessels licensed to fish in this disputed zone, 3PS, we license them.

I must say that I am at a loss to understand how the exchange of notes in 1984 providing for mutual restraint with respect to vessels of either country automatically leads, as the Minister of Justice says, to the issuance of licences to fish in that area. That is why I am asking the Leader of the Government if he can tell us how such an exchange of notes on boarding restraint could be interpreted as determining the issuance of fishing licences.

I am not aware of the statement attributed to the Minister of Justice, to which the Leader of the Opposition refers, but I shall make inquiries.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that undertaking to provide some clarification of the relationship between the issuance of licences and the agreement of 1984.

EFFECT OF 1984 EXCHANGE OF NOTES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): There is another point that I want to raise with the Leader of the Government and it relates to the confusion that appears to exist about the implications of the exchange of notes in 1984. There is a suggestion, I believe made in the other place by ministers, that somehow the exchange of notes in 1984 has tied the hands of the government, and were it not for that exchange of notes the government would be free now to do many things, including boarding French vessels as they overfish in the disputed zone.

It is true that the exchange of notes in 1984 did obligate both governments not to forcibly board vessels of the other country as long as negotiations were in process on the boundary dispute. But what I want to know is: Why did the government extend the policy of non-boarding now that negotiations on the boundary dispute have ceased?

TERRORISM

INTERNATIONALLY PROTECTED PERSONS— FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL JURISDICTIONAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Perhaps he recalls the hostage-taking incident last year involving the Bahamian High Commissioner in Ottawa. That gave rise to an embarrassing situation, because it was not clear whether the RCMP or the local Ottawa Police Force would take charge. In 1984, when the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act was adopted, specific reference was made to the question as to which police force would be responsible for the protection of internationally protected persons where acts of terrorism were directed against embassies and consular offices. Subsection 61(2) gives specific guidance to the Solicitor General, asking him or her to enter into agreements with provincial police forces in order to clarify the situation.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate provide the Senate with information as to how many agreements have been finalized and with which law enforcement agencies and with which provinces?

MR. TERRY WAITE

SPECIAL EMISSARY OF ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY— RUMOURED TRAGIC DEVELOPMENTS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate has received any recent information on the condition and situation of Mr. Terry Waite. There have been some rumours to the effect that something tragic has happened recently. Is the government leader attempting to obtain for us any updated information on Mr. Waite?

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

PROPOSED NATIONAL FORUM—CURRENT STATUS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question concerning post-secondary education. Honourable senators will remember that just before Christmas the Leader of the Government gave us some information as to the progress of the discussions leading up to a possible national forum as was forecast in the Speech from the Throne. I wonder if the Leader of the Government, either today or as soon as possible, could bring us up to date on what arrangements have been made and what the present plans are.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will do that. Meanwhile, I can tell the honourable senator that so far as I am aware the proposal seems to have elicited quite a positive response from all quarters, including the provinces and post-secondary institutions. The Honourable David Crombie, the Secretary of State of Canada, is meeting this week with the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada on this matter and he may well have something to report in a day or two.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—STATUS OF MODERNIZATION PLAN

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government indicate to us the status of the second phase modernization of the Sydney Steel Corporation? There has been some discussion with respect to the $157 million that was to be spent on that particular project, 70 per cent to be paid by the federal government and 30 per cent by the Government of Nova Scotia. The agreement between the federal government and the Government of Nova Scotia, if I recall correctly, was signed in February 1986. Can the Leader of the Government tell us what the status is, because there seems to be a great deal of uncertainty in the community with respect to the community, the union and, indeed, the management.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH CN CONCERNING LONG-TERM RAIL CONTRACTS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: As a supplementary, can the Leader of the Government indicate that he is aware that there are ongoing discussions between Sysco and the federal crown corporation CN with respect to long-term commitments for rail contracts? If so, can he bring us up to date on that?

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—POSSIBILITY OF ANNOUNCEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Perhaps I may be permitted a final question, which is in two parts. I understand that the Prime Minister will be opening the Canada Winter Games in Cape Breton on February 15. Will the Prime Minister be attending the games? And will he be making an announcement with respect to Sysco modernization phase two, as well as any pending new agreement between CN and Sysco, during his visit to Sydney or prior to that time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not aware that the Prime Minister is going to Cape Breton for the opening of the Winter Games. The fact is that both matters to which the honourable senator refers—the Sysco modernization plan and Sysco's business with the Canadian National—have reached the stage where a decision and announcements are, as I say, imminent.

AEROSPACE—ALLOCATION OF CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I wish to address a question to the Leader of the Government regarding the aeronautics industry. We had some questions previously regarding the CF-18 contracts and, following on that, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Honourable Jake Epp, the minister from Manitoba, announced in Winnipeg recently that the contract to repair the CF-5 aircraft would be given to Winnipeg. That, of course, would be a very much smaller contract and of shorter duration.

However, what is of importance is that in the course of his comments the minister said that the government was committed to "ensuring an equitable regional distribution of our aerospace procurement requirements."

Meanwhile, at roughly the same time—either the day before or even within hours—another minister, the Honourable Marcel Masse, was speaking in Montreal and saying the reverse. He was saying that the aeronautics industry would be centred in Montreal.

This now leaves Manitoba in the position that it does not know where it stands. Traditionally, for many years the province has had approximately 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the aeronautics industry. We now find what appears to be a band-aid treatment to try to correct some of the very bad reactions to the CF-18 decision. But we have also been told that the centralization will be around Montreal. What, in fact, is the position of the government?

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there was an exchange on this matter the other day in the House of Commons in the course of which the Deputy Prime Minister stated that it is a policy of the government that economic development should take place across all the regions of Canada. In the case of the aerospace industry, as referred to by Senator Molgat, the Deputy Prime Minister said that Manitoba will be and is, indeed, a centre of excellence for repair and maintenance activities in that sector, as is Montreal on the manufacturing side.

Senator Molgat: I thank the minister for his reply. However, that does not answer the problem for Manitobans. The problem is that the contract given to Manitoba is on the CF-5 aircraft, an aging aircraft. That aircraft is going out. In fact, some people claim that it should never have been purchased in the first place. Be that as it may, this aircraft has been in the system for many years. We are not dealing here with continuing involvement but, rather, with treating a dying patient. That is all it is. There is no indication in any statement that we have seen that the government is committed to maintaining that kind of Manitoba involvement in light of the statements by Mr. Masse, who is contradicting what Mr. Epp has been telling us.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not agree that there is a contradiction at all. I refer Senator Molgat to the statement made by the Deputy Prime Minister. It seemed pretty clear to me that insofar as the Government of Canada has anything to say about it, we want to see Manitoba remain a centre of excellence on the repair and maintenance side of that industry.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

EMPLOYMENT

ST. BONIFACE, MANITOBA—CLOSING OF HOG DIVISION OF CANADA PACKERS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

My information is that the Canadian Employment and Immigration Council representatives met with Canada Packers Management in September and early December to discuss the assistance CEIC can provide to the employees. Intensive discussions with the company, the union, non-unionized workers and the provincial ministries of labour and employment took place throughout January. Agreement was reached with all parties on February 4 to use CEIC's Industrial Adjustment Service. The Industrial Adjustment Service will assist employer-employee committees to tap and organize every possible resource to help the workers prepare for and find new jobs. Committee costs will be divided equally between the company, CEIC and the Province of Manitoba. In addition, the St. Boniface Employment Centre has assigned an officer to work with the committees and to help the workers get access to any specialized services which the committees decide they need.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF CANADA BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doyle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the second reading of the Bill C-7, An Act respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend other Acts in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Bosa.)

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in speaking on Bill C-7, I should like, first, to congratulate Senator Doyle, who introduced this bill to the Senate, for the extensive historical background that he provided on the Archives. This is not a controversial bill, and in the course of my remarks I shall make reference to some of the aspects of the bill that could be improved and some clauses that could be clarified.

The Archives play a vital function within our society. By ensuring that historically important records are preserved, they allow our people to look into the past, acquire a better understanding of who they are and what they stand for and, it is hoped, help them to build a better and stronger society within which to live by drawing from both past successes and mistakes.

The former Dominion Archivist, Mr. Arthur Doughty, eloquently described the nature of archives over 50 years ago. He stated:

Of all the riches a country possesses, its archives are the most precious. They are the legacy of one generation to the next and the importance we give them is a measure of how civilized we are.

These words, which are as relevant today as they were then, give an idea of the challenge that is now before us, that is, of ensuring through strong legislative measures that Canada's heritage, rich and vibrant in its cultural diversity, will be preserved for our benefit, and the benefit of our children and our children's children.

[Translation]

Bill C-7, which we are considering today, known as the Archives of Canada Act, is one of those measures. It confirms and legislates the role of the Public Archives of Canada and allows for the many changes that have taken place since the present Public Archives Act was passed in 1912.

[English]

On balance, Bill C-7 is a welcome and long-awaited piece of legislation. It provides a solid legislative base for the all-important mission of the National Archives of Canada, which is now set out with far greater particularity under clause 4 than is the case under the existing legislation. It acknowledges the important responsibility of the National Archives of Canada in ensuring the preservation of our nation's documentary heritage by assisting other archives and archivists throughout Canada. It sets a standard for archival legislation and will serve as a useful model for other jurisdictions and organizations wishing to establish statutory authority for their archives.

It must be noted that the bill before us is a marked improvement over its original version, which was first tabled as Bill C-95 during the last session of Parliament. A number of significant changes were made in the course of its progress through the other place.

Foremost among these was the elimination of the provisions which potentially exempted from the archivist's effective control all records containing confidential information from foreign governments. Under these provisions, foreign governments would have been allowed to order the outright destruction of all records containing confidential information supplied by them or, alternatively, they could have blocked the transfer of such records to the National Archives. Consequently, many important Canadian records on international affairs could have been lost forever or suppressed indefinitely, irrespective of how much confidential foreign information these privileged documents actually contained.

These provisions, therefore, could have led not only to a seriously incomplete historical record of Canada's international relations but also it would have placed in the hands of foreign powers the right to decide what would and what would not become a part of our national heritage.

Fortunately, in light of the fierce opposition that was raised in relation to these totally unacceptable provisions which would have undermined Canada's sovereignty, the government was persuaded to remove them from the bill and it must be applauded for having done so.

Under the revised bill, therefore, all federal records to which the act applies will now be subject to the effective control of the National Archivist who, in accordance with his or her mandate, will objectively assess their content and ensure that all those records which have historical significance will be preserved for the generations to come.

Despite the changes that were made in the other place, there are still a number of outstanding concerns under the bill which require our careful examination.

First, the bill does not apply to all federal institutions. By virtue of the limited definition of "government institutions" under clause 2, it excludes from the jurisdiction of the National Archives the records of a number of historically important federal institutions. To name a few: crown corporations, such as the CBC, Air Canada and CN Rail; royal commissions of inquiry, the judiciary and the Canadian Parliament.

● (1430)

In the view of many, there should be no exceptions whatsoever to the authority of the National Archivist. They argue that whatever measures are needed to protect the possibly sensitive nature of the records of the institutions currently exempted under the bill can and should be prescribed under the access to information legislation.

Also, the definition of "ministerial records" under clause 2 is extremely vague and could be used to shield from the authority of the National Archivist a number of important ministerial records which should otherwise be routed through the archivist.

This definition provides:

"Ministerial record" means a record of a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who holds the office of a minister and that pertains to that office, other than a record that is of a personal or political nature or that is under the control of a government institution.

Indeed, sometimes it is extremely difficult to tell what is a record of a personal or political nature, on the one hand, and one which pertains to the office of a minister, on the other. Who will decide which is which? The minister or the National Archivist?

Under the current wording of this definition, one can certainly see that there is considerable leeway for withholding records, particularly since under clause 5(5) of the bill, the National Archivist can have access to confidential cabinet documents only with the consent of the Clerk of the Privy Council.

Clause 9, in turn, provides for the establishment of a National Archives Advisory Board consisting of the National Archivist, the National Librarian, the Secretary-General of the National Museums of Canada and "not more than seven other members appointed by the Minister from among persons who are experienced in archival matters."

What does it mean that he can appoint "not more" than seven? Does that mean he can appoint one, three or five? This clause should establish what the minister can and cannot do. If the minister is being given such leeway, there should be an explanation for the minister's having such leeway.

Although this provision was changed in the other place to make the creation of the advisory board mandatory rather than discretionary, as was earlier prescribed, there is still some room for improvement.

It is not clear as to how this board will be constituted, given the broad discretion that is vested in the minister to appoint "not more than" seven board members, in addition to the three named officials. In light of the important task to be served by this board—which is to advise and assist the National Archivist in carrying out the objects and functions of the National Archives—it might be desirable if the membership of the board were defined with greater precision.

Clause 8 is also unclear. It mandates, on the one hand, that a copy of all recordings requested by the National Archivist be deposited in the Archives within six months of the request, while, on the other, it fails to state precisely which recordings can be so requested. Will foreign works distributed in Canada be subject to the Archivist's authority? Or Canadian works only?

Particularly since acts of non-compliance are punishable by imprisonment of up to six months, it might be advisable if clause 8(5) were reworded to indicate clearly which recordings are encompassed within its terms.

Finally, a word as to the quality of the existing archival facilities in Canada. It is recognized that there is a dire need for improved facilities in which to store the records which this bill is designed to protect. Yet, there appears to be little, if any, effort directed at ensuring that these materials are properly housed. Surely, we should not allow this essential aspect of our Canadian heritage to be jeopardized in any way.

I took a tour of the facilities at the National Archives and found them to be appalling. On the eighth floor was an accumulation of documents covered with polyethylene to protect them from the rain because the roof was leaking. Also, there is no temperature control in those rooms. I think the government should make plans to construct proper facilities so that these documents are housed properly and all in one place.

The bill is not a perfect one; it could be improved. However, this revision is long overdue and it has, by and large, received the overwhelming support of the archival and research communities.

I understand that this bill will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, at which time we can deal with the anomalies in the bill in greater detail.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition), pursuant to notice of earlier this day, moved:

That the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France, recently tabled in the Senate, be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing Ministers and officials and other interested parties, including provincial Premiers.

He said: Honourable senators, I think I should give an explanation of the purpose and the timing of this particular motion. It is clear to all of us that there is deep interest, to put it in the most non-controversial terms, in the recently concluded agreement between Canada and France on fishery quotas and the boundary dispute.

The interest in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is intense, and the provincial governments have expressed great concern not only about the process leading up to the conclusion of the agreement but also about the substance of the agreement itself.

I have, as honourable senators know, been asking the Leader of the Government for information with respect to the agreement. I have no complaint about the cooperation which the Leader of the Government has extended, but on more than one occasion he has had to take the question put as notice, because the agreement itself, the determination of quotas, the boundaries and the fishing zones are complex, and it is understandable that he is not in a position to answer these questions immediately in the Senate. Nevertheless, there is a crying need for additional information. I certainly would like to have information, as would others. Therefore, this is a method by which we could interrogate, and receive information directly from, a minister or ministers, officials and other parties, including the provincial premiers, if they were prepared to say here what they have said elsewhere and to subject themselves to questioning on certain points.

Honourable senators, if there was ever a regional issue, this is it as far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned. We often say that the Senate has a regional orientation, a regional purpose, and that its mission is to give greater expression to regional interests. I need not say anything further to argue that this particular question of the fisheries and the future of the fisheries is regional in character, and this particular agreement affects particularly the Atlantic provinces.

Honourable senators, the question that can be raised—and I think it is a legitimate question—is: Why is it that the matter is not referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries? Indeed, the Leader of the Government made that suggestion himself. It appealed to me. However, I discovered that there were two things that seemed to interact, which made reference to the Committee of the Whole very desirable. The first is that the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries is presently engaged with an important reference and I understand it has plans to leave Ottawa on Saturday and will not be returning until mid-week. Therefore, it could not respond to a need to meet on this subject as quickly as could the Committee of the Whole. The second point is that we know from looking at the order paper that there is no government business before this chamber next week. What better way to take advantage of the lack of government business than to deal with this important regional question?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: It is a reasonable proposition to deal with the question in Committee of the Whole next week and get the maximum information in the hope that the public will be enlightened, as well as members of the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: That is why I put forward this motion, honourable senators, so that we could meet, as usual, on Tuesday. In the meantime, some arrangements could be made to have the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans prepared to come before the Committee of the Whole to give us a statement. We could ask questions of him and his officials and, if necessary, we could ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or any other minister who has been deeply involved in this negotiation, to appear. Subsequently, it would be courteous to give an opportunity to the provincial premiers, if they wished, to come before this body and give their views.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I recommend the motion and I hope that it will be accepted.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to have leave to make a comment about the motion to adjourn the debate. Obviously, it is not a motion that somebody either wants to debate or refuse. It is unusual for us to refuse such a motion, and it is understandable why the Leader of the Government would want the opportunity to give it some thought. But I think I should say that on our side, while we have no inclination to refuse the motion to adjourn the debate, that lack of inclination depends on our sitting next week so that when we do continue with it, we will continue with it on Tuesday. So, provided that we have an adjournment until next Tuesday, we would not even think of refusing the motion to adjourn.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to comment on the reference that Senator MacEachen made to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries. We are due to leave for Alaska on Saturday and will return on Wednesday. I am sure all the members of the committee would want to participate in such a debate, so there are two alternatives: either to postpone the debate until Thursday, or to call a steering committee meeting immediately and cancel the trip, because this would be considered of more importance than the trip we are undertaking—even though it is important, also.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question on the same issue. If Senator Marshall is considering cancelling the trip, would it not be more appropriate to refer this fisheries matter to the Fisheries Committee, if the Fisheries Committee will be here next week?

Senator MacEachen: No, honourable senators. It is a matter for the Fisheries Committee to determine whether it wishes to cancel its work. I do not see any necessity for that. However, that is a matter for the committee. It was because the committee had a program of travel that I did not propose to ask that committee to do the urgent study that is required on this matter.

Honourable senators, we can all be here next week to deal with the matter. If the members of the Fisheries Committee can be back on Wednesday, as we have been told, they will have an opportunity on Thursday, or later, to participate in the discussion that will take place. In that way both interests will be served.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I guess that is where the matter rests for now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 10th February, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 10, 1987, at 2 p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, February 5, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT
(Statutory Instruments No. 36)

In accordance with its permanent reference, Section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Joint Committee draws to the special attention of both Houses the International Pacific Halibut Convention Regulations (SOR/84-500), as amended.

These Regulations were adopted by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 4 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-17, and regulate the halibut fishery in waters off the west coast of Canada and the United States in accordance with the provisions of the 1953 Convention between Canada and the United States of America for the Preservation of the Halibut Fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea. In the opinion of the Joint Committee, the Governor in Council was not empowered to make these Regulations pursuant to Section 4 of the Act and they should have been enacted by the International Pacific Halibut Commission pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention.⁽¹⁾

By Section 3 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act, Parliament approved and confirmed the Convention set out in the Schedule to the Act. Your Committee considers that in enacting this Section, Parliament intended the provisions of the Convention to operate as part of Canadian law. Pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention, the International Pacific Halibut Commission may:

"... in respect of the nationals and inhabitants and fishing vessels and boats of Canada and of the United States of America, and in respect of halibut:

- (a) divide the Convention waters into areas;
- (b) establish one or more open or closed seasons, as to each area;
- (c) limit the size of the fish and the quantity of the catch to be taken from each area within any season during which fishing is allowed;
- (d) during both open and closed seasons, permit, limit, regulate or prohibit, the incidental catch of halibut that may be taken, retained, possessed, or landed from each area or portion of an area, by vessels fishing for other species of fish;
- (e) prohibit departure of vessels from any port or place, or from any receiving vessel or station, to any area for halibut fishing, after any date when in the judgment of the International Pacific Halibut Commission the vessels which have departed for that area prior to that date or which are known to be fishing in that area shall suffice to catch the limit which shall have been set for that area under section (c) of this paragraph;
- (f) fix the size and character of halibut fishing appliances to be used in any area;
- (g) make such regulations for the licensing and departure of vessels and for the collection of statistics of the catch of halibut as it shall find necessary to determine the condition and trend of the halibut fishery and to carry out the other provisions of this Convention;

- (h) close to all taking of halibut such portion or portions of an area or areas as the International Pacific Halibut Commission finds to be populated by small, immature halibut and designates as nursery grounds."

Convention further supports this argument in that the parties to the Convention are bound to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective any regulations adopted under the Convention."⁽²⁾

The terms of this Article, as well as the many references in other Articles of the Convention to regulations of the International Pacific Halibut Commission, confirm the intention of the contracting parties to confer regulation-making powers on the Commission. In addition, Sections 7 and 8 of the Act make it an offence to contravene any provision of "the Convention and the regulations made thereunder." The underlined words refer to regulations made by the International Pacific Halibut Commission pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention. Such regulations must, under the Convention, be approved by the Governor in Council to have legal effect. But the purpose of Order in Council P.C. 1984-2269 -the enacting instrument for the present Regulations- was not to approve regulations made pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention, but to make new regulations pursuant to Section 4 of the Act. The distinction between a power to make regulations and a power to approve them is critical. An authority empowered to approve or confirm a regulation enacted by another administrative authority may not substitute itself to the enacting authority and make the regulation in its place. Any such regulation is null and void (Regina v. Feraco, (1965) 1 O.L.R. 652).

Section 4 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act provides that:

4. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying out and giving effect to the provisions of the Convention and anything done by the Commission thereunder.

In correspondence with the Committee, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has taken the position that this clause empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations which would otherwise be made by the Commission.

"In the view of legal counsel, section 4 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act authorizes the Governor in Council to make the regulations that would otherwise be approved pursuant to Article III (2) of the Convention. Article IV of the

According to this view, rules designed to regulate the halibut fishery can be made either by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 4 of the Act or by the Commission, with the approval of the Governor in Council, pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention. The Joint Committee does not agree that regulations respecting the matters enumerated in Article III.2 of the Convention may be made by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 4 of the Act. As noted earlier, the provisions of the Act and of the Convention indicate that the regulations made by the Commission were intended to operate as part of Canadian law upon their approval by the Governor in Council. Article III.2 of the Convention is to be construed as would other grants of regulation-making authority by Parliament.

In interpreting legislation, recourse is often had to the rule that where two legislative provisions deal with the same subject-matter, or could be so read, the more particularized of the two takes precedence over the more general one. This rule, expressed in the maxim generalibus specialia derogant, has relevance here. Parliament, when it ratified the 1953 Convention, allowed certain specific regulation-making powers to be exercised by the International Pacific Halibut Commission with the approval of the Governor in Council. These powers are detailed in Article III 2 of the Convention. At the same time, Parliament enacted Section 4 of the Act which confers general regulation-making powers on the Governor in Council. The Committee conceives of no reason for Parliament to have conferred identical powers on both the Governor in Council and the Commission. Section 4 of the Act is to be read as giving the Governor in Council residual authority to make such regulations as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions of the Convention, with the exception of those provisions in respect of which the International Pacific Halibut Commission was given specific regulation-making authority.

To read Section 4 of the Act as permitting the Governor in Council to exercise the same regulation-making powers as those conferred on the Commission under the Convention would be inconsistent not only with the Convention but with the terms of Section 4 itself. The agreement between Canada and the United States is that a joint international commission will regulate the halibut fishery. For the Governor in Council to exercise the powers of that commission would be inconsistent with that agreement. Furthermore, Section 4 of the Act contemplates the making of regulations to carry out and give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Convention itself states that the halibut fishery is to be regulated by the Commission. In using the regulation-making powers conferred by Section 4 to make those regulations which the Convention says are to be made by the Commission, the Governor in Council can hardly be said to be giving effect to the Convention.

As noted earlier, the Minister referred the Joint Committee to Article IV of the 1953 Convention. It provides that:

"The Contracting Parties agree to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of this Convention and any regulation adopted thereunder, with appropriate penalties for violations thereof".

Your Committee is unclear as to why this Article was invoked. The legislation which the Contracting Parties agreed to enact is, in the case of Canada, the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act. When Parliament enacted the Statute in 1953, Canada discharged its obligation to make effective the provisions of the Convention and regulations adopted pursuant thereto.

Finally, the Joint Committee draws attention to the practice previously followed in the making of regulations under the Convention. From 1954 to 1958, the rules regulating the halibut fishery were enacted by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 4 of the Act. Although this apparently lends support to the Government's current position, it must be noted that from 1959 to 1984, these rules were invariably enacted by the International Pacific Halibut Commission pursuant to Article III.2 of the Convention and subsequently approved by the Governor in Council. Given the inconsistency of previous practice, we do not feel any deciding weight can be attached to it in interpreting the Act. We should also refer to the current practice of the other Party to the Convention. The information available to your Committee indicates that, in the United States, regulations under the Convention are made by the Commission with the approval of the President, as provided for in Article III.2 of the Convention.⁽³⁾ This practice is consistent with the position taken by the Committee.

For the reasons set out in this report, the Joint Committee considers that Section 4 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act does not empower the Governor in Council to make regulations respecting matters enumerated in Article III.2 of the 1953 Convention. Such regulations can validly be made by the International Pacific Halibut Commission. In the opinion of the Committee, the International Pacific Halibut Convention Regulations passed on 28 June 1984 lack legal validity insofar as they were adopted by an authority other than that authorized by the relevant legislation.

We recommend that future regulations to implement the Convention be enacted by the International Pacific Halibut Commission, in accordance with the practice followed prior to the enactment of the Regulations under report.

The Joint Committee, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) of the House of Commons, requests the Government to table a comprehensive response to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ,
Joint Chairman.

APPENDIX TO REPORT

February 6, 1986

The Honourable Thomas E. Siddon, P.C., M.P.
Minister of Fisheries and Oceans,
House of Commons,
OTTAWA, Ontario
K1A 0A6

Dear Mr. Siddon:

Re: SOR/84-500, International Pacific Halibut
Convention Regulations

On March 12, 1985, counsel to the Joint Committee wrote to your Department's Designated Instruments Officer and drew his attention to the fact that the referenced Regulations have been made by the wrong regulation-making authority and are consequently ultra vires the enabling legislation. In a reply dated November 29, 1985, Mr. Rowat did not dispute that the Regulations are without legal authority but indicated that the Department wished to consider whether it would revoke the Regulations or rewrite them in their entirety.

This correspondence was considered by the Joint Committee at its meeting of January 30, 1986, and we are instructed to convey the Committee's dissatisfaction with your Department's reply. Contravention of these Regulations can have extremely serious consequences for the subject and the question of their validity must be addressed with considerably more urgency than is indicated in Mr. Rowat's reply. The present Regulations should immediately be revoked by the Governor in Council and, if necessary, re-made by the International Pacific Halibut Commission which is the proper regulation-making authority.

We look forward to hearing from you at an early date concerning this matter. We also wish for a formal assurance that, pending the formal revocation of the Regulations, fishery officers will be instructed not to enforce them and that no one has or will be charged for a breach of the Regulations.

Yours sincerely,

Nathan Nurgitz,
Joint Chairman.

Bob Kaplan,
Joint Chairman.

Howard Crosby,
Vice-Chairman.

Dear Sirs:

Thank you for your letter of February 6, 1986, regarding the International Pacific Halibut
Convention Regulations.

I have referred this matter to the Department's legal counsel who have advised that the subject regulations are intra vires. In the view of legal counsel, section 4 of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fisheries Convention Act authorizes the Governor in Council to make the regulations that would otherwise be approved pursuant to article III (2) of the Convention (article III (3) of the 1980 Protocol). Article IV of the Convention further supports this argument in that the parties to the Convention are bound to enact and enforce such legislation as may be necessary to make effective any regulations adopted under the Convention.

Yours sincerely,

Tom Siddon, P.C., M.P.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 10, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE MR. JUSTICE JULIEN CHOUINARD

TRIBUTES

Hon. Michel Cogger: Mr. Speaker, last week honourable senators will have heard with considerable regret the news of the death of Mr. Justice Julien Chouinard of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Judge Chouinard will be remembered as an eminent jurist whose judgment was swift and sound, and whose arguments were taut and crystal clear.

Appointed to the Supreme Court by the Right Hon. Joe Clark in 1979, Judge Chouinard enjoyed the esteem and respect of his fellow judges and members of bar associations in every province.

Before his appointment to the Supreme Court, he had a brilliant and distinguished career as a senior official with the Quebec government, as a lawyer in private practice and as a professor of corporate law at the Laval University Law School.

It was in this latter capacity that I had the privilege of meeting Judge Chouinard. I remember him as a man with a brilliant mind, and an extremely likeable and warm personality.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I speak for all senators in offering Judge Chouinard's family our sincere condolences.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, first of all, I can assure Senator Cogger that he did well to extend his condolences to Judge Chouinard's family on our behalf.

However, I want to take this opportunity to add my own comments to what he said about the late Judge Chouinard. I did not know him very well, but I do know many of his colleagues. Just the same, I was well aware of his reputation as a lawyer, professor, politician, public servant and Clerk of the Cabinet for the province of Quebec. He had a career as a public servant and finally, as a judge, and it is certainly as a lawyer that he earned his well-deserved reputation.

The passing away of such a distinguished Canadian is truly a great loss for the administration of Canadian justice and for Canadians in general.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I wish to echo the remarks of Senators Cogger and Frith and pay homage to Julien Chouinard, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, and offer my condolences to his wife, his children, and all his relatives.

As far as I am concerned, Julien Chouinard and I worked very closely for a number of years at the time when both of us were employed by the Government of Quebec.

Indeed I got to know Julien Chouinard very well as Deputy Minister of Justice when Jean-Jacques Bertrand was both Minister of Justice and Minister of Education.

We were in a situation such that, in a way, we had to share the same minister. It was under these circumstances that Julien Chouinard's sense of fairness, which I want to emphasize, proved to be to the advantage of my own department, for I could have been the loser in our sharing of the same minister holding two very important portfolios, justice and education.

Both of us had to work in close co-operation when Mr. Bertrand became Premier of Quebec. I should point out that at the time Julien Chouinard was one of the driving forces behind the creation of a new public service in Quebec.

It was under the administration of Mr. Bertrand that the position of Secretary General of the Government of Quebec was established. This is how the Quebec senior civil servant has been designated since then. Julien Chouinard was at the same time the artisan and first incumbent of this position at the top of the Quebec civil service.

I would not want to speak at length in recalling the various endeavours in which we were both involved, for instance the negotiations on the family allowance system in Quebec, and many other occasions as well.

I simply want to say that, throughout all the experiences we shared, I was struck by what I would call the rectitude of the reflection and action of a man like Julien Chouinard. It was the object of deep admiration on my part and the cause of an affection which grew over the years.

It was during those years that I got to know his wife Jeannine. It is not without emotion that I echo the remarks which were made earlier. At the same time as I pay homage to the memory of Julien Chouinard, I extend to Madame Chouinard, her children, and all her close relatives my deep and heart-felt condolences.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE STUDY OF GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND TRAINING—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, February 11, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which was authorized by the Senate on October 9, 1986, to continue its examination of the activities of the Government of Canada in its financial support of post-secondary education and vocational training, be empowered to present its report no later than April 2, 1987.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Henry D. Hicks, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISH ALLOCATIONS—STATUS OF 1972 TREATY—RIGHTS OF FRENCH VESSELS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government to clarify an answer which, he gave a week ago today, on the question of the current agreement between Canada and France on fish and boundaries. At one point, the Leader of the Government stated as follows:

If we fail to negotiate this boundary dispute and the related matters, we will find ourselves back with the 1972 treaty.

My question has to do with the view of the government as to the continued application of the 1972 treaty.

Am I to take it that if there is a successful negotiation that leads to arbitration of the boundary dispute and the successful negotiation of fisheries allocations in 1988 and beyond, the 1972 treaty will cease to apply?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I understand it, there are provisions in that treaty that have already expired, or will expire soon. Whether an agreement that we might negotiate now would be intended to replace that treaty is another question. I simply do not know the answer to it and I shall find out.

Senator MacEachen: Therefore, one has to take with a grain of salt the answer given last week—

Senator Murray: No, not at all.

Senator MacEachen: —which implies that if we fail to negotiate this boundary dispute and related matters, we will find ourselves back with the 1972 treaty. The implication is that if we succeed in these negotiations, somehow the 1972 treaty will disappear. So, what I want to know is what is the attitude of the government with respect to the 1972 treaty?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are a number of provisions in the 1972 treaty, at least one of which has expired, or will expire shortly. I am not sure that it would be safe to say that an agreement that might be negotiated now would replace the 1972 treaty in its entirety. That is something I would have to examine.

Senator MacEachen: Can the Leader of the Government tell us what provision has expired and what portion will not apply in the future if the current negotiations are successful?

Senator Murray: If the honourable senator could give me a few minutes, I have some information here and I will endeavour to find it for the honourable senator. Meanwhile, other senators may wish to ask questions.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government is reviewing this material, perhaps he would ascertain whether the treaty of 1972 provides that as of this date French fishermen have any rights in connection with fish taken within the Gulf.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will have to take those questions as notice. I may be able to provide answers before the end of today's Question Period. I understand that honourable senators opposite have asked for a briefing on the 1972 treaty from officials and that that is being arranged.

HON. LOWELL MURRAY, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON APPOINTMENT TO PRIORITIES AND PLANNING COMMITTEE OF CABINET

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a couple of questions for the Leader of the Government. However, before asking those questions, may I be permitted to congratulate him on his elevation by appointment to the P & P—the Priorities and Planning—Committee of the cabinet.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: I am sure that two of the reasons for this appointment were the senior positions that he now holds, namely, as Leader of the Government in the Senate and as Minister of State responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations; but I am equally sure that his counsel and sound advice was also considered. Therefore, I suggest that it is a personal tribute to be appointed to the inner cabinet. If I may say so, honourable senators, I believe that his appointment will be useful to the Senate, because I am sure that within a very short time we will have direct answers to many more questions, because obviously the Leader of the Government will be at the meetings where matters of great strategy are discussed. I say very sincerely that I wish him well in his new position.

GRAIN

GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—EXCLUSION OF MUSTARD SEED

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should now like to ask the Leader of the Government my first question. I do not expect him to have the answer today. Almost every other cash crop was included in the Grain Stabilization Fund, or whatever it was called, except mustard seed. There is not much of it; I believe the acreage amounts to approximately 150,000 acres in the whole of western Canada. Nevertheless, that crop was excluded.

As a matter of judgment, I understand that the argument was based on whether or not the decline in international prices was caused by or was the consequence of the battle that is going on between the E.E.C. and the U.S.A. on subsidies. But it is still a matter of judgment, because if honourable senators look at the decline in the prices of mustard seed in the international market, they will find that that decline is about the same as that applying to many of the other crops that were involved. It is down to something less than 50 per cent.

Could the Leader of the Government convey that fact to the Minister of Agriculture when seeking a reply? I understand there is also a provision for a review committee to be established to deal with such things; but that committee has not yet been established. I wonder if the leader could find out when that review committee will be appointed so that matters such as those I have described can be sent to the committee for review. I also ask whether or not the Minister of Agriculture will take on the responsibility of seeing that this crop is included on the list, along with a half dozen other crops of the same nature.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am so flattered by the honourable senator's personal references that I wish that I had more and better information to give him on the subject that he has raised today. I do not know what committee the honourable senator is referring to, or whether it is a federal-provincial committee or an interdepartmental committee of the federal government. I am aware of a working group of federal officials who are studying some of the problems posed for Canada by international conditions in the grains business. If that is the committee to which the honourable senator refers, I shall try to find out when and whether or not it intends to consider matters such as the inclusion of mustard seed as one of the crops that would be eligible for the payment under the federal program announced some time ago.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I shall try to give a brief explanation. I am not referring to the committee described by the Leader of the Government. I am referring to a committee that will be concerned with the administration of the program because of the new ground that will be broken along the way to make payments to producers in western Canada who have permit books to deliver many kinds of cereal grains. However, the program is wider than that. It involves grain produced in Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Records of the kind required are not in existence. Therefore, other means of receiving applications and establishing criteria for the validity of applications are being set up. I am told that a review committee will be set up to hear grievances from producers on whatever topic they care to raise. I expect that this matter will be one of them. I understand that the criteria may be amended from time to time and that the Minister of Agriculture will be appointing that committee. The committee is not in existence yet, but what I have said describes the one I am asking about.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for the information, and I shall make inquiries.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—FISH ALLOCATION—STATUS OF 1972 TREATY—RIGHTS OF FRENCH VESSELS IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have some information with regard to some questions asked previously, in particular the question asked by Senator Stewart of Antigonish-Guysborough. The fact is that French rights to fish in Canadian waters, as governed by the 1972 fisheries treaty which provided the right for metropolitan French vessels to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, expired on May 15, 1986. However, my information is that a maximum of ten Saint Pierre and Miquelon vessels of 50 metres or less retain a perpetual right to fish on an equal footing with Canadian vessels in the Gulf. As the honourable senator knows, there is a boundary dispute involving overlapping claims under which the French have over-fished for some considerable time.

I have a note on the 1972 treaty negotiated by the previous government which states that there were five provisions, the most important of which, for the purposes of the question put by the Leader of the Opposition, gives the French an unquantified perpetual right to fish in the Canadian 200-mile zone. As I told the Senate the other day, Canada's position is that this gives the French the right to fish where we tell them to fish. The French claim that this gives them the right to fish wherever they like within the 200-mile zone.

The next provision is the phase-out of the French metropolitan fleet from the Gulf last year, that is, in May of 1986. Then there is the perpetual right for the ten 50-metre trawlers from Saint Pierre and Miquelon to fish in the Gulf, in respect of which there is a reciprocal arrangement applying to Canadian trawlers.

Finally, there is a compulsory dispute-settlement clause, and as I told the Senate the other day, the French can still invoke the dispute-settlement machinery of the 1972 treaty which, of course, would leave the matter in the hands of a tribunal from countries other than Canada or France which could decide what specific cod quotas should be given to France in the 2J+3KL area.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in view of the answer given by the Leader of the Government, namely, that the 1972 agreement provided for the total withdrawal of vessels of the French metropolitan fleet from the Gulf of St. Lawrence in 1986, perhaps he would want to modify his answer given a week ago, in which he said:

I am informed that without this agreement we would revert to the 1972 agreement, the implications of which would be that in the Gulf the French would demand—because the Gulf was part of the 1972 agreement—as a minimum, what they caught last year, namely, 3,500 tonnes;

The fact is that the rights of the French metropolitan fleet in the Gulf by the 1972 treaty were extinguished as of last year, which is a very considerable achievement. The only right remaining is that accorded to the vessels from Saint Pierre and Miquelon, which are quantified and limited as to size.

If the Leader of the Government wants to refer to the treaty of 1972, Article III sets out the fact as follows:

Fishing vessels registered in Metropolitan France may continue to fish from January 15 to May 15 each year, up to May 15, 1986, on an equal footing with Canadian vessels, in the Canadian fishing zones within the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Therefore, the metropolitan fleet is no longer permitted to fish directly in the Gulf. There is a provision for the ten 50-metre trawlers from Saint Pierre and Miquelon, and of course the government did, in its recent agreement, increase the allocation to the Saint Pierre and Miquelon vessels in the Gulf.

But certainly that answer given last week by the Leader of the Government is somewhat misleading.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has, first of all, said that the treaty of 1972, which permitted the smaller trawlers from Saint Pierre and Miquelon to fish in the Gulf, did not quantify the amount they might fish. In any case, I say that the honourable senator will have an opportunity to satisfy himself as to the application of the treaty of 1972, in the absence of some future agreement, when he is briefed and if and when this matter goes to committee.

[Senator Murray.]

However, the information I conveyed to the house the other day I did not invent off the top of my head; it was given to me by the government.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think that one must simply add the following question: Is it not true that the rights which were accorded to the French in the 1972 treaty were in recognition of their historic treaty rights off Canadian waters and in exchange for very considerable concessions on the part of the French in recognizing the 200-mile zone, except with respect to the disputed area?

So, it is incorrect to say that the French have unlimited rights in Canadian waters, because the 1972 treaty clearly limits their rights by making them subject to conservation considerations, including the establishment of quotas.

The recent experience is that French rights have been limited by the establishment of Canadian quotas which, obviously, have been disputed by France and will continue to be disputed by France.

May I say that contrary to what Senator Murray has said, the 1972 treaty has no terminal date. It is in existence now; it will be in existence following any conclusion to the boundary dispute, and the current negotiations on fisheries are in accordance with the 1972 treaty.

Senator Murray: The 1972 treaty may have limited French rights; I do not know that it limited French practices.

I state again that it gave the French an unquantified, perpetual right to fish in the Canadian 200-mile zone. That is what the 1972 treaty gave them.

The honourable senator has said that this was in exchange for very considerable concessions on the part of the French. Well, that is a matter for debate. There is a great deal of background to the 1972 treaty, and I hope it all comes out when this matter goes to a committee.

Senator MacEachen: I would ask, in making that statement, whether the Leader of the Government has looked at Article 2 of the 1972 agreement, which reads as follows:

To recognize the right of French nationals to fish in these waters—

Namely, fishing zones off Canada on the Atlantic coast:

—subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, including the establishment of quotas.

So, it was not an unlimited, unquantified right, because the treaty itself limits the access to Canadian waters by conservation measures and recognizes the establishment of quotas by the Canadian government. Those are the words of the 1972 treaty.

I must say that a great deal of misinformation—perhaps inadvertently—has been put out on this subject, but not by the Senate. That is why I think we need a much more thorough examination of the facts.

Senator Murray: The quotas have not been very effective.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—SECURITY OF SUPPLY—
GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he could respond to a question I asked last week regarding the monitoring group with respect to the PGRT tax relief.

The leader gave an indication last week that he would undertake to see if the report could be accelerated, or if the time required to make a report could be shortened because of a serious decline in activity in the oil and gas fields.

I appreciate that the leader gave an undertaking to do that, but he does not seem to have been successful.

The report has been delayed three times now. It was to be released some time last fall. Since then, the leader gave an undertaking that we would have it by the end of January.

Senator Olson: So it has now been put off until the end of March.

I wonder if the leader knows that there is a serious, if not desperate, situation developing. More than 50 per cent of the rigs that were operating up to December 31 have been shut down, and all the jobs that go with those rigs have been suspended. I should say that not all drilling rigs were operational on December 31, but approximately 360 rigs located in western Canada were operational up to that time. All this has happened since the provincial government's incentive programs expired on that date. He will know that there are representatives from several groups in the oil and gas industry, the IPAC, for example, and a small producers' organization, in Toronto and Ottawa this week, trying to impress on central Canada how serious this situation is.

Concerning the tax relief granted by the government, an undertaking was given by the industry to the government, when its members were granted the tax relief, that they would use those funds to increase activity and enhance job opportunities immediately. From what we see, this simply is not happening. Could we get an interim report, or something? Otherwise, we will go through the season without the companies that have accepted this tax relief meeting the commitments that they made to the government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my recollection is that I undertook to draw to the attention of my colleague the statement of the honourable senator to the effect that the companies are not honouring the undertaking they gave to the government at the time that the PGRT was phased out or ended, and I will do that.

As to whether I can obtain an interim report prior to the end of March, I will see what I can do, in view of the interest of the honourable senator.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FOOTWEAR—REMOVAL OF IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, on December 17, 1986, I put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the removal of import quotas on footwear. Has the Leader of the Government received a reply to that question, because it is almost two months since I asked it?

Furthermore—if I may add this point to my question—since he has been appointed to the highly prestigious and important Committee on Priorities and Planning, would he now consider, since he is obviously more busy than he was before, appointing a parliamentary secretary in this place to relieve the honourable gentleman of some of the details that he may not have time to cope with sometimes?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am astonished that a question has languished for two months without a reply. I recall now—since the honourable senator has drawn my attention to it—that he did put a question to me regarding import quotas on footwear. I will try to find out what has happened to the question and bring in a reply shortly.

As for the second part of the question, he will know that the appointment of parliamentary secretaries is not my prerogative.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, the matter of imports of footwear is very important to the Canadian industry. I noticed in the paper that there was an article pertaining to the fact that if nothing is done soon, we will ruin our own industry in Canada. This has been the talk for some time, but I think that it is most important that you, as the representative of the Senate in the cabinet, bring this important matter to the attention of the cabinet so that they can deal with this rather promptly, because it is most important.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have taken note of Senator Guay's representations.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF SENATORS

Hon. Peter Bosa: I have a supplementary question. I realize that the honourable gentleman does not have the prerogative of appointing parliamentary secretaries, but could he at least discuss the matter with the Prime Minister?

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France, recently tabled in the Senate, be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing Ministers and officials and other interested parties, including provincial Premiers. (Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, on Thursday last my colleagues and I gave leave to have this motion presented without notice. At that time, I must say that I was troubled by a number of procedural problems that I thought I saw with the motion, but because I did not have a text of the motion, I decided to wait until I had an opportunity to study it more closely. Meanwhile, I moved the adjournment of the debate.

I have now had an opportunity to look at it more closely and to examine our rules and precedents on the matter. I would like, therefore, to raise a number of procedural questions regarding the motion for consideration by honourable senators and, perhaps ultimately, for a ruling by Mr. Speaker.

First of all, I must say that I wonder whether the motion is—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I certainly do not want to unduly interrupt the Leader of the Government on this motion—because we are anxious to hear his opinion about it and his suggestions on it—but I do believe that it is not in order to raise points of order on whether a motion or a question is in order or not when it is before us for debate. The time to raise that is before the debate starts.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): The motion has been put.

Senator Murray: Well, the Senate granted leave to have the motion put without notice. It was put in the absence of any notice or of any written text.

Senator Frith: And debate has started on it; it is under debate.

Senator Murray: The first opportunity I had to examine the motion was on the weekend when the documents, the Hansard and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate became available.

Senator Frith: But it was debated. You could have raised it while it was under debate. That is not true; it is just not true, what you are saying.

Senator Murray: I could hardly raise it in the absence of the text, which I did not have.

Senator MacEachen: If not, you could have asked for it.

Senator Murray: Well, I am—

Senator MacEachen: This is clearly out of order.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator says it is out of order. I suppose that is the first matter on which we will have to get a ruling from the Chair—

Senator Frith: Before we do anything else.

Senator Murray: —or hear from honourable senators. I have some points of order that I wish to raise in connection with this motion, and I wish to raise them now. The honourable senator argues that I cannot do so, that the rules do not permit me to do so.

Senator Frith: That's correct.

Senator Murray: I am simply saying that I am raising these points of order at the first opportunity that I have, after having read the text of the motion.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, one thing on which we need a ruling from the Senate itself or from the Speaker is this rather simple and fundamental question that you do not raise a question on the orderliness of a motion when the motion has been put and when it is in the process of debate; you raise such a point before the debate starts. Certainly, if in the course of the debate an amendment is put, you can then raise the question of whether the amendment is in order or not, but it is not in order to raise a point of order in the middle of the debate. The question has been put and is now before us. Therefore, it is presumed to be in order. If not, it would have been stopped earlier.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, it would be interesting to discuss this point a little further, because a good deal hinges on the question as to when the member perceives that the irregularity exists. That is the point. You cannot introduce a point of order until you perceive an irregularity.

● (1440)

Senator Olson: He asked for permission to put the motion last week.

Senator Roblin: Not having seen the motion, no one on this side was able to judge whether it had any taint of irregularity about it. If the honourable gentleman opposite were to read Beauchesne's, he would find that the point at which points of order are to be raised is as soon as the irregularity is evident.

Senator Frith: That is when it is put.

Senator MacEachen: It is when the irregularity occurs, not when you detect it.

Senator Roblin: It is when you detect it.

Senator MacEachen: That could be three weeks later.

Senator Frith: It is when it occurs.

Senator Roblin: One can read Beauchesne's and find out that that is the point. It is really a question of fair play. I think that senators ought to consider that the Leader of the Government, who had not seen the motion, knew it was a very pressing matter insofar as the Leader of the Opposition was concerned, and gave permission to have it introduced in the house without having had it read to him and, indeed, without the Leader of the Opposition having subscribed to the usual courtesies of sending a copy of the motion to the Leader of the Government before moving his motion. Under those circumstances, I think it was a generous and not ill-advised action on the part of the Leader of the Government to say that we would not stand in the way of having this matter ventilated in the way proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. Well, that was done.

Senator Frith: It was debated.

Senator Roblin: In terms of the simple capacity of human beings to understand the implications of an important matter until the item is in print and the Leader of the Government has had a chance to read it, I think it is stretching a point to say that he has no right then to say that he has difficulties with the character of the motion. I think that is stretching matters a bit. I think fair play indicates that he should be given the opportunity to make a statement.

Senator Frith: Yes, but not to raise the point of order.

Senator Roblin: He is going to make a statement.

Senator Frith: That is different.

Senator Roblin: He will probably indicate what he thinks should be done next. Then the Senate can use its own judgment as to whether it agrees or not.

We are conscious of the fact that we do not have a majority in this forum and we are pretty well at the mercy of the ladies and gentlemen opposite.

I put it to you that we should hear the Leader of the Government without any further complaints from the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. Give him a chance to make a statement. We did not interfere with the opposition the other day when they wanted to say something. Not only that, we gave them full leave when we had no real necessity to do so because we felt it was not inappropriate.

It seems to me that our best course would be to let the Leader of the Government make his statement and then, when he is finished and if he has points of order to consider, the matter can be taken under advisement.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have no objection to hearing the Leader of the Government on the motion, but I do take serious exception to the suggestion that it is now possible to raise a point of order on the regularity of a motion when the motion has been put and the debate has commenced. It is an axiom of parliamentary procedure that a point of order must be raised when the breach of order occurred, not when it is detected some days later. If in the mind of the government the motion was defective and could not be put, then, of course, that was the moment at which the point of order should have been raised. It was not done. The motion was put; the debate commenced; and, indeed, the debate was adjourned.

All of these three acts confer a validity upon the motion that cannot now be withdrawn by a point of order. That is the procedural point. To say that the government did not have a copy may be true, but bear in mind that I rose under Notices of Motions and said that I was giving notice that I would like to move, with leave, a motion "later," not "later this day."

If honourable senators look at the Debates of the Senate, they will notice that Question Period and the proceedings on a bill intervened before the motion was put. I suggest that it was elementary, if the government had concerns, to have sought a copy of the motion which was available from myself or from the Chair.

I will resist vigorously the notion that it is possible to raise a point of order on a motion which has been put by the Chair, which has been debated and which has been adjourned. However, I have no objection to hearing the views of the Leader of the Government on the substance of the motion.

Senator Roblin: I must state clearly to the Leader of the Opposition that I think it is an established principle of Parliament that when such a motion is introduced, a copy should be sent to the Leader of the Government.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government was remiss in not asking for it. I do not mind anyone saying that, and I am sure he does not either. The point is that there was plenty of time for the Leader of the Opposition to give him a copy, because the matter did not come up for debate instantly, it was referred to later that day.

Senator Frith: That is right.

Senator Roblin: I think that a gentleman who is as well briefed in the niceties of parliamentary behaviour and procedure as is the present Leader of the Opposition knows what I am talking about.

Senator Frith: We told him.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can interject all he likes, but it would have been an act of courtesy, consistent with parliamentary procedures in this country, if he had done so, and I am sure that he probably regrets that he did not do so.

Senator Frith: He had an hour and a half to get it.

Senator Murray: During that hour and a half of which my honourable friend speaks I was not exactly idle. There was Question Period, and the honourable senator knows that during Question Period there is only one minister of the Crown in this chamber who is obliged and available to answer questions.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition can resist it as vigorously as he likes. I do not agree with him that it is impossible for me to raise these procedural points at this time.

I refer to a citation in Beauchesne's to the effect that a point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place. I do not think the objection is out of place at all at this stage.

The motion was put; the honourable senator made his speech; and over the weekend I had an opportunity to examine the text of the motion. I found it had very serious procedural problems and others of a more substantial nature. I will attempt to deal with those in what I have to say. I think sooner or later the Senate will have to address itself to these matters and sooner or later we will have to have a ruling from the Chair on some of them.

First of all, let me say that this motion—

Senator Frith: Is the honourable gentleman still speaking to our point of order?

Senator Murray: I am speaking to my own point of order.

Senator Frith: This is clearly a case where we ought to have a ruling on this elementary principle. The Leader of the Government made reference to citation 237 in Beauchesne's which states:

A point of order against procedure must be raised promptly and before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

That raises the question: What does "promptly" mean? It also raises the question: When would it have passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place? To find that out, you must refer to citation 235 where it says:

The Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment, namely the moment it occurred.

I think we are dealing with an elementary question of order.

Senator Roblin: Read the next sentence.

Senator Frith: The question is: When is the proper moment? As far as courtesy is concerned, I did advise the gentlemen opposite that we were going to put this motion. It was not put and leave was not asked to deal with it immediately; leave was asked to deal with it "later today", and it did not come up until later in the day.

The motion was then read. The motion was there on the Table to be read by anybody, but that is when the motion was read for the first time. If that was not enough, if there was something out of order in it, the time at which the mover of the motion started to speak to it was the time to raise a point of order. I reiterate that we did not ask to deal with this matter immediately but gave honourable senators time to see it.

It now seems that we are going to proceed on the basis that someone can ask for an adjournment of a motion that has been put—one that will be to be considered later—on the basis that he did not read it. It would seem that the purpose of the adjournment would be to raise points of order. That is the procedure we will now be approving if we proceed this way. If there are points of order or questions on procedure within the Committee of the Whole, the committee can deal with them. But I think we are dealing now with the substance of the motion, and that is whether or not this agreement should be referred to the Committee of the Whole. That is the question that is before us. If there were anything out of order about it, that should have been raised at the proper time.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I may just say a word, I must confess that I am quite confused on this. Section 235 of my copy of Beauchesne's states:

Any Member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of what he considers a breach of order.

Later in that same paragraph it goes on to say:

A point of order may be taken after a debate is concluded and the Speaker is about to put the question to a vote or after the vote has been taken—in fact, at any time, but not so as to interrupt the Speaker when he is addressing the House.

Senator Frith: Yes, but that is when the point of order occurs—any time.

Senator Doody: It says that "a point of order may be taken."

With the greatest respect for the honourable gentleman opposite, I would ask the Speaker to clarify this for my benefit, if nothing else.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I think I will have to take this question under advisement.

Senator Frith: For how long?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, on that point, I appreciate that it may be necessary for the Speaker to take the point of order under advisement. But I believe that in light of the long delay since last Thursday when this matter was before the House, we would be very unhappy, indeed, if the delay were to extend until tomorrow. We would appreciate it if His Honour could give his ruling within the next half hour or hour. Otherwise, this whole matter, which is urgent, will be put off for debate for an additional 24 hours after a delay of four or five days.

I appreciate His Honour's desire to give the matter consideration, but I would seek his cooperation in having an early ruling, one within the hour, and we can adjourn in the meantime.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it the wish of honourable senators to adjourn for half an hour?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1600)

At 4 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the Chair has considered the comments of Honourable Senators Murray,

MacEachen, Frith and Doody as to when a point of order should properly be raised. The Chair notes that Beauchesne's citation 235 states that:

The Speaker's attention must be directed to a breach of order at the proper moment, namely the moment it occurred.

Erskine May also states that:

It is the right of any member who thinks that such a breach has been committed to rise in his place, interrupting any member who may be speaking and direct the attention of the Chair to the matter provided that he does so the moment the alleged breach of order occurs.

However, citation 235 of Beauchesne's further states:

A point of order may be taken after a debate is concluded and the Speaker is about to put the question to a vote or after the vote has been taken—in fact, at any time . . .

Given the apparent conflicting remarks in the procedural authorities, the Chair examined briefly the precedents with regard to when a point of order has been raised. The Chair has found that in most instances points of order are raised promptly. However, the Chair has also found the following precedents.

With regard to the Senate, the Chair noted that the motion was made and debated for the adoption of the report of the Special Committee on Youth on April 16, 1986. However, it was not until April 22, 1986, that a point of order was raised by Senator Flynn with regard to the acceptability of the motion, and the Speaker was asked to make a ruling.

With regard to the House of Commons, the following example may be cited: Bill C-37, the softwood lumber products export charge bill, was introduced and the minister, the same day, moved second reading of the bill. The second reading debate on the bill took place on three successive days, and on the fourth day the house leader of the official opposition raised a point of order to the effect that the bill was imperfect because there were blanks in the text. The Speaker of the House of Commons heard arguments on the point of order and subsequently ruled thereon.

The Chair is also faced with the dilemma that it has yet to hear the point of order which Senator Murray wishes to raise.

Given our conflicting authorities and precedents, I would suggest that Senator Murray be allowed to raise his point of order at this time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, assuming that the "suggestion" is a ruling, I appeal the ruling, pursuant to rule 15.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the Chair's ruling please say "Yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the Chair's ruling please say "Nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "Nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

● (1640)

Honourable senators, the question now is: Shall the Speaker's ruling be sustained?

The ruling of His Honour the Speaker was negated on the following division:

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the Speaker's ruling negatived.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I hope I can say in a reasonably friendly way that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have not put on a very edifying performance this afternoon.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): How could we have been more edifying?

Senator Murray: Having said that, I must confess that for setting in motion the chain of events that began last Thursday afternoon, I have nobody but myself to blame.

My first mistake was in granting leave to set aside the rule requiring notice in order to facilitate the bringing forward of this motion by the honourable Leader of the Opposition. This I did because I thought it was the courteous and civilized thing to do, and very much in accordance with our practice here.

My second mistake was in believing that in that spirit, once having had the opportunity to read the text of the motion, I would be permitted today to raise several points of order that I thought were germane. That, of course, was not to be.

Having successfully sought leave from me on Thursday to set aside the rule requiring notice, they then, today, invoke the rules in order to prevent me from exercising my right.

Senator Frith: Let us get on with the motion, shall we?

Senator Denis: It is simple.

Senator Murray: My third mistake was in believing that when all else had failed, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would respect a ruling from the Chair—

Senator Frith: Rightly or wrongly.

Senator Murray:—on that matter. This, also, was not to be.

Senator Frith: No, because it was wrong.

Senator Murray: I much regret it. The honourable senator says that the ruling was wrong. The ruling was buttressed, I thought, by rather impressive and quite recent precedents—

Senator Frith: Are we now debating the ruling?

Senator Murray:—from the other place.

Senator Frith: Is the government going to talk about the motion?

Senator Murray: Be that as it may, I simply say to Your Honour—

An Hon. Senator: A point of order!

Senator Frith: Yes, I agree that this is not in order.

Senator Murray:—that I hope that Your Honour does not take this personally. I am sure the honourable members opposite did not intend it personally.

Senator Frith: Quite right.

Senator Murray: When they are in full partisan gallop, it is not personalities, not rules, not traditions and not precedents—

Senator Frith: The pot and the kettle—

Senator Murray:—that can be allowed—

Senator Steuart: You put your finger in the bowl and you got caught; let us carry on.

Senator Frith: Let us hear what the government has to say about the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order!

Senator Frith: Out of the confession box and into the streets!

Senator Doody: It sounds like the House of Commons!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, they will allow nothing to come in their way when they are in full flight, and Your Honour should not at all take this overruling of your ruling as being intended in any sense to be a personal rebuff.

Senator Frith: A filibuster, that is what we are watching!

Senator Murray: It so happens that even if this motion passes, another motion will be necessary if honourable senators wish to resolve the Senate into Committee of the Whole. I can say that most of the points of order that I would have raised with regard to the present motion apply equally to the motion which my friends opposite will have to move in due course to resolve the Senate into Committee of the Whole. I will, therefore, raise those points of order at that time.

● (1650)

For the moment, let me express my regret that what the opposition proposes to do is to set aside the practice that we have followed for many years of referring matters of this kind to one of the standing committees of the Senate. This is a practice which has done the Senate much credit and that has served well the parliamentary process and the public policy process. Indeed, our rules provide that certain matters must be referred to certain standing committees, and when we have made an exception to those rules by sending a matter to a committee where it does not belong, leave of the Senate has had to be sought and obtained.

The Committee of the Whole is not equipped to conduct the kind of study proposed by this motion. Our standing committees are so equipped. The various parliamentary authorities are very clear that the Committee of the Whole is a deliberative body; it is a body meant for deliberation, not for inquiry. I would be interested to know, perhaps from the Leader of the Opposition when he closes the debate, what precedent there is for calling witnesses into Committee of the Whole. From time to time we have ministers of the Crown appear, and there is a rule that provides for that. I would like to know what precedent there is in this place or, indeed, in the House of Commons for calling witnesses to Committee of the Whole.

There are a great many other questions which are procedural in nature and which I will raise at the appropriate time, but, for the moment, I say again that we are setting aside a time-honoured and successful practice of referring these matters to standing committees. To do what? To venture on to new ground where we have no procedures, no rules to guide us and where we will have to make our own as we go along. I suggest that if this motion passes and, ultimately, we end up in Committee of the Whole, we are letting ourselves in for an unnecessarily cumbersome procedure.

Honourable senators, before I sit down, I should say a word about the status of the matter under study.

Honourable senators will be aware that last night, at the request of the Premier of Newfoundland, the provincial premiers met in Toronto to discuss this matter. They issued a communiqué which reads as follows:

The Premiers met tonight in Toronto to discuss the implications of the January 24, 1987 Canada/France Agreement. They listened to the complexities involved in resolving the problems facing this fisheries issue off the east coast of Canada. They emphasized that solutions can only be found after intensive federal/provincial cooperation and consultation.

The January 24, 1987 Canada/France Agreement was concluded in a manner which is inconsistent with the basic principles of Canadian federal/provincial relations. Provinces must have confidence that they will be consulted and involved in decisions which affect their vital interests.

They called on the federal government to enter immediately into discussions with all affected provinces to review the terms of the Canada/France Agreement to ensure that it maximizes Canada's use of this vital fishery resource.

Having read the communiqué into the record, honourable senators, there are several comments I should like to make on it, comments which may be relevant to our own plans with regard to this agreement.

At the outset, let me say that the federal government appreciates the fact that at our suggestion the premiers invited and permitted officials of the federal government to brief them on the agreement. It will be apparent to honourable senators from hearing the communiqué issued by the premiers that the premiers recognize the problems and complexities involved in the Canada-France fisheries and boundaries issue. They made that point very clearly.

We agree that the review of the January 24 agreement called for by the provincial premiers will be helpful and, to that end, a meeting of Atlantic fisheries ministers with the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was already being scheduled for next week. This meeting will be the forum for the proposed review.

I think it is also important to point out, contrary to what may have been anticipated by media reports prior to the meeting, that the premiers did not call upon the federal government to repudiate this agreement. They did not repudiate the agreement or call upon us to do so. That, as I understand it, is the position of the two opposition parties in the other place.

What they did do was ask the federal government to review with the provinces affected the terms of the agreement to ensure that it maximizes Canada's use of this vital fishery resource.

As I said, we agree with this proposal. The meeting will be convened early next week with the fisheries ministers of the Atlantic provinces and at that time there will be an opportunity to answer further questions that the provincial governments may have on this matter and to set the course for further negotiations with France.

Finally, I want to repeat what I have said on several occasions in this place in the last week or so, that is, the federal government regrets the breakdown in communication that took place, in particular, between the federal government and the Government of Newfoundland. We have already expressed our regrets to the Government of Newfoundland on that matter. As I have said, we are now re-engaging the provinces in intensive consultations, and we will ensure that in future negotiations with the French there will be increased provincial presence.

I wanted honourable senators to have that information, in particular, the information about meetings that will get under way next week between the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and his counterparts from the Atlantic provinces. Honourable senators may want to consider the timing and scheduling of any initiative that we can take in this place or in one of the committees of this place. Obviously, with these discussions going forward, honourable senators may wish not to anticipate them but to wait until they have been concluded. However, we are not insisting on that, although I do say that the fact that these discussions are taking place may, indeed, affect the availability of ministers and officials of the federal government to appear before committees to discuss these matters.

Having said that, I will, as I always have done, make my best efforts to make ministers and officials available to a committee, if that is the wish of the Senate.

Honourable senators, that is all I have to say on this motion. When it is moved that we resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole, I will be raising a number of points of order for your consideration.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government is correct in his characterization of this motion as something that asks the Senate to go beyond the procedures that it has adopted for many years and that it usually adopts to deal with a question of this kind. This is a question of importance to Canadians and one that a committee should study with the benefit of evidence from witnesses.

What this motion does—as the Leader of the Opposition made clear when he moved it and supported it in debate—is to suggest to the Senate and encourage the Senate to consider in Committee of the Whole an issue of obvious regional importance. This is a classic case of an issue that is important to a region of Canada—not just to a province but to a group of provinces—and to other regions of this country because of the principle involved in the resolution of the question. It would be understandable if many senators and others were tired of hearing about the important role of the Senate of Canada in protecting and championing regional interests. In this case, all the motion is asking is an opportunity to study a question of regional importance. Therefore, what we really have before us is a textbook example of what most people would say constitutes a perfect task for the Senate. I do not think that the Leader of the Government or his colleagues would argue with the point that it is a classically good case for the Senate. The Leader of the Government has offered his cooperation. He recognizes, because of his experience on the issue and his experience in the region concerned, that this constitutes a perfect subject for Senate activity.

Honourable senators, it seems to me that the only difference between any of us in this chamber is the form of action we should take. How should we deal with this? The motion is evolutionary in that sense. It suggests a different forum in which to discuss the matter. It suggests a different way of doing things. Instead of referring the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, the motion calls for its examination in Committee of the Whole. This would give senators an opportunity to play their role as protectors and supporters of regional interests.

Every motion, every suggestion, every program we have before us—the three Es, the reports of our committees, everything we have read on the subject of Senate reform—emphasizes the importance of the Senate as a champion of regional interests.

So, why not go the route of the Committee of the Whole?

Well, the Leader of the Government says that the Committee of the Whole is not equipped. I do not quite understand what that means. I do not know why it would not be equipped. There is nothing in the rules to prevent this. There may not be many, if any, precedents for its having been done in the past. Is that a reason not to do it? Is that a reason not to take some small step toward Senate reform that does not require a constitutional amendment or an amendment to the rules? If this is an occasion when the Senate can be flexible, when it can do something useful in its traditional role, then surely we are the masters of our own procedure and, if it is desirable, rules or precedents are not going to stand in our way.

[Senator Murray.]

The Leader of the Government says that the Committee of the Whole is deliberative and not, I take it, investigative. Rarely do we sit in Committee of the Whole except to hear from a minister. I have never known the Senate to sit in Committee of the Whole for a reason other than to hear a minister. Therefore, it clearly has an investigative as well as a deliberative role.

The problem then becomes one of calling witnesses other than ministers. Have we no flexibility in that regard? The rules state that the minister may come and bring his officials. There is nothing in the rules stating that the Senate cannot call witnesses. Are we that helpless or are we that stuck in the mud that we cannot consider being flexible enough to achieve a desired result? Must we always take the view that because we have never done it before, we must not do it now? The very fact that we have never done it before, honourable senators, seems to me to be a good reason to do it in this case.

The Leader of the Government further pointed out the communiqué of the ministers. He underlined the fact that the question is one full of “complexities.” In Question Period we have found how full of complexities it is. The Leader of the Government himself has had to ask for time to get information for us. Every time we have dealt with it in Question Period, further dimensions have unfolded.

Honourable senators, I do not understand why the government is stalling on the question of our referring the matter to Committee of the Whole. It seems to me that it provides a perfect opportunity for the government to tell its side of the story. The government has tried to do so in the Senate through Question Period and it has not been successful—not through any lack of cooperation on the part of the Leader of the Government. In every case he has tried to give us the information he possessed. When he has not had that information, he has offered to get it. When he has been able to, he has provided it. Even in that respect, however, we have found some inconsistencies—inadvertent inconsistencies, sometimes, as was demonstrated today in Question Period. Therefore, we agree that it is a complex issue, but we also maintain that there is one side of this whole issue—the government side—that has not been fully heard. And Committee of the Whole provides a perfect forum in which the government can be heard.

Honourable senators, I call on the government, for the general reasons I have underlined but also for its own purposes, to support this motion. Let us deal with it. Let us resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole and provide to the government and others an opportunity to deal with this important regional question in the very place it should be dealt with—here in the Senate of Canada.

• (1710)

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I was touched by the offer of the honourable senator to those of us on this side to use the opportunity to discuss these matters in Committee of the Whole of the Senate in order that the government's position might be put forward in all its amplitude for the members of this assembly to digest, and no doubt for the public of Canada to listen in to the proceedings here. But I must say that on consideration the merits of the argument fall considerably short of the advantages suggested to us by the honourable senator who has just spoken.

Senator Frith: And I was so sure you would agree.

Senator Roblin: We might consider those occasions on which the Senate has used the Committee of the Whole procedure in the past, because I must agree that we are the masters of our own procedure and we can regulate it as we wish. In the past—and I believe this is invariable, in my experience. If any honourable senator thinks that I am wrong, he is at liberty to say so—invariably when we have had a Committee of the Whole, when members of the other place who are in the cabinet come before us to express their views, it has been under one particular set of circumstances—and that particular set of circumstances was in order to deal expeditiously with bills that were presented to us at the time that the legislature as a whole was about to adjourn. I cannot think of any other occasion in which we have used the Committee of the Whole procedure.

So, while I say that there is nothing to prevent the Senate from doing exactly as it wishes, to advance that particular precedent as an argument in this particular situation is, in my opinion, unfounded.

Let us deal with the substance of the matter rather than the precedents in this Committee of the Whole situation in the Senate. What is being advanced? What is being advanced is a very simple proposition, which is that the Committee of the Whole can do better than one of the select committees of the Senate in investigating this matter. What a putdown of the committees of the Senate! What evidence has been adduced to tell us, or to lead us to believe, that if we had followed our regular procedure and submitted this matter to one of the regular committees of the Senate, we would not have achieved as much as, indeed more than, might be achieved in the Committee of the Whole procedure as suggested here. Can anyone name a committee of the Senate that has been seized with a matter of national importance affecting the regions of Canada which has failed to do its duty or to elucidate the facts?

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: I challenge anyone to do that, and I say that in the committees of the Senate unless we revise our ideas about the Committee of the Whole procedure and the sanctity of this chamber we have already developed procedures, as the Leader of the Government has said, to take care of these situations where we need to get further information.

The complaint has been made that in this house the Leader of the Government has not been able to provide all of the information in respect of these highly difficult, contentious and involved matters and that is true. How do we get the best information? I think we get the best information from going to committee, where we will not only have the minister responsible for policy in every detail but, if we want to have an explanation from those who are experts in fisheries, in international affairs, or in interprovincial relations, we will be able to do so in an untrammelled way, in a way which has already been provided for, in committees which have at their disposal not just the expertise of the members of the Senate—impressive as that indeed is—but also the expertise of their own committee staff, who can do the research, analyze the situation and help all of us investigate the matters that are before us.

So, to say that the committees of the Senate cannot do as good a job as the Committee of the Whole, which is the substance of the argument from honourable senators opposite, is, in my opinion, unfounded and insupportable. It seems to me that that is an argument that will have to be assessed by the members of this body.

I suggest that there has been nothing, to my knowledge, in the proceedings of the committees of the Senate which leads me to have no confidence in them—yet that is what this proposition is. It is a proposition of no confidence in the committees of the Senate, and it is a proposition which has not been supported by a tittle of evidence, except prejudice. What else could it be, to say that the Committee of the Whole is smarter than the committees of the Senate? Are members of the Senate in any way inhibited from attending committee meetings? Of course not. Every member of the Senate can attend a committee meeting. Are they inhibited from asking questions? They are not. Are they inhibited from taking part in the proceedings as a whole? Of course not. They can take their full part in any way they wish. The only thing they cannot do, if they are not members of a particular committee, is that they cannot vote.

An Hon. Senator: That is very important.

Senator Roblin: It is very important; but my honourable friend need not worry, because there is not a committee in the Senate on which he and his friends do not hold the majority. All he has to do is to trot out his troops and he will know how the votes will go, just as we know how they will go in this house when the Leader of the Opposition decides to crack the whip.

It seems to me, honourable senators, that the case as to why we should go to this unusual procedure has not been made. I do not stand in its way on the grounds of custom or precedent, although I might perhaps be inclined to do so. I stand in its way because I believe it is not as effective, and it has not been demonstrated to us that it is more effective to deal with the matter in Committee of the Whole rather than to refer it to one of the committees of the Senate. I for one want to stand up to defend those committees as being the proper bodies in which to discuss this matter. Their record, so far as I am concerned, is a good one. Their facilities are certainly better than anything that can be offered by this house, unless we make some dramatic changes in the way we run our Committee of the Whole; and, in fact, it is a proposition which is not supported by fact, theory or practice.

I suggest that the majority of this house, who undoubtedly have their own way, would be better advised if they were to conduct their inquiry, as I think they should, if that is the way they feel about it, in a select committee of the Senate rather than in the Committee of the Whole.

So I support the proposition put forward by the Leader of the Government. I oppose the arguments submitted by the two honourable senators opposite, namely, the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, and I hope that we will take some account of what we are actually doing and of the practicality and advisability of what has been suggested before we merely follow our leaders into the voting lobbies.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, having spent a number of years as Minister of Fisheries, I am really green with envy that fish is finally getting some attention in the House of Commons and the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator LeBlanc: I would have preferred to participate in the discussion under more positive circumstances, but a number of issues have been raised on which I should like to comment briefly. First, I believe it is accurate that the Senate should at last start looking at regional issues. I hope that there will be other regional issues and that perhaps we will live up to the challenge of doing it in a less partisan way than perhaps can be done in the other place, because if there is any reason for some of us to sit here, surely it is to represent the regions which perhaps we had occasion to represent in the other place for some time.

What worries me a little about Senator Murray's explanation is that the issue will now be transferred to the ministers of fisheries of the provinces. One expression that came out of the communiqué was "to maximize the fishery resource." I must say that of all the difficulties with which I was faced at the time when we had to be very cautious in the setting of quotas and in the conservation and restoration of the Canadian fishery, probably my worst adversaries were provincial ministers and premiers who saw in the fishery the employer of last resort, who saw in the fishery the unending exploitation which always resulted in another crisis, and, in fact, who were constantly preaching for industry expansion, fleet expansion, factory expansion, even when the biologists were telling us, "Be cautious, don't go too fast."

The fact that the fisheries come under federal jurisdiction indicates to me that some Father of Confederation must have known a little bit about biology and might have known that fish follow the temperature of the water; that, as a result, you find the same stocks close to Newfoundland, close to Nova Scotia, close to New Brunswick, touching upon Quebec and hitting upon Prince Edward Island on their way. The fishery is not the jurisdiction of the federal government by accident or as a result of somebody's fancy. It is logical that it should be this way.

If there is one concern that I think we must have in some of the present debate, it is what I call "the creeping jurisdiction of some provincial governments," because the idea that the fisheries should be returned to the provinces since they are a natural resource is the sort of thing that, though you would not expect it to be understood by, perhaps, metropolitan newspapers, for anybody who has a simple knowledge of the fisheries, it is clear that it is not a tree, that it is not a piece of land, or that it is not a whole series of other resources which are defined by geography. It can never be defined by a line. That is why the issue of negotiations with France, as was the case with the United States, is complex. It is one more reason that the users of the resource—and I am not talking now about provincial politicians but about fishermen from the different provinces—should be and should have been involved to the very end. That is why I asked the question about whether they were in the ante-chamber, because that is where they have to be when their interests are being negotiated by representatives of the government holding jurisdiction, the federal government. So, on some of these issues, perhaps we do not divide as much as it would appear. The reality is that it is not the provincial governments that are being consulted, being re-united or being assembled, as they will be next week, that concerns me; but the representatives of the fishermen and of the industry, particularly the fishermen, whose livelihood is being debated in this issue.

It is my experience that creeping jurisdiction will not improve the condition of the fishermen. Forever, as it regards the issue of quota allocations, the federal government has stood for and has been supported by the fishermen who vote for members of Parliament. The debate of those members of Parliament in the house recently was, perhaps, one of the best and most moving debates that I have seen in the House of Commons for many years. It was evident, as it should be in the Senate, that the region was speaking. If anyone reads the speech given by Captain Morrissey Johnson, the honourable member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, who is a knowledgeable fishing captain, they will understand that the representatives of the Atlantic provinces are concerned and worried, as some of us are, that in the name of the "national advantage" or the "national interest" their interests have been somewhat sacrificed. I think that if we were able to hear witnesses, to hear why the experts think this way and why the negotiations went that way, perhaps it would be enlightening for all of us.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to intervene briefly in this debate because of arguments that have been made to the effect that if the Senate follows the proposed motion it will be following an improper procedure. I would like to say at the outset that I think that this is one of the most important and appropriate measures that has been brought before or initiated in the Senate for a very long time, indeed, for the entire time that I have been here. If I understand properly the purpose of the Senate and the reason why some of the Fathers of Confederation insisted that there be a second chamber known as the Senate, it was indeed to protect regional interests.

What we have now is a government that has made a deal, in this case with France, over which there is obviously a great deal of resentment in the region affected; namely, the fishery of the Atlantic region. Therefore, I do not think that there is any question that it is appropriate for the Senate to involve itself in this issue. I might say that I am not particularly impressed by arguments advanced by the Leader of the Government with respect to what the provincial premiers have done. I understand why Premier Peckford called for that meeting and I understand other things, but I want the leader to know that I believe that the Senate is more appropriately involved in this issue than all the premiers. For one thing, it is an international matter. It falls exactly within the category of what the Senate was designed to do, to protect the interests of regions against what might happen in representation-by-population problems or situations, which is the case in the House of Commons. This is particularly the situation at this time because the government has the largest majority in Canadian history. The Fathers of Confederation could see, or at least they anticipated, that there might be a time when some regions of this country needed some defence against that overwhelming majority created in the process of representation by population.

I am not sure that this government deliberately set out on a course to damage one of the regions, but the people in the area apparently feel that way, according to what we hear not only from members on our side of the House of Commons but even from some members on the other side, from the Conservative Party. The minister responsible for Newfoundland has indicated that he is very unhappy with the consequences and, more particularly, with the process followed. Therefore, I think that it is very appropriate for the Senate to take up this matter. The argument raised, particularly, a few minutes ago, by Senator Roblin, that it is somehow wrong for the Senate to study this matter in Committee of the Whole as called for in the motion is, I find, ridiculous. I hope that it will not prevent the entire Senate from getting involved in a matter that is so important to this region. As far as I can see, it is certainly not an attempt to downgrade the committees of this house. Senator Roblin's argument is that by studying this matter in Committee of the Whole we are somehow downgrading the good record of the committees of this chamber. I do not agree with that point at all. Obviously, the matter would have been sent to the Fisheries Committee. However, that committee has left Ottawa and is now involved in some fairly important work.

It seems to me that we should recognize that this matter has created enough anxiety in the Atlantic area in their main economic activity which is fishing and protection of fishing grounds, that the Senate should be involved for as many hours and as many days as it takes to satisfy those people, that the Senate is doing what it was designed to do, to protect the interests of a region when it is being hurt by a government with an overwhelming majority in a democracy based on representation by population. As I said, I do not want to take a long period of time, but it seems to me that senators from all over this country recognize how intensely the people in the Atlantic area feel about what has happened in this agreement, and that we should come to their defence to make sure that the government does not proceed against their wishes.

When it is all sorted out, perhaps something useful will come out of the intentions of the government, but that is not the way the majority of the people down there feel at the moment—at least that is the impression I get. I would hope that the government could see that this is an appropriate action by the whole Senate, and not just one committee of the Senate, and that they would stop resisting having the whole Senate becoming involved in something that is so vital to a very important region of this country.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I agree more with Senator LeBlanc than with Senator Olson. Obviously, the government feels that the substance of the agreement is sound. The Prime Minister has defended the agreement; the Minister of Transport, although he laments the lack of communication that took place, supports the agreement; the Minister of Fisheries obviously supports the agreement. The government feels that this is as good an agreement—perhaps not the best, but as good an agreement as could have been attained.

In those circumstances, I think it is unfortunate that because of a bungle in communications, the government feels under pressure to meet with representatives of the provincial governments in order to see if some new arrangement can be worked out; some new arrangement which, presumably, will not be as satisfactory as this arrangement, from the viewpoint of the federal government with national interest its main concern.

As Senator LeBlanc has said, provincial premiers have their own political axes to grind. I think we all should recognize that and not be prepared to duck too deeply when they start swinging those axes wildly, as some provincial premiers have been doing lately. They are not the champions of regional interests; they are the champions of provincial governments, and the Government of Canada, the House of Commons of Canada and the Senate of Canada have, in many ways, a better set of credentials to support the proposition that they are the champions of regional interests. That is why I think it is highly desirable that knowledgeable representatives of the government have an opportunity to come in and to speak to the house of Parliament which was intended to represent the various divisions of the country. This is a real opportunity for the government to put a statement of what I hope is a good case before the Senate and the people of Canada. I have a feeling that perhaps Senator Murray thought that there was some other intention. I hope there is not.

I did not intend to say anything, but Senator Murray said that a meeting had been arranged for next week. That may be unfortunate because the fisheries questions, as Senator LeBlanc implied, are far too important to be the subject of a meeting designed to mollify provincial premiers in what is clearly an embarrassing set of circumstances.

There is another reason why it is desirable that we should hear about this matter, and that the government should take advantage of this opportunity to put this matter before the country as early as possible: that is, that the proposed meeting is next week. If we wait for the Fisheries Committee which is now in Alaska, they will be dealing with history. The time is now; the time is this week. I urge senators to find the procedures which will enable them to discharge their responsibilities to their provinces, to their regions and to the country as a whole.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I may, I will take a few moments of your time to make a few brief comments on this question.

First of all, I think we seem to be on two different tangents here. I have not heard anyone on this side of the house—or, indeed, on any side of the house—suggest that this question should not be heard by a committee, and I would like to make sure that it is perfectly understood that the government side is not only willing but very anxious to make sure that this question is heard.

For me, the question boils down to: Where and in what forum should it be heard? I was of the opinion before, and I am still of the opinion, that the Fisheries Committee is the appropriate forum to deal with this matter. I know that Senator Marshall and others have been lobbying, agitating and fighting for a separate Fisheries Committee in this place for years. It was only, I think, two years ago, or perhaps not that long ago, that they were successful in having established a separate committee for fisheries. They are now engaged in a very extensive review of the marketing of the Canadian product. This will be the first opportunity for that committee to get into a major fisheries question. Now it seems that they are not to be given the opportunity and that the matter is to be dealt with by a Committee of the Whole.

The question of the entire Senate being involved in the hearing of witnesses and the examination of the matter is certainly a specious one. I am sure we have all taken part in hearings of committees of which we are not officially members. I for one, before I was an ex officio member of the various committees, attended many hearings and questioned many witnesses on committees in which I had an interest. Therefore, to say that the entire Senate would not be able to become involved in this matter if it is dealt with by the Fisheries Committee is certainly not accurate. I think that the machinery, and indeed the mandate, of the Fisheries Committee and the talents of the people who are on that committee should be utilized in examining this question. I felt that from the beginning and I still feel that that is the best way to proceed.

As I sit here and let my mind wander back over various Committees of the Whole on which I have sat, I have tried to visualize the mechanism by which we examine witnesses from our places in the chamber while the witnesses sit out at some distance. I find that very difficult to visualize.

Senator Olson: They could sit right in front of you.

Senator Doody: No, the rules are very explicit on that. They say that ministers may sit here in front; they do not say that anyone else can sit there, and I for one would be very reluctant to turn over the floor of this chamber to people from outside of this chamber for any purpose. Premiers have their own legislatures; they use them very effectively and they speak from them. I cannot visualize my going down to Newfoundland and being invited to sit in on the floor of the legislature down there. I was invited by my constituents on many occasions to sit in there and speak for them, which I did, and I think, with some modesty, rather well. However, I do not expect to go back there now and be called in on the floor of the legislature to give testimony on an issue; I would be asked to appear before a committee down there, and I certainly do not feel that we should create that precedent here.

Senator Frith: Why?

Senator Doody: I feel that it will open the floodgates for all sorts of questions to be aired here on the floor of the Senate. Should we then get rid of our standing and special committees? What function would they serve if an important regional question came up—and most questions that are heard in this place are, presumably, important regional questions. I cannot imagine anything taking the time of any legislature in Canada that is not an important regional question.

Nevertheless, now that we do have an important regional question, we are proposing to take it from the committee that is set up primarily to deal with that very subject, namely, fisheries. Obviously, many senators opposite feel that that is not so and that they will have no problems with this matter in a Committee of the Whole. I anticipate that there will be some difficulties, but we will see. It has not yet been tried. However, any Committees of the Whole that I have participated in in my previous incarnation, as well as in this one, have dealt with matters of legislation through a clause-by-clause study of that legislation. From what I can find out from questions I have asked of the research staff of the Senate, that has been the case in this particular institution as well, with the exception of two occasions back in the dim ages when rules revisions were submitted to the Senate.

• (1740)

Senator Frith: How are you using the word “dim”?

Senator Doody: The “dim ages” were before I arrived here.

That is my position on which committee of the Senate should be charged with the responsibility of hearing this matter.

I have said that I do not like the idea of having witnesses brought on to the floor of the chamber. In my opinion, they would have to be heard from outside the bar. Calling witnesses before the bar of a legislature is a drastic measure and invokes images of somebody who has been involved in some contempt of Parliament or has done something dastardly and is called before the bar of the legislature to answer to the legislature through the Speaker. We will have to make some sort of arrangement for that to be changed, because the witness will not be talking through the Speaker but through the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I assume that honourable senators have given thought to the mechanics and how we are going to work that out.

I have also wondered about how we will deal with the questions themselves. Are we going to have 104 senators going full bent at this poor individual cowering behind the bar of the legislature in absolute abject terror while the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod stands over him with his black baton ready to whip him into shape if he dares to answer incorrectly, or if he smiles, laughs or treats with a lack of dignity the 104 howling witches inside the chamber?

Senator Frith: He always speaks highly of you.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I envisage some small problems with that matter.

In any event, as Senator Roblin has said so accurately, the majority will have its way, but, nevertheless, a voice crying in the wilderness sometimes gets attention.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) spoke of his interest and of his history in the fishing industry. I am certainly well aware of that and have spoken highly of him on many occasions during his tenure of office in Ottawa and, indeed, have had many pleasant, and some not so pleasant, experiences in dealing with him when he was the federal fisheries minister. I am the first one to admit that there are certain jurisdictional questions between the provinces and the federal government in terms of fisheries. I have some difficulty accepting the reasoning that this fisheries question is only a regional problem. It is true that it is regional, but it is far more important to one part of the region than it is to another part of the region. There is no part of Canada so completely dependent on the fishing industry—there may be exceptions, but I do not think there is any other province in Canada that is completely dependent on a single industry, the fishing industry—than is the province of Newfoundland.

To say that Newfoundland should not have some major input into matters that affect so vitally its very existence, its very reason for existence, as the fishery does in that province, is to understate the case badly.

When I was in the provincial government, and even before that, one of the favourite cries of anguish was that there is a fisheries policy affecting Newfoundland made by experts who sit on the banks of the Rideau Canal. I heard that over and over again, and I was certainly one of those who said that. There can be no misunderstanding or misstating of the anguish, the despair, the frustration and the anger felt by the people of my province over the breakdown of communications or the lack of consultation in this particular pact with France. I doubt that anyone who knows the history of Newfoundland, who knows how deeply ingrained the fisheries industry is, who knows that the people's lifestyles there are so closely associated with the fisheries industry, could be anything but amazed at the fact that such a treaty was entered into in the absence of representatives of the Government of Newfoundland.

This is where I disagree somewhat with Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour), who feels that the Government of Newfoundland should not, perhaps, have as much involvement as the fishing industry or the fishermen themselves. I submit that the Government of Newfoundland speaks for all segments of the industry far better than individuals in it. Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) is more aware than I am of the conflict between the inshore and offshore fisheries, and the conflict between the plant workers and the fishermen. Each has a sphere of influence and a sphere of concern that must be looked after, but the Government of Newfoundland is deeply involved with all of them and certainly deserves, and should have been given an opportunity, to have a major input into any decisions that are made involving the fishery.

To its credit, the previous Trudeau government completely involved the Province of Newfoundland in the negotiations with France back in 1972. Then, the late Don Jamieson sent a telex to the provincial government inviting it to participate, which was followed by a letter. My memory tells me that Newfoundland was initially given observer status at that time, but that that was subsequently upgraded to full participation status in the delegation.

Right up to the signing of this current treaty with the French, the Government of Newfoundland and the industry of Newfoundland were involved in the process. Unfortunately, at the last moment, communications broke down and the people in my province, and I think to a lesser degree—I cannot say for sure—in other provinces of Atlantic Canada, were very upset. Now steps are being taken to return that system to what it was before the breakdown, and that is what this review process, as I understand it, is all about. The fisheries ministers will meet and be briefed on the progress to date on negotiations that will be ongoing. I see nothing wrong with that.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) seems to think there is danger involved in bringing the fisheries ministers in to deal with matters that are absolutely vital to their very existence. I think for this thing to carry on without some involvement of the fisheries ministers or the provincial governments is an absolute invitation to chaos down the road. I congratulate the Government of Canada on getting the system back on the rails.

The debate in the House of Commons was certainly an important debate. I followed it and heard every word of it. I agree that there was a great deal of passion and emotion. I understand completely where it was coming from and why it was coming. The anguish and the hurt is not completely submerged yet, but I am of the firm opinion that this move by the Government of Canada to start the process back on track is an important one.

Honourable senators, I will not take any more of your time. I simply ask you to consider seriously the question of reference of this matter to a committee. In the interest of the regions and the provinces, I think the matter should be referred to the Senate Committee on Fisheries. I think all senators interested in the matter can be heard and can question witnesses who might appear before that committee. I suggest serious consideration of this matter before any decision is taken.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question.

Senator Doody has said that our rules allow a minister to appear before the Senate as a witness. The only rule I have seen is to the effect that a minister may come and take part in a debate.

Is there some other rule? I ask that because when a minister has appeared before the Senate during my time here, that minister came as a witness, not to take part in a debate. Why can we not follow the same procedure we follow when a minister appears as a witness and not as a participant in a debate?

Senator Doody: There is no other rule of which I am aware. Rule 18 states:

When a bill or other matter relating to any subject administered by a department of the Government of Canada is being considered by the Senate or in Committee of the Whole, a minister, not being a member of the Senate, may on invitation from the Senate enter the Senate Chamber—

And so forth.

Senator Godfrey: And take part in the debate.

Senator Doody: And take part in the debate. That is why ministers are admitted to this place, and that is why they are invited to participate in the explanation of the legislation that is before the Senate. It specifically says "minister", and that, I think, is where it should stop.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, as honourable senators know, I would not have objected to the Leader of the Government raising his points of order in his speech and, indeed, did not object to the Speaker's ruling. However, nothing I have heard in the argument that was put forward by the government would lead me to believe that we should not go ahead with this motion.

There is a long precedent for the Committee of the Whole. It has sat many times during my tenure in the Senate, and I believe that on a couple of occasions I have chaired it. It has worked admirably—perhaps not in the exact context that we see in this motion but, nonetheless, in context of dealing with matters that are tantamount to inquiry. In those circumstances, it has worked extremely well. I am sure that we can adapt to the requirements of the motion, and so I cannot see that the argument that there is no precedent for the Committee of the Whole undertaking an inquiry would hold much water.

The question then arises: Do we have an obligation to refer the matter to a committee? That is perfectly understandable: We have a Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries that can deal with the matter. But the fact that we have that committee does not necessarily indicate that we should not deal with the matter in the Committee of the Whole.

Then there was the argument that we should wait until the discussions have concluded. What we are dealing with here is an issue that has some considerable urgency. We have an opportunity to confront that issue now, and the entire Senate, in Committee of the Whole, can confront that issue. If we refer it to a committee then there is some delay, some lessening of the urgency that derives from going into the Committee of the Whole. The government should understand that; I am quite surprised that they have not supported it. Time and again in this Senate we have lost the opportunity to take the risk to do the things that we should do. Part of it is because we are timorous and we feel that because we are not elected, we do not have the powers to do what we know we should do, and the greater part is because we wish to be partisan.

This is an issue that goes to the very root of the existence of a region. This is an issue that should be dealt with, if the Senate means anything in respect of regional representation. I am surprised that the government, instead of trying to resist this and instead of trying to raise points of order, although I for one would have been quite happy to hear those points of order—could not, for a moment, submerge the partisan aspect and say, "Here is an opportunity for the Senate to set a precedent, to really do a job, and to take the risk as the real regional representatives of the country."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I am more interested in asking a few questions than in taking a firm stand.

Earlier, Senator Frith asked us the following question: Were we afraid to innovate? He admitted that in the past when the Senate went into Committee of the Whole, it usually did so to receive a minister and explore matters related to a bill.

Perhaps some further explanation would be necessary, but I just wanted to bring this to your attention. Rule 65(1) indicates the exceptions that shall apply in Committee of the Whole. The third paragraph says:

arguments against the principle of the bill shall not be admitted.

As for matters that are traditionally referred to a Committee of the Whole, the term "bills" not only restricts debate to the various clauses of the bill but also prohibits any debate on the principle of the bill. I do not claim this a hard and fast rule, but when we read this passage, it is easy to understand why it has always been customary to go into Committee of the Whole when inviting the minister who sponsors legislation in the Senate or in the other place. Thus, this rule implicitly applies to bills, first of all. Does this mean other matters are excluded? I do not necessarily draw that conclusion, but the way our rules are drafted gives us a better understanding why it has always been customary to limit debate to the consideration of bills.

However, suppose there is no basic objection to having a matter like the one mentioned in the motion referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Two points have been raised in the debate so far in support of referral to a Committee of the Whole instead of to the appropriate standing committee, and I am referring to the committee whose terms of reference include consideration of our fisheries.

The first argument pointed out the urgency of the problem. There is an emergency situation, so the Senate has to deal with it quickly by referring the matter to a Committee of the Whole. The emergency can be dealt with just as well by a specialized committee as by a Committee of the Whole. So why the Committee of the Whole? The argument was raised that it was a matter of necessity and a unique opportunity to deal appropriately with a subject that is of interest to the entire Senate.

What I wonder is this: Assuming, on the basis of this argument, that it is a subject that is of interest to all senators, thus the entire Senate as such, and therefore a Committee of the Whole, who is supposed to deal with this matter? Does this mean that the Senate would sit as a Committee of the Whole all day long to face this emergency? And if it does, does it imply that no other Senate committee would sit at the same time? If other Senate committees were allowed to sit simultaneously, in view of the fact this matter would necessarily be of interest to all Senators, we would have a contradictory situation. During all the time the Committee of the Whole would sit, hypothetically speaking, the other committees would not sit.

If because of the urgency of the matter we should sit continuously, does this mean that all the other business of the Senate should be set aside? In short, is there such an emergency that within the next few days, the Senate should spend all its time and use all its facilities to consider this issue? Is that what you mean?

Senator Frith: There is something else to do.

Senator Tremblay: Committees are meeting right now. Would honourable senators please follow my argument: if there is some urgency to deal with this issue which is of concern to all senators, this will mean an end to the consideration of all other business.

Therefore, I conclude with a question: Is this really what is being proposed? Is that what we are going to do? If such is the case, why refer the matter to a Committee of the Whole?

My question may seem naïve, but I feel it is logically consistent with the very notion and the arguments put forward to convince the Senate to sit in Committee of the Whole instead of referring this matter to the standing committee.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the honourable Senator MacEachen speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Honourable senators, may I say that according to rule 12, at six o'clock I should leave the Chair. Is it your wish that I should remain in the Chair?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacEachen:—I am really not in any fighting mood. I do not think the issues that have been raised have done anything but underline the importance of the subject of this motion. I certainly appreciated the comments made by Senator Doody, who spoke with knowledge and understanding of the situation in his native province. If that were the only benefit of the motion, I think it might make it worth while. However, in addition to Senator Doody, we heard from Senator LeBlanc and Senator Stewart, both of whom have been interested in the fisheries for quite some time. I join with them two prairie senators who have been made conscious of the regional importance of the subject. Others have participated, including Senator Tremblay who raised some philosophical questions about time and space which I hope to deal with in a more concrete way.

Senator Roblin said—and it was repeated by Senator Doody—that there is a majority on this side of the house and it will have its way. I must remind honourable senators that since this session opened the minority has had its way. Every item of legislation proposed by the government has been dealt with expeditiously by the opposition. The majority opposition has, I think, cooperated in facilitating government business when it has, in fact, come forward. If we in the opposition had resorted to procedural obstacles, we could have shown the government how difficult it could be to make progress in its legislative program.

Here is a motion in this session, the first proposed by the opposition—in this case the Leader of the Opposition—and the government, rather than facilitating the matter, as we have done with their business, has opposed the motion. Not only that, it has resorted to procedural obstacles to prevent us from reaching this particular objective. I hope, in light of the discussion we have had, that the Leader of the Government will drop his intention to raise further procedural difficulties.

Senator Murray: You would not let me raise any.

Senator MacEachen: That, of course, is his right. I had hoped that he would follow the example we set in this session in facilitating government business by facilitating this particular motion so that the Senate could come to a decision in order that the subject matter could be dealt with in Committee of the Whole.

Senator Roblin made the point that it was only in urgent circumstances that Committee of the Whole is convoked to deal with bills and to hear ministers. During this session, on at least two occasions, ministers have come before us on urgent occasions in Committee of the Whole, subjecting themselves to interrogation by senators. We were in full assembly. Each of us who wished to ask questions could do so, and I believe that the ministers found the experience at least bearable and, possibly, that some light was thrown on their problems. We heard from the then Minister of State (Finance), Ms. McDougall, on the Alberta banks, and we heard from the Minister of Labour with respect to the labour problem on the west coast. I regard that to be an unusual practice in unusual circumstances and believe it is a real justification for going into Committee of the Whole with respect to what is an urgent question of people crying out for explanation and clarification.

It is a very complex matter. The premiers were absolutely right in that anyone who has wrestled with the problem, such as the former Minister of Fisheries, knows how complex it is and how difficult it is to bring together all the considerations and finally reach agreement with another country on the allocation of fishstocks and, in this case, on the arbitration of a boundary dispute whose settlement and resolution is of vital concern to Canadians and, particularly, to the people of Newfoundland. It is complex and I have a lot of questions to ask.

I am satisfied that the information has not come out in detail in the House of Commons and it has not come out in the Senate. As I have already said, and as my colleague has said, we certainly have no complaint about the efforts of the Leader of the Government to co-operate, but the fact is that we have had no real or detailed information and we would like to have it.

Why do we suggest a Committee of the Whole? It so happened that last Thursday, when we reached the conclusion that we ought to provide a forum in which we could get further information, the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries had a mandate to go to Alaska. Furthermore, it so happened that there was no government business before the Senate. We do not have any government business this week. Why not take advantage of that combination of circumstances to go into Committee of the Whole to deal with the matter? I do not for a moment think it is a reflection on the standing committees or, indeed, that it will open a floodgate in which the Committee of the Whole will be totally transformed. But it is, in my view, desirable to adapt to changing circumstances. I believe that if we get into the Committee of the Whole, it will be possible to reach solutions to the problems raised by Senator Doody. I think it can be managed. It may require new solutions, but I believe we can hear ministers, officials and any other witnesses, including provincial premiers, without putting them in the prisoner's dock—as was inferred by Senator Doody if they were to be heard at the bar—and, at the same time, without detracting from the dignity and decorum that we expect to prevail in this chamber. I think we are moving on to new ground and I think we ought to be ready to do that.

Honourable senators, I conclude with one final point. This motion which I have proposed is really somewhat neutral politically. The Leader of the Government has said that we are off on a partisan gallop. Well, if he thinks that we are off on a partisan gallop, he hasn't much of an appreciation of our political skills. If we were really galloping, we would have done much better than this particular neutral resolution, which simply calls for the Senate to go into Committee of the Whole to hear evidence. That is all. It does not denounce the treaty; it does not denounce the agreement; it does not denounce the Prime Minister or any minister; it does not call for rescinding of the agreement. It simply calls for fact finding in the Committee of the Whole. It may be that if we hear a lot of evidence that is useful, we might make a report, but that is something that I have not even considered beyond the possibility that it could happen.

Therefore, I believe that in the interests of its own situation, the government ought to open the doors and pass this resolution so that we can hear the evidence. I believe that there must be reasons why the Government of Canada signed this agreement. There must be reasons why Premier Peckford, quite apart from the process, finds the substance of it unacceptable. There must be reasons on both sides that we would like to hear and know about. I assure honourable senators that at the end of that process we will all be wiser. The Senate will have fulfilled one of its functions, which is to be concerned about regional issues. It may be that the Senate itself will have proved that it has a relevance to problems of this kind.

Honourable senators, those are my comments. I assure Senator Murray and his colleagues that we are not on a partisan gallop and that we are not in full flight. We may be in full flight someday, but he will detect the difference between this mild effort and that passage which we would describe as full flight.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France, recently tabled in the Senate, be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing Ministers and officials and other interested parties, including provincial Premiers.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I declare the motion carried, on division.

MOTION TO RESOLVE INTO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to deal with this reference.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, chastened by my experience of the weekend and of earlier today, I wish to state at once that I have a number of points of order that I wish to raise with regard to the motion just moved by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I do so not in any effort to obstruct an investigation or an inquiry into this agreement.

Honourable senators will recall that on the very first day the matter came up in this place last week, I indicated an interest—as a matter of fact, a strong desire—to have the matter go to a Standing Committee so that responsible ministers and/or officials might be questioned in order to provide senators with further details on the agreement. As the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries has a mandate and is out of town. That committee will return tomorrow night. It would also have been possible to refer the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs since it involves an international agreement, and that committee is authorized to consider international agreements.

Honourable senators, I want to raise these points of order because, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, and as the Deputy Leader of the Government and Senator Everett have said, we are venturing on to new ground, completely new ground. We are proposing that the Committee of the Whole be used for a purpose for which, to the best of my knowledge, it has not been used before.

Senator Frith: Not true, but not often.

Senator Murray: Well, we are venturing on to new ground with no precedents and no rules to guide us.

Senator Frith: No, that is not true.

Senator Murray: We are therefore obliged to make our own rules as we go along.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Before we get to that point, I think that at the very least I have some duty, as Leader of the Government, to place before honourable senators, and ultimately before the Chair, several procedural questions that I would like to get settled. If we proceed to refer this matter to Committee of the Whole, I have no doubt that such referrals will be repeated again and again in the years to come. If this is going to be the practice, we had better settle what the procedures are going to be, and settle them now.

I would suggest, without wanting to be disputatious, that in the process of creating new rules and procedures to govern this practice, we will find ourselves in a process that is far less expeditious than would have been the case had we allowed the matter to go to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries or to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. We are not simply setting one precedent in asking the Committee of the Whole to do something which it has not done in the past. We will, as I can show, be setting quite a number of precedents, some of which were alluded to by the Deputy Leader of the Government.

In any case, I have a number of points of order I wish to raise. I am prepared to make them now or later, as honourable senators wish.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as Senator Murray has stated, we all agree that we are breaking some new ground. Some of us think that is desirable and some of us have reservations. There is no issue about that. Perhaps the best way to accommodate Senator Murray in raising his procedural questions would be by my adjourning the debate on the motion. He will not be out of time tomorrow if he wishes to reflect on these points. Also, I hope to consider some of the comments that were made in the course of the debate on the main motion, which did have some application to some of the questions which the Leader of the Government wishes to raise.

● (1820)

So, if honourable senators agree, I will move the adjournment of the debate. It will appear tomorrow afternoon in my name and the Leader of the Government can then elaborate on the points of order which he has indicated he wishes to raise.

Senator Murray: I thank the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for that suggestion, and I will see honourable senators at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 11, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE DAVIDSON DUNTON

TRIBUTES

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, when one of our nation's wise men passes, it is appropriate to pause and mark the nation's loss.

The late Davidson Dunton, writer, journalist, academic, public servant par excellence, and visionary, served Canada with distinction. In his multi-faceted career, he was editor of the Montreal Star, co-chairman of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, head of the CBC, and President of Carleton University. Schooled in the depression, leavened by war, Davidson Dunton was one of Canada's transitional leaders who, by their collective wisdom and commitment to the public service, guided Canada's transition from an economy dependent as a colony into a vibrant, independent post-industrial power.

The nation generally deserves the leadership it gets. Canada deserved and gratefully accepted the wise, sound leadership of Davidson Dunton who was noted for his internationalism, his grace, his culture, and by his efforts he helped the fragile bloom of Canadian culture blossom and grow.

At a time when our cultural institutions are once again under massive attack, it is important to remind ourselves of the work of our great men, quiet Canadians like Davidson Dunton who were proud to stand for Canada and who were proud to give identity and definition to our independence.

It is no small consolation to his wife and daughters that their loss is shared by thousands and thousands of grateful Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am honoured to associate myself with the eloquent and sensitive words of my colleague, Senator Grafstein.

I did not know Davidson Dunton as well as did Senator Grafstein, but I certainly knew of his work and knew what he had done for Canada in so many worthy fields. I think of him at Carleton University, an important institution which grew and developed magnificently under his leadership. I think of him on important commissions dealing with vital, serious and sensitive questions regarding our country. I think of him as a great communicator in the very important field of radio and television which has meant so much to the national unity and cultural maturity of our country.

He was a man of whom it can be said, and should be said, that he wrought well and wisely for his nation, and the people of his country mourn him today because of his worth and his works.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to add just a word about Davidson Dunton.

I knew of him when he was editor of the Montreal Star. In fact, when I was living in Montreal, I seem to remember him being associated with the Montreal Standard. I also remember him at the CBC.

From the time he left journalism and entered what might be described as a more public life, he was always being asked by Canada to solve difficult problems of the time, and he had great success in doing so.

I remember him when he was chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, because I was a young lawyer then, doing some work in broadcasting. In those days, the CBC was not only a national broadcasting service but a regulator as well. For that reason, to be chairman of the CBC then was even more difficult, if that is possible, than it is now. Anyone who wanted a licence to operate in Canada had to go before the CBC to apply for it, and the chairman had that to contend with as well as running the corporation.

The Broadcasting Act then set up the BBG, the Board of Broadcast Governors, which was the predecessor of the CRTC. It was the first independent regulator in Canada. Davie Dunton brought to that very difficult problem what he brought to everything else in his career—great sensitivity, an open mind, and close attention to detail. He always approached any problem by listening to what people had to say about it. He was not without passion nor was he without conviction, but he had a cool head and sure-footed judgment. His approach to problems always involved listening. And he brought to them that most uncommon commodity called common sense.

I worked with Davie Dunton for seven years at the B&B Commission as a member of the commission. This commission was set up during what might be one of the most radical periods of Canadian history. It was established, really, in answer to bombs in mail boxes. These were times of political violence in Canadian history—quite uncharacteristic behaviour and not the usual Canadian way to solve problems. In that position he was the perfect balance to André Laurendeau, who died in the course of the commission's hearings.

Davie then went on to become president of Carleton University. Honourable senators may remember that that was also a difficult period—one in which there was much unrest and a certain amount of violence on university campuses. My recollection is that of all universities, Carleton was the one that best managed to survive these uprisings, if they can be termed that way. After serving in that office, he went on to the Press Council.

Honourable senators, Davie Dunton spent his whole life solving difficult problems for his nation. He had a wonderful career. I think he was one of the most knowledgeable Canadians I have ever met. He understood Canada, he was informed about Canada, and he had sensitivity and feeling for Canada.

I believe it was yesterday morning on the Arts Report of the CBC that Mavor Moore delivered a short obituary for Davie Dunton. He said it is too bad that Davie Dunton has left us now, when, as in the past, we could use him. It is probably the first and only time that he ever let his country down!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two notices of motions, both of which deal with committees seeking permission to sit this afternoon while the Senate is in session. We had several yesterday. I would not want to give honourable senators the impression that we are trying to encourage the sitting of committees while the Senate is in session. The current rash is partly my fault. Up until 2 p.m. on Thursday of last week, I had told the chairmen of Senate committees that to the best of my knowledge the Senate would not be sitting this week. However, circumstances have evolved in such a way as to make that statement untrue, and I suspect that many committees had arranged sittings and had called witnesses.

With that brief explanation, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—
IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. First, may I say that I believe his new appointment gives him greater power, and, therefore, I look to him at this time for more action; but I do congratulate him on the recognition that he has recently received.

My question deals with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The corporation has issued a release in which it has announced a payment of $275 million to trust companies in Alberta to assist in the restructuring of those companies on the basis that as a result of negotiations, such payment enables them to take action to limit claims that could be made upon CDIC.

Honourable senators, last year, under the direction of the Leader of the Government, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce issued a report dealing with the CDIC which included a strong recommendation about setting up pools that would reflect in a more even-handed way the liabilities and problems that arise from time to time in financial institutions, resulting in claims that could be made, or might be made, or should be made upon the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

● (1410)

Now, no action has been taken by the government, notwithstanding the idea of pools—separate pools for trust companies, separate pools for banks and separate pools for various institutions. I wonder, in view of the fact that a new minister now has responsibility for that portfolio, if the Leader of the Government would use his good offices to urge him to take a good look at this problem so that the fairness that was implicit in the recommendations that the committee made would receive some attention?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, yes, I shall do that. I must confess that I am unaware of the announcement to which the honourable senator has drawn my attention, but I shall take a look at that as well.

BANKING

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—PROPOSED LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I, too, would like to add my words of congratulation to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on being elevated to his new post as a member of the cabinet Committee on Priorities and Planning. I am sure that his added knowledge will widen the scope of our information and debates in this place.

Honourable senators, I have a question on the issue of the proposed legislation respecting international banking centres. The Leader of the Government in the Senate, in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, was quoted yesterday in the Toronto Star as saying the following: "It is truly incredible, the reaction that this"—"this" referring to the proposal on the international banking centres—"has created among a certain group of people." Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us who "that certain group of people" is?

Senator Grafstein: Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate realize that that "certain group of people" includes the Premier of Ontario, the cabinet of Ontario, the Chairman of the Metro Council in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, the Metro councillors who are members of all parties, the Mayor of Toronto, Toronto councillors and Conservative Members of Parliament from Metropolitan Toronto, including Paul McCrossan and Don Blenkarn, who was quoted in the Globe and Mail of today saying that everybody who has met with the Minister of Finance on this issue has said it is "a crazy idea." Could the Leader of the Government, who is responsible for federal-provincial affairs, give us some explanation of this "crazy idea"?

Senator Frith: Easily!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as far as Mr. McCrossan and Mr. Blenkarn are concerned, I am reminded of the story that was once told about President De Gaulle. One of his ministers came to see him and said, "Mr. President, all my friends are against your policy." To which President De Gaulle replied, "Then, make new friends."

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate explain, in his capacity as the minister responsible for harmonization of federal-provincial relations, how this measure will soothe the feelings of the citizens of Calgary, who will be a net loser in this proposal because Calgary now conducts some international banking business?

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not agree. I do not know what the factual basis is for the honourable senator's statement that Calgary, or, for that matter, Toronto, would be a net loser from the decision that has been taken by the government. Toronto will be losing nothing. Perhaps some other jurisdictions outside Canada will lose something, and Montreal, Vancouver and Canada will gain something from this policy.

Senator Grafstein: The Board of Trade in Toronto gave us that information. When I have had it confirmed, I would be glad to pass it on. Could the Leader of the Government advise us whether or not the Province of Ontario has confirmed that it is now prepared to introduce tax legislation to offset any beneficial effects of the government's proposed legislation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware of any communications from the Government of Ontario to that effect, but, subject to the usual conditions involving federal-provincial relations and correspondence, I will check on that matter and see what report I can bring back to the honourable senator.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON U.S. CHRISTMAS TREES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week I asked the government leader to look into the possibility of having the government remove the tariff on Christmas trees imported from the United States to Canada.

I notice that on Friday in Atlantic City, the United States Christmas Tree Association decided to pursue trade penalties against Canadian Christmas trees in retaliation for the Canadian tariff against American trees. However, the group gave the Canadian growers time to try to have the tariff removed, and said that if that happened, their retaliatory course would be stopped.

Can the minister tell us whether or not he is making any headway with the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister in having that tariff removed?

The honourable senator will also be aware that, notwithstanding the discriminatory action taken by the United States in the shakes and shingles case, that industry is working at capacity, or near capacity, so it is appropriate that the minister and the government should review the retaliatory action that we took at that time. I assure the honourable senator that this is being done.

Senator Bonnell: I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his answer. I know that the honourable leader has a feeling for Atlantic Canada, and particularly for Nova Scotia, and that he is prepared to put his shoulder to the wheel on their behalf. If any action is taken in this matter, I know it will be through the efforts of the honourable leader, since neither the Minister of Finance nor the Prime Minister will do it on their own.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES— PROVINCIAL ACTION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether any of the provincial Ministers of Finance from Atlantic Canada—or, indeed, from any part of Canada—is suing the Government of Canada because of the poor equalization payments that they are receiving in Atlantic Canada? In other words, are they suing the federal government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, equalization is a federal program, and the formula and the amounts to be paid are wholly within the control and jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. I myself am not a lawyer, nor is my honourable friend, but I doubt very much that any reputable lawyer would counsel one of the Atlantic provinces to sue the Government of Canada on the grounds suggested by Senator Bonnell, although some might be found who would take the case.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps I should inform the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the provincial ministers of finance had a meeting in Halifax, and apparently since then have all written letters to the federal Minister of Finance.

However, the Minister of Finance of Prince Edward Island, while addressing the Rotary Club in Montague, Prince Edward Island, said that not he but one of the other ministers of finance of Atlantic Canada was contemplating suing the federal government. Since the Minister of Finance of Prince Edward Island was speaking at the time, that would indicate that he was referring to the appropriate ministers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could find out from the Minister of Finance whether or not he is being sued for not paying equal shares to the provinces of Atlantic Canada, as guaranteed under the Constitution.

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Equal shares, as the honourable senator has put it, is not what the Constitution provides for.

Senator Bonnell: I will let the courts decide what the Constitution provides. Lawyers have to make a living, too.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REPLACEMENT OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, while I am on my feet, I should like to take this opportunity to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his fast action on my request last week regarding the Canada Post Corporation. He got rid of the minister responsible for the Post Office!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: He made new friends.

Senator Bonnell: I knew that when Senator Murray became the Leader of the Government in the Senate we would get action in the rural areas of the country.

I see that a postmistress from Elmira, Prince Edward Island, near Souris, is quoted in a local newspaper as saying, "Côté's remarks degrading to Elmira postal operator." After 30 years, she is not one bit pleased to think that the minister responsible for the Post Office would say that the super mail boxes will be better than some of our senior postmistresses or postmasters. She was rather insulted by that statement and is pleased to see he has been replaced, thanks to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: He has a big job ahead of him. There are many others.

Senator Steuart: What about Brian tomorrow!

DRUG TRAFFICKING

COASTAL PROTECTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I should now like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate what the federal government is doing to protect Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island from the importation of illicit drugs into that part of the country, since those drugs are no longer brought into North America through the southern United States because that government has cracked down on drug trafficking.

We have had a lot of talk in Canada about combatting illicit drugs. In fact, the very week the President of the United States said something about that subject, the Prime Minister had something to say as well.

What is the government doing to prevent illegal drugs from landing on the shores of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia? Is there any coordinated plan by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the RCMP and the Coast Guard to protect Canada's shores?

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REPLACEMENT OF MINISTER RESPONSIBLE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): With regard to Senator Bonnell's earlier question, I sometimes wonder, given the amount of political pressure that exists with regard to the Post Office, why the previous government ever decided to designate the Post Office a crown corporation, because the ministers responsible for that corporation seem to be under as much political pressure as they ever were.

I make the point that Mr. Côté did an excellent job as minister in charge of that crown corporation. I am sure that Mr. Andre will also do his very best, given the financial constraints on the government and the problems that that organization has had with labour relations, and so forth, over the past ten years or more.

I am glad the honourable senator is satisfied that the situation is improving in Prince Edward Island. I myself have recently had occasion to assure the people of Pakenham in Lanark County, where I live, that their post office would not be closed.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: This is a matter I thought would be of interest to the honourable Senator Frith, who is sitting in the Senate as a senator from Lanark County and should have been taking up these matters, but I was glad to do it on his behalf.

Senator Frith: If ever I am Leader of the Government in the Senate, I will continue Senator Murray's good efforts.

Senator Roblin: That may be a long time away.

Senator Frith: It may very well be. It will not be a long time until we are over there, but perhaps it will be a long time before I am Leader of the Government in the Senate.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF PRIMARY RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Leader of the Government may know that there has been concern in the native community for some time regarding the inclusion of primary resource industries as being eligible for funding under the Native Economic Development Program. I have been seeking some information recently and I have had trouble finding it. Could he tell me this: Has the government made a decision to include primary resource industries for funding under the NEDP, and when will it be announced, if a decision has been made?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my information on that matter is not as up to date as it should be. I will make an inquiry and report back to the honourable senator.

[Senator Murray.]

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH CN
CONCERNING LONG-TERM RAIL CONTRACTS—MODERNIZATION PLAN—STATUS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week in response to a question, the Leader of the Government indicated that an announcement concerning the agreements between Sysco and Canadian National and the go-ahead for phase two of the modernization plan was imminent.

Could the Leader of the Government bring us up to date on both pending announcements with respect to the future of Sydney Steel?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I ask the honourable senator to give me a day to look into that matter. I thought that some announcements had been made on the weekend in that regard, but I will have to look into it.

Senator Graham: Well, it is true that the Minister of National Revenue, on Friday night at the opening of the annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative Party of Nova Scotia, said that "the deal will assure Sysco of its traditional share of CN's market—"

But he did not give any figures. Almost immediately, the Premier objected to Mr. MacKay's use of the word "domestic," when he referred to the "domestic market and domestic requirements of CN," saying that "Sysco must get 75 to 80 per cent of all of CN's purchases, not just those made in Canada."

What people are looking for is a commitment with respect to a "traditional market," because certainly neither the federal government nor CN will admit to a traditional percentage. What the Premier of Nova Scotia, as I understand, is looking for is a guarantee that 75 to 80 or 85 per cent, which has been traditional, will be awarded to Sysco.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, part of the problem seems to centre on the actual need of CN for rails and whether that crown corporation should be required to purchase more rails than it needs.

I thought that there was, or was about to be, a communiqué issued from the management of CN on this matter. If that has not happened, I will look into it and see what the status is.

Senator Graham: I do not think that they are looking for a guarantee with respect to tonnage; it is a guarantee with respect to percentage.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES
AGREEMENTMOTION TO RESOLVE INTO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE CONTINUED—POINTS OF ORDER

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That the Senate do resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Murray.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I indicated yesterday that I had a number of points of order that I wanted to raise on this matter. I shall do so now—I hope, briefly—and ask honourable senators to address themselves to these points and ultimately, perhaps, ask the Chair to turn on them.

● (1430)

My opening remarks will be brief and I shall conclude by putting three questions on points of order to the Senate and to the Chair.

I must confess that many of the points I am about to raise were alluded to in the discussions in this chamber yesterday. As I said yesterday, the rules of the Senate specify the subject matters which are to be referred to each standing committee. Thus, for example, at page 30, rule 67(1)(n.1) says that it is appropriate that matters relating to fisheries generally shall be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries. Again, on page 27, rule 67(1)(h) says that international agreements should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I should make the point that exceptions to the rule of referring certain subject matters to certain standing committees have, in the past, required the leave of the house. On November 7, 1985, when Senator Doody suggested that certain tax bills be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance rather than to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce where they belonged, he moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 67(1)(l), that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-80, an act to amend the excise tax, and so on.

I suppose that some honourable senators would argue that the Committee of the Whole, because it is composed of all senators, is, in fact, some kind of superior body. I can find no support for that contention in our rules, although it may be that someone can draw my attention to some support for that idea. In fact, on page 2 of our rule book, Part I, rule 5(b) states:

“committee” means a committee of the whole, a select committee, whether standing or special, or a joint committee;

Therefore, honourable senators, I should like honourable senators and/or His Honour to address the question of whether, in order to have the matter under consideration, that is, a fisheries agreement, referred to a committee other than the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries or the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, leave is required of the Senate.

Honourable senators, as I pointed out yesterday, the purpose of the Committee of the Whole and its role over the years has been to examine legislation, including tax measures, clause by clause. On two occasions that I am aware of, proposed new rules of the Senate were sent to Committee of the Whole, but I can find no occasion when the Senate dealt with inquiries. Yesterday the Deputy Leader of the Opposition indicated that there were some precedents. I would be interested in hearing today what they are, because I do not pretend that my research is the last word on this matter.

However, I do draw the attention of the Senate to Beauchesne's fifth edition, page 161, citation 461, where it says:

The function of a Committee of the Whole House is deliberation, not enquiry. All matters concerning the imposition of taxes must be considered in a Committee of the Whole . . .

And then it goes on to say:

. . . and any other questions which, in the opinion of the House, may be more fitly discussed in this Committee, are dealt with in a Committee of the Whole.

As I say, I can find no precedent for the Committee of the Whole to be conducting inquiries of this kind. The Committee of the Whole is clearly not the place to conduct investigations into public business or to hear from witnesses.

I should like to know what precedent there is in this chamber or, indeed, in the House of Commons for using the Committee of the Whole for this purpose.

I should also like to know what precedent there is for calling witnesses in Committee of the Whole either here in this chamber or in the House of Commons. Again, while I do not pretend that my research is the last word on the matter, I can find no precedent to that effect.

I would like to draw the attention of honourable senators to a rule which was referred to yesterday by Senator Godfrey and by the Deputy Leader of the Government. Rule 18 states:

When a bill or other matter relating to any subject administered by a department of the Government of Canada is being considered by the Senate or in Committee of the Whole, a minister, not being a member of the Senate, may on invitation from the Senate enter the Senate Chamber and, subject to the rules, orders, usages, forms and proceedings of the Senate, may take part in the debate.

As was pointed out yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, there have been quite a few occasions over the years, and several in the course of the current Parliament, where ministers have come into this chamber to Committee of the Whole as witnesses to explain bills for which they were responsible. On occasion, as is the custom, we have turned a blind eye to the fact that there was a small table in front of the minister's desk at which were seated several public servants, but those public servants did not take part in the proceedings and spoke only through their minister.

My research indicates that whatever precedents we have for people who are not ministers of the Crown being heard in this chamber do not apply to Committee of the Whole. On a number of occasions before the turn of the century, people involved in divorce cases, usually lawyers, came to the Bar of the Senate to testify that they had served papers on respondents in divorce cases. All the other cases I am aware of where people came before the Bar of this place or the other place were people who were summoned there because of some alleged misconduct or contempt.

I contend that while ministers of the Crown who are not members of the Senate may, according to our rules, enter the chamber to answer questions about bills and to take part in the discussion, officials cannot come in here and be heard. Other interested parties referred to in an earlier motion of the Leader of the Opposition cannot, under our rules, come into this chamber and be heard. Within our rules, provincial premiers cannot come into this chamber and be heard.

Senator Frith: Where does it say that?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it specifies in rule 18 that ministers of the Crown may come in. Surely the honourable senator is not suggesting that it is open for anyone he wants to come in here to take part in our deliberations.

Senator Frith: The Senate can so decree.

Senator Murray: I am going to ask for a ruling on that matter. I am going to ask honourable senators to defend the proposition that we can open the door and have whoever we want come in here to take part in our proceedings. I am going to ask senators to defend the proposition that that can be done within our rules. It seems to me that we are setting quite a major, and not necessarily desirable, precedent. That is a matter to which honourable senators may want to address themselves.

• (1440)

Needless to say, the procedure for hearing people who come to the Bar of the Senate or the Bar of the other place is extremely complicated. The rules provide that when an honourable senator wishes to put a question to one of these people, the question must be put in the form of a motion, moved, seconded and passed, and then His Honour must put the question to the witness who comes to the Bar. As I have said, all of those cases apply to the Senate's sitting as such. None of the cases that I am aware of apply to the Committee of the Whole.

There is a great deal more that I could say, but I think I will wait for another occasion. We have to confront the fact, as I said yesterday, that this motion would have us enter into uncharted territory, without the benefit of rules or precedents to guide us. We shall have to make them up as we go along, if this motion succeeds. I think that this is going to be a cumbersome and difficult process. I think that we would have been much better off to have agreed to send this matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries or the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Therefore, honourable senators, let me for the moment simply put to the Senate the three procedural questions that I want dealt with. We shall see what honourable senators have to say about them. Ultimately, perhaps, I would ask to have the Speaker rule on them.

The questions are as follows. First, is leave of the Senate required to refer this matter to a committee other than the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries or the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs? Second, is it within the rules of the Senate to have an inquiry conducted by the Committee of the Whole? Third, can persons other than senators and ministers of the Crown be heard within the Committee of the Whole?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition):

Honourable senators, I would like to make a brief comment on the views expressed by the Leader of the Government. It seems to me that the questions which he raised have already been answered by the Senate.

Yesterday the Senate decided that the agreement should be referred to Committee of the Whole. The Senate has already decided that it is appropriate to do so. I do not see why it is necessary to ask the question again when, in a formal decision, the Senate answered the question yesterday. I think that disposes of the first question asked by the Leader of the Government. Is it appropriate for the Committee of the Whole to conduct an inquiry? Yes, the Senate has so decided. I do not think we can reverse a decision taken yesterday.

The Leader of the Government then asked: Is it possible for persons other than senators and ministers of the government to come into the chamber? The Senate also decided that yesterday, because the motion states:

That the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France . . . be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing Ministers and officials and other interested parties, including provincial Premiers.

Yesterday, therefore, the Senate also answered that question. It is possible to hear in the Senate persons other than ministers and senators. The Senate said so yesterday. I think it is quite unnecessary to continue a debate on a matter which has already been decided. Would it not now be ridiculous for the Senate to take the view that we cannot have an inquiry in the Committee of the Whole when we decided yesterday that we could have one? It would be equally ridiculous to say today that we cannot hear witnesses other than senators or ministers when yesterday we decided it was appropriate to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing ministers and officials and other interested parties, including provincial premiers.

I suggest that the questions which have been raised have already been decided by the Senate. A reading of the motion will make it clear, I believe, that the questions put by the Leader of the Government have already been answered. Indeed, if we decide at this stage to answer in the negative the questions he has put, then we would be negating the motion passed yesterday.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Does any other honourable senator wish to take the floor to speak to the points of order which have been raised by Senator Murray?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I tried to raise these points of order yesterday in connection with the motion to which the honourable senator refers. I was not able to do so for reasons which are well known. I said at that time, and I still insist, that my points of order are as relevant to the present motion, which is that the house resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, as they were to the previous motion which was passed.

The Senate took a vote on the substance of the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition. The Senate has not—has not, I repeat—addressed itself to the procedural problems that I have raised. I would like to have the Senate address itself to those problems, and I would like to have a ruling from the Speaker on those matters. The honourable senator is basically arguing that my point of order is out of order and that I have no right to raise such a point of order at this time.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as the proposer of the motion before us, I want to underline that it is a motion that the Senate resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. The context for the motion is a decision made by the Senate yesterday that this matter be referred to Committee of the Whole. I reiterate that the motion before us now is that we should resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole, and it seems to me that all of these points of order are completely irrelevant to it.

[Translation]

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the Chair has been asked to rule on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

[English]

Honourable senators, I was not here yesterday to follow the deliberations of the Senate, but before coming into the chamber this afternoon I looked at the proceedings. I realize that a decision was taken by this house that the matter should be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, if we look at Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Citation 315.(2) on page 103, we see the following:

It is irregular to reflect upon, argue against, or in any manner call in question in debate the past acts or proceedings of the House . . .

I may also refer you to Beauchesne's, Citation 416.(1) on page 152, which says:

An old rule of Parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the House." Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the House might be used in the discussion of a motion of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

Regarding the point raised by the Leader of the Government, I do not think it is well founded. Since the decision was made by this chamber yesterday, we cannot ask the chamber today, be it indirectly, to hand down a reversal of that decision, and that is why we will have to live with the decision made by the Senate yesterday.

Regarding the other question raised by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, namely, who should be allowed to appear before a Committee of the Whole, the answer is not quite as straightforward. I believe that according to custom the minister responsible for the legislation appears before the Senate, accompanied by assistants who are not given the floor but who may advise the minister on his answers.

I would like to hear about some precedents. I have been here since 1972 and I have yet to see witnesses appear before a Committee of the Whole and come to the bar of the Senate to testify.

It is possible, but precedents are hard to find. However, Bourinot, in Privileges and Immunities of Parliament, at page 70, says the following:

• (1450)

[English]

When the evidence of any person is shown to be material in a matter under consideration of the house, or a committee of the whole, a member will move that an order be made for his attendance at the bar on a certain day.

[Translation]

It is possible, but I don't think I know of many precedents where this procedure was used. I believe that selecting the witnesses to be asked to appear before regular committees of the house is done by the chairman of the committee, in consultation with the steering committee.

I do not think it is up to the Chair to decide that such and such a witness should appear before the Senate in Committee of the Whole.

An agreement should be reached by the government and members of the opposition on who shall appear before the Committee of the Whole.

As I said before, precedents are hard to find. Obviously, the Chair can hardly inform the Senate that it is going to hear such and such a witness, since the role of the Chair is to carry out the orders of the Senate.

Regarding the fact that leave must be asked of the Senate to sit in Committee of the Whole, that was decided yesterday. I cannot reverse that decision.

In the circumstances, the arguments raised in support of the point of order made by the Leader of the Government are not well founded and hence the Chair must rule them out of order. [English]

SENATE RESOLVED INTO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, speaking to the motion itself, I do not believe that I can add anything useful to what has already been said or what the motion itself says. The Senate has decided that the agreement shall be referred to a Committee of the Whole in order to hear the types of witness listed. Therefore, I ask that the motion be put, that is, that we resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Your Honour, I wonder if I might be permitted a question of clarification? I have no intention of questioning Your Honour's ruling. It is merely a question of clarification. In your citation from Bourinot on the calling of witnesses, I gained the impression from listening that we are considering witnesses called before the Bar of the chamber rather than witnesses in the chamber itself. Is that correct?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: That is right.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on that question, I would suggest that all honourable senators—and I hope that His Honour would agree—should consider the fact that a Committee of the Whole, like any other committee of the Senate, is the master of its own proceedings. I believe that some of the points raised by Senator Murray can properly be raised for the consideration of the Senate when we are in Committee of the Whole. For example, the committee, being the master of its own proceedings, might very well say, "The Senate has authorized us to hear this type of witness. There is authority for certain witnesses to appear at the Bar of the house, but we propose to have a table set up in the chamber, in the aisle, in order to hear them in that context."

If the Committee of the Whole decides to do that, I do not believe there is any doubt at all that it has the right to do so. But that does not mean that Senator Murray or any other senator cannot rise and say, "I do not think that is a good way to do it." It will then be debated in the committee, and the committee, being the master of its own proceedings, can decide how it wants to deal with the question. I believe those are matters for the committee itself, and we can get to that, if the motion now before us is passed.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, on that same point, I have some difficulty in following the reasoning of the Leader of the Government. I would draw the attention of honourable senators to Part I, Interpretation, of our rules. Rule 5(b) says:

"committee" means a committee of the whole, a select committee, whether standing or special, or a joint committee;

So, a committee is a committee. There are four different kinds: a Committee of the Whole, a select committee, whether standing or special, or a joint committee. Rule 5(c) says:

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

"Committee of the Whole" means a committee composed of the whole body of the senators.

I submit that the only difference between a special committee, a standing committee, a joint committee and a Committee of the Whole is that all senators are members of a Committee of the Whole whereas only a few senators are members of a standing or special committee. Other than that, there is nothing in our rules to suggest that a Committee of the Whole would operate any differently from any other committee. It would be master of its own arrangements.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I think the committee itself is the master of its rules. It is up to the committee to decide which type of witness it wishes to hear; but on each occasion the committee would have to decide. A motion can be put by an honourable senator to object to a witness or to put forward the name of a witness who should appear before the committee. That is up to the committee itself; it is not for the Chair to decide what will be the conduct of the Committee of the Whole.

● (1500)

While I am on my feet, I simply want to say that honourable senators know my views and the views of the supporters of the government on this matter. I do not favour what is being proposed. I am very much concerned about the procedure, or, indeed, the lack of procedure, the lack of precedent, the lack of rules to guide us, and the fact that we are going to make them, as it were, flying by the seat of our pants. I have made all these arguments before. I simply want the Senate to know that we are opposed to this procedure. Because we are opposed to it and want it to go on record, I call for a standing vote on the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen:

That the Senate do resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Pitfield—1.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

● (1540)

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I thank you all for permitting me to preside as chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I promise to be impartial, as I have been in the past. May I ask all of you to maintain the good decorum of the Senate. I am your presiding officer and servant. May I ask for your guidance on how we are to proceed.

Senator MacEachen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Honourable senators, may I begin by assuring you, Mr. Chairman, that we appreciate your task as chairman of the Committee of the Whole. I can assure you that we will pay attention to your admonition to maintain the decorum of the Senate, and I believe that with good will on all sides we can maintain that decorum and establish the necessary procedures as we move on to what is new ground.

I have already indicated, Mr. Chairman, my interest in hearing a number of witnesses before the Committee of the Whole, and I believe I should indicate to members of the committee persons whom I would like to see appear before the Committee of the Whole.

At the outset, I should like to indicate the persons I have in mind. Other honourable senators may have other persons in mind and, certainly, which witnesses we hear can certainly be worked out by agreement. I think the Minister of Fisheries should be given an opportunity to appear before the Committee of the Whole and to take whatever time he needs to explain the recent agreement. The negotiators who were responsible for putting their signatures to the record of decision were Mr. Lorne Clark of the Department of External Affairs and Mr. Applebaum of the Department of Fisheries, and I think both of them have a good deal of information which would prove valuable.

There is a reference in the motion to provincial premiers. It is my view that the Premier of Newfoundland and the Premier of Nova Scotia, if either of them wishes to do so, ought to be given an opportunity to give their views to the Committee of the Whole. The same would apply to their counterparts, the leaders of the opposition in those two provinces, if they wished to express their views.

It is my understanding, and as Senator Doody mentioned yesterday, that insofar as Newfoundland is concerned, the question is really a non-partisan one in that province. It might, therefore, be interesting to have a broad spectrum of opinion from the political side.

It would also be of interest to hear Mr. Cashin and Mr. Cummings, the head of National Sea, who made some comments about the impact of this agreement on the industry. There may be others in that category who might be asked.

Finally, I would be interested in hearing, if possible, the Canadian Ambassador to France, Mr. Bouchard, who, I believe, could give us insights into this matter.

I could explain in detail my reasoning for mentioning each of these witnesses, but I will only say that that is my list at this moment which I would like to have considered by my colleagues in the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, you asked for some suggestion as to how we should proceed. I believe that simplicity should be our watchword.

Therefore, I suggest that a table be placed in the gangway and that witnesses, other than the minister or the premiers—if that is a courtesy which we wish to extend to premiers—should take their places at a table in the aisle and give their evidence from that point. It has been customary to seat a minister adjacent to the Leader of the Government, and that procedure could be followed. If a premier wished to appear, I am sure we would want to extend the same courtesy to him, but other witnesses could take their place at a table within easy hearing of the questions which will be addressed to them.

The Chairman: Any other comment?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know that any comment is required from me or from this side. The committee is aware of my views on the desirability of proceeding in this way. However, that has been settled to this point by a vote of the Senate. The committee will find me and my colleagues in a constructive mood, although “goodwill” might be an exaggerated description of my attitude toward this process. Nevertheless, I am, and we are, desirous of seeing that events unfold in as proper, as dignified and in as decorous a way as possible under the circumstances.

My colleagues or I may have names of other witnesses to suggest in due course. At any rate, I have none to suggest today. I have no objection to any of the names that have been proposed by the honourable Leader of the Opposition.

As to how we proceed from here, I really do not know. I have been a chairman of a standing committee of this place as well as a member of various committees. The practice of those committees has been to appoint a steering committee which considers the matter of what witnesses to invite, in what order, and according to what schedule. Then the chairman, usually through the clerk of the committee, gets in touch with the ministers and others who are invited to appear. That procedure has served us well in those standing committees and, I presume, would be the most practicable way for us to proceed in this instance.

I suppose we ought to leave it to the chairman and the clerk to make those contacts and report back to us in due course, although we might consider giving some instruction to the chairman and the clerk as to what days we are prepared to sit as a committee for the purpose of hearing witnesses and considering this matter so that they will have some framework within which to operate in issuing these invitations. Again I say that I have no names to add to the list at this time; I may have later. I have no objection to any of the names that have been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. We are desirous to see this matter conducted in as expeditious a manner as possible.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I wish to support and add a word to what the Leader of the Government has said. I suggest that the chairman and the clerk be authorized to contact the witnesses on the list—and this may be an appropriate time to say that this list is not meant to be exhaustive; others may wish to add to it—and invite them to attend. I suggest that they try to make the arrangements themselves to the extent they can, matching to the extent possible the urgency of the matter, from the Senate's point of view, and the convenience of the witnesses, as much as it can be so accommodated.

Further, I suggest that we do establish a steering committee. It might consist of the mover of the motion, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, Senator Doody, Senator Murray, and as many others as honourable senators might wish to add. But I think the initial steps might be taken without consulting the steering committee. There is a certain precision to the reference and there is a precision to the list. If, however, the chairman and the clerk feel that they need any help, they can consult with the two leaders or the two deputy leaders.

As to our schedule, I suggest, for the consideration of honourable senators, that we inform the chairman and the clerk that we are prepared to sit in Committee of the Whole tomorrow, which would include tomorrow evening, if that is suitable to any witness, Friday morning, afternoon and even evening, and Monday. I say this by way of information for the chairman so that when he asks the witnesses when they can come, it will be made clear that we are treating this matter as an urgent one and will accommodate them to the extent possible. I think it would be inconsistent or inappropriate for us to say to such witnesses that we cannot hear them at any time other than tomorrow afternoon or Tuesday afternoon.

Senator Murray: As I understand it, honourable senators, at the beginning of each day the Senate will sit as usual and then resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, which will report back to the Senate at the end of the day.

Senator Frith: That is correct. If my suggestions are acceptable to honourable senators, then I propose to move that the committee rise and that the chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again. The Speaker, I take it, will ask when the committee will sit again, and I will then propose that it be the next sitting. I am not doing that at the moment because I want honourable senators to say whether they encourage me to do so, but that is how I see the unfolding of events.

Senator Doody: I would ask for some elaboration on the steering committee in terms of its functions, scope and so on. How much of the detail will be decided in the main committee and how much of it will be left to the steering committee? I have no problem with the principles set forth by the honourable senators opposite; they all sound very accommodating. I do have one major problem, however, and it is this: In light of the fact that Senator van Roggen today insisted that a committee is a committee, that one committee is the same as any other, and in view of the fact that yesterday Senator Stewart and Senator LeBlanc expressed so eloquently concern for the fishermen and said that it is directly to the fishermen that we should be speaking rather than to representatives of provincial governments, and so on, is it the intention of this committee to ask permission to travel from place to place, with a view, perhaps, to visiting all of the fishing communities in the province of Newfoundland, or will we leave that to the steering committee to decide?

Senator Frith: I have not had a fast look at the rules, but, although we are masters of our procedure, unless I am mistaken, the rules provide that senators participating in Committee of the Whole do so in their places. We could change that, however.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I think we should have at least a brief discussion of how we expect the witnesses to behave and perform once they get here. Whether the witness be a minister, a premier or an official, I suggest that the chairman, the clerk or whoever advise the witness that we would expect him to do what is considered to be the normal procedure in any standing committee; that is, that he make an opening statement describing his part in the situation, say anything else he might wish to say, after which he will answer questions from members of the committee.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, that is precisely the reason why I asked about the duties and powers of the steering committee. Are we going to get into all of that detail here in this chamber? This is what I anticipated yesterday. If so, we will be bogged down in a lot of detail, and a committee of 104 members is rather hard to manage. When will the steering committee be named? What powers will it have, and when will it meet?

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Honourable senators, this is the first time I have not felt the need to apologize for my ignorance, being a member of this chamber for only two years. I gather that all of us are in the same position. We all find ourselves in what appears to be a totally unprecedented situation. There are just a couple of things that stick in my craw.

I would like to encourage Senator Pitfield to attend, should he wish to, but as an abstainer to this motion, he may not. I have observed ministers who have appeared before the Committee of the Whole and they, quite naturally, have been supported by public servants. What bothers me is that we would call a public servant, a bureaucrat, before this chamber to answer questions rather than wait for the minister, who is the person bearing the ultimate responsibility. It strikes me as being either imprudent or improper to call a public servant to answer questions on behalf of his minister. I would think that if we cannot hear from the appropriate minister, we should wait for him or her. Somehow, I think that we would be acting imprudently or improperly if we were to call a public servant before this chamber and ask him for information which is readily available to the minister—the minister who is accountable for the actions of that public servant. Why drag a public servant before this house? I cannot quite understand the reasoning behind that, but I am sure that the distinguished former clerk of the Privy Council might express some interesting opinions on this subject. Somehow, it does not strike me as a proper procedure.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, in this rarefied atmosphere, I am a little reluctant to raise the question of budgets; but I am wondering whether arrangements will be made for the expenses that will be incurred as a result of this process. There may be expenses involved in bringing in witnesses or in connection with people travelling—or a variety of things. Will the normal procedure be followed? Since the Committee of the Whole will be functioning as a committee, will it require a budget approved by the Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee? How will that be handled?

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, would the steering committee, in determining the procedure to be followed concerning witnesses when they appear before the Committee of the Whole, also consider if questions to the witnesses—more specifically to the provincial premiers, if they decide to appear before the committee—will be limited to the Canada-France agreement, or whether questions can be put to them as to whether they see any desirability of establishing a formal channel of communication between the Senate and the provincial governments such as was outlined in a letter that was circulated to honourable senators some time ago?

Senator Murray: Profitez de l'occasion!

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, in response to the point made by Senator MacDonald a moment ago, I refer to my remarks during the course of the debate on the establishment of the Committee of the Whole, namely, that we are now functioning as a committee of the Senate, like any other committee, except that this committee consists of all honourable senators. In an ordinary inquiry before a committee, a number of witnesses are called, including officials of the department concerned, before the minister is called. We invariably call the minister as a matter of courtesy, but often it is for the purpose of finding out what government policy is. I submit that by calling officials first, before the minister, they will make it quite clear that they will not express opinions but will only give facts and background information. The Committee of the Whole would then be properly informed of the background, of the facts, of where the fishing areas are located, the tonnage involved, and so on, so that when the minister appears before the committee, as we hope he will do, we would be informed and would be able to put intelligent questions to him. So, I do not believe that there is anything different from the procedure that we normally follow in a standing committee in having departmental officials appear before the appearance of the minister.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Honourable senators, if that is an analogy, I am not prepared to accept it. I understand the procedure that is followed in regular standing committees; but in this particular instance, for reasons best known to honourable senators, we have refused to refer this matter to what one would have thought was the appropriate committee. And since it is intended to invite ambassadors and premiers, with all due respect, senator, in my view this is a totally different situation and your analogy fails.

Senator van Roggen: Is this or is this not a committee?

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Since you attach a great deal of importance to this, why not call the minister, the person who is responsible?

An Hon. Senator: He is on the list.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): If all of the ministers who are involved in this matter are available, then why do we need to call the bureaucrats?

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Honourable senators, I have listened to the list of suggested witnesses. As I look at the map of the area affected, I am of the view that we cannot discuss fish stocks in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at the entrance to the Gulf, such areas as 4VN, 3PS, 4T, 4S and 4R, without at least inviting the representatives of the other Gulf area provinces such as Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Since the discussion of the management of those stocks takes place in a committee called the Atlantic Ground Fish Committee, which assembles representatives of all provincial governments involved in the area, plus fishermen and processors, the representatives should be invited. They may choose not to appear, but it seems to me that we owe them the courtesy of ensuring that their point of view is heard—because if you move fishermen from 3PS or 4VN and move them into 4S and 4R, you are affecting not only the interests of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland but also the interests of five provinces.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it seems to me that there may be three or more outstanding matters. With regard to the steering committee, I should make a formal proposal. I have jotted something down—

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition should make his proposal concerning the steering committee, stating how many members from either party, but he should not identify the names. He mentioned the Deputy Leader of the Government. It is with considerable sadness that I have to advise the house that the Deputy Leader of the Government will be out of town next week on parliamentary business. His good fortune in that respect is exceeded only by that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Senator Doody: It is a sense of responsibility. I wish to tell honourable senators, and the rest of my colleagues, that I am willing to turn in my gold star.

Senator Frith: The motion that I had written down did include the Deputy Leader of the Government, but the point raised by the Leader of the Government is valid. So I will change it to have my motion read:

That a steering committee, composed of three members from the opposition and two members from the government side, plus the chairman—

Which would then equalize it:

—perform the usual functions of a steering committee for this matter that is before the Committee of the Whole.

There is a technical term for it. What we call a steering committee is formally called a subcommittee on agenda and procedures.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will deal first with Senator Frith's motion regarding the subcommittee on agenda and procedures. The motion is:

That a Steering Committee consisting of three members of the opposition and two members from the government be established to assist the Chairman to perform the usual functions of a Sub-committee on Agenda and Procedure.

Did you wish to include the chairman?

Senator Frith: Yes.

The Chairman: May I ask that the motion of the Leader of the Opposition be read by the clerk at the Table.

A Clerk at the Table: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the following witnesses be called:

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans;

Mr. Lorne Clark of the Department of External Affairs and Mr. Bob Applebaum of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans;

The Premiers of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec as well as Leaders of the Opposition or their representatives;

The Secretary of State for External Affairs;

Mr. Cashin and Mr. Cummings, head of National Sea, and additional fishermen's associations to be chosen by the Steering Committee;

The Canadian Ambassador to France, Mr. Lucien Bouchard; and Others to be determined at a later date.

Senator Murray: No. Senator LeBlanc of Beauséjour has suggested—

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): They are to be included in the others.

Senator Murray: That is fine, but he suggested the premiers of the other Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, are both suggestions, the one on the steering committee and the one on the list, agreed to?

The Chairman: Yes, they are. That is what I have.

Senator Bonnell: What is agreed to, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: What was said by Senator Frith and the two motions that were read by the assistant clerk.

Senator Bonnell: Are both motions agreed to? Did you put both motions at once?

The Chairman: No, I did not.

Senator Bonnell: Would you start off with the first motion and read it slowly, please?

The Chairman: The first motion is what Senator Frith requested.

Senator Bonnell: What is that?

The Chairman: I shall ask the assistant clerk to read it again.

A Clerk at the Table:

That a steering committee be—

Senator van Roggen: Excuse me. Have we concluded debate on these motions?

Senator Bonnell: We have not put the motions yet.

Senator Hicks: Let's put the first one.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will put the first motion, the one which Senator Frith mentioned.

Senator Doody: The one that we approved.

Senator Bonnell: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you say the one that Senator Frith "moved" rather than "mentioned". I think that we should make a motion of it.

The Chairman: I presume that the motion was seconded by Senator MacEachen.

A Clerk at the Table:

That a Steering Committee consisting of three members of the opposition and two members of the government be established to assist the Chairman to perform the usual Functions of a Sub-committee on Agenda and Procedure.

Senator Hicks: Namely, the Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, are there any questions?

If there are no questions, is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: And those against? The motion is carried unanimously.

The second motion is the one moved by the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

A Clerk at the Table:

That the following witnesses be called:

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans;

Mr. Lorne Clark of the Department of External Affairs and Mr. Bob Applebaum of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans;

The Premiers of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec as well as Leaders of the Opposition or their representatives;

The Secretary of State for External Affairs;

Mr. Cashin and Mr. Cummings, head of National Sea, and additional fishermen's associations to be chosen by the Steering Committee;

The Canadian Ambassador to France, Mr. Lucien Bouchard; and Others to be determined at a later date.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Mr. Chairman, I really do not want to be difficult here. However, we have to try to maintain some balance. If we invite the Leader of the Opposition from a province and a designated individual representing the fishermen, of course I do not object. But I think we should make a slight improvement by stating in the motion that we invite the premiers of the Gulf provinces and representatives of the fishing industry—fishermen and processors—or some words to that effect, so that they do not appear to be left out if there is a news item about this tonight.

Senator van Roggen: Mr. Chairman, my observation is very much along the lines of Senator LeBlanc's observation. We are putting a motion which will bind the committee and the steering committee that these specific individuals be invited. What if one of the premiers of one of those Gulf provinces is unable to come, but his minister of fisheries is able to come?

I would like to see us simply put forward a recommendation to the steering committee to the effect that the steering committee come back with a list of witnesses which would include the witnesses named in this resolution, or such substitutes or other witnesses as they may recommend. Speaking in practical terms, we are going to have to get on the telephone and start inviting these people. Some will say, "I can come," others will say, "I cannot," and others will say, "I would rather that you invite Mr. So-and-So in my stead." I think that we are being unwise in tying ourselves down to the specific resolution rather than giving general instructions to the steering committee.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to see the phrase "send for" replaced by the word "invited". If you send for somebody by an order from the Senate, it is, in my view, a pretty serious command.

Senator Frith: "Called" is the word that was read out.

Senator Bonnell: "Send for" is what is written in the motion that was read out to me. If you invite people, that is a different situation. I would also say that when we think about the industry we must think about, for example, the Maritime Fishermen's Union, because a lot of our fishermen are members of that union. A lot of our fishermen are also members of the Eastern Fishermen's Federation. These are two groups of fishermen who believe in different philosophies of life, and both groups should be invited.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): That is what I said.

Senator Bonnell: Also, the processors who process the fish should be invited. As to trying to pin down a list this afternoon here among ourselves as to whom we should invite and whom we should not invite, I think it would be wiser to leave that matter to the steering committee.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, I would like to elaborate on the point raised by Senator Bonnell. We have just appointed a very competent steering committee. I suggest that because of his experience with people involved in the high technology of the fisheries, we include Senator LeBlanc on the steering committee as well. The steering committee should determine who shall appear and who shall not appear before the committee. I do not think that the Committee of the Whole can establish that list, although some suggestions have already been made. I suggest that we look upon this partial list of witnesses merely as suggestions, and that the steering committee determine who shall and who shall not appear.

[Translation]

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): Honourable senators, rule 64 states the following:

When the Senate is put into Committee of the Whole every senator shall sit in his place.

I have just heard Senator Robichaud speak, and he was not in his place.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I would like to say something on this question of the witnesses. Let me take it one step at a time. We have to remember the order that the Senate gave this committee, which was to hear certain witnesses. That is the starting point. It referred to ministers, provincial premiers, and so on. Then, it seems logical to take the next step, and that is Senator MacEachen's motion that names certain people who should be invited. I thought that we had made it clear that that list was not an exhaustive one. The next logical step is Senator Bonnell's step. That is to say, we have been asked to hear certain categories; then Senator MacEachen says, "Here are some of the people in those categories," and names them. Then, we leave the rest of it to the committee with directions from the Senate to look into people such as those mentioned by Senator Bonnell. It seems to me that we have proceeded in a logical sequence.

The Chairman: Since the motion of the Leader of the Opposition has been approved, may I ask the Leader of the Opposition if he would like to amend his motion or include what was said—

Senator Frith: The motion has not been approved yet.

• (1620)

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, the suggestions made by Senator LeBlanc and Senator Bonnell are quite acceptable to me, and I am agreeable to having my motion amended accordingly. I understand that Senator LeBlanc would like to include similar persons, the Premiers and Leaders of the Opposition from all the Gulf provinces. That is a suggestion which I accept, and I would, therefore, ask if the motion could be amended to include, in addition to the Premiers of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, the Premiers of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec, and the Leaders of the Opposition, if they wish.

Senator Frith: Or their representatives.

Senator MacEachen: There was then suggested that in addition to Mr. Cashin, there was another fishermen's association—

Senator Simard: There are several fishermen's associations.

Senator MacEachen: There was suggested an additional fishermen's association, and I am quite prepared to add representatives of additional fishermen's associations, to be chosen by the steering committee.

I believe that that covers all the suggestions, and I believe that all honourable senators understand what is now in the overall motion which includes, I think, all of the suggestions that have been made, with the additional authority to the steering committee to add to it as it proceeds with its deliberations.

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether Senator MacEachen would accept the suggestion to include another person. You have named the minister of one department involved and not the minister of another. I suggest that you consider inviting the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who would obviously be accompanied by the two gentlemen, Messrs. Clark and Applebaum, whom you originally named and who are the two senior people in that department most familiar with this particular agreement. Why would the Secretary of State for External Affairs not be called if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is called?

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, if Senator MacDonald is suggesting, as I think he is, that the motion be amended to include the name of the Right Honourable Joseph Clark, then, of course, I think that is an excellent addition. I should explain that I did not include the Secretary of State for External Affairs at this stage because, knowing that he had been in India, I was not sure that he was, in fact, in the country. However, if he is available, then, of course, it would be quite acceptable.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the motion be amended as suggested by Senators MacEachen, MacDonald, LeBlanc and Bonnell?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have a couple of items left. Senator Buckwold raised the question of expenses of witnesses. Rule 83 of the rules of the Senate says:

The Clerk of the Senate is authorized to pay every witness invited or summoned to attend before a select committee a reasonable sum . . .

Et cetera. The reference in this rule is to a select committee. I suggest that we apply that rule to the Committee of the Whole. It probably applies in any event, but we might as well have it recorded that the same authority the clerk has to pay the expenses of witnesses for a select or standing committee should be applied here. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That the provisions of rule 83 of the rules of the Senate with respect to the payment of expenses of witnesses shall apply to witnesses appearing before the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Hicks: Mr. Chairman, I think that is correct. Senator Buckwold or someone else suggested that the matter should be referred to the Internal Economy Committee. In my opinion, the Senate Committee of the Whole should not subject itself to scrutiny by the Internal Economy Committee.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it agreed that Senator Frith's motion shall carry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have one outstanding item on my list that might be a little more controversial. I have been contacted by the CBC who have indicated an interest in having the right to televise these proceedings. From what they tell me, this would not involve as elaborate a set-up as does the Speech from the Throne, but they would like the opportunity—probably with hand-held cameras—to cover these proceedings in the same way as they might cover a committee of the Senate.

However, honourable senators, that is not something I am proposing at this moment. I am merely asking you to consider the proposition which I may propose when we are in a position to actually hear witnesses. I do not imagine that the CBC are interested in televising what is going on today.

Senator Bosa: Mr. Chairman, what would happen if other channels requested the same privilege?

Senator Frith: If other networks made the same request, they would use a common feed.

Senator Murray: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I very much apologize to the honourable senator.

Senator Frith: I always pay attention to you, senator.

Senator Murray: I apologize to the honourable senator. I gather that he was talking about broadcasting the proceedings. I would like to ask whether, in fact, he has made a motion.

Senator Frith: No, Mr. Chairman. I have simply advised the members of the committee that I have heard from the CBC. This contact occurred on Monday when they realized that this motion was before this house. I was told that if the motion carried, they realized that it would be up to the committee to decide, but that they would be interested in televising the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole of the Senate on this matter.

What I said a moment ago was that because that is something we might want to consider and not decide until the witnesses are actually here, honourable senators might think about it and then I will make the proposal when there is a reason for putting it into effect.

Senator Doody: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask: How long did it take from the time the motion was placed on the table until the CBC heard about it? Was that three, four or five days?

Senator Frith: No, the motion was moved on Thursday.

Senator Barootes: Did you phone them?

Senator Frith: No, I did not. I am glad you asked that question, senator. I did not phone them, but there was probably news about it on the weekend or at the first of the week, because the call came to me on Monday.

Senator Doody: Would it be fair to say that it took four days for the news to leak out to the CBC? That says something either about the CBC's news-gathering ability, or the importance of the Senate to the CBC!

Senator Frith: I do not think that is fair to the CBC. Just because it took them until Monday to call or to decide that they were interested does not mean that it took that long for the news to get to them.

Senator Doody: Perhaps it says something, then, about their bureaucracy, if it took them four days to make a decision.

Senator Frith: Look at how long it took your side to make a decision.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, I merely put this proposal before the committee as a matter of information.

Senator Olson: I am ready to decide today.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, as part of his motion, the Leader of the Opposition has asked that any witness called before the Committee of the Whole be permitted to enter on to the floor of the Senate and sit at a special table set in place for that purpose. Is that agreeable, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Chairman: Motion agreed to, on division.

● (1630)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXTEND DATE OF PRESENTATION OF REPORT

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc moved, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, February 10, 1987:

THAT the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which was authorized by the Senate on October 9, 1986, to continue its examination of the activities of the Government of Canada in its financial support of post-secondary education and vocational training, be empowered to present its report no later than April 2, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, I shall restrict my comments in support of this motion to the strict essential so as not to drag out the debate any longer.

When the Senate resumed its sittings last October for the second session of this Parliament, I was certain that the motion introduced and agreed to on October 9, 1986, would give the Committee on National Finance enough time to complete its examination of post-secondary education financing. At the time, I had indicated that the report would be presented to the Senate on February 26, 1987. Naturally, I had thought that this would give the committee enough time. However, I now realize that the date of presentation is nearly here.

Because of general opinion, or perhaps I should say media opinion, this report required a lot of work throughout the summer and during the adjournment of Parliament. Indeed, somewhat before the beginning of the second session, the draft of the first report was completed. This draft was distributed to the members almost immediately after our return, but officially, it was distributed only after reconstitution of the committees.

Committee members have worked very hard and, in spite of the many short adjournments of the Senate, they attempted to meet the February 26 deadline. I will say further that during two of these adjournments, revised copies of the report were mailed to the residences of these members and to their Ottawa offices. The dedication of the committee was such that this report had to be drafted several times and the findings amended at least five times.

The report and its recommendations are quite valid, but I feel—I assume it might also be the opinion of a number of other committee members—that this report contains some controversial and involved matters, which explains all the time devoted to it.

I am happy to advise you that the work is now completed. We have met the situation head on. The report has been approved by the committee. It is being translated and the English version was sent yesterday to the printer's office.

This being a critical period of the year because of the budget and supplementary estimates, the printing delays are beyond our control and I ask that the date for tabling the report in the Senate be postponed to April 2, 1987.

I will conclude by saying that those who are most interested in these matters may find solace in the fact that the committee will not need additional funds.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF CANADA BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan B. Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, February 12, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-7, An Act respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend other Acts in relation thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, February 5, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-37 ADOPTED

Hon. Ian Sinclair, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, February 12, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-37, An Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto, recommends, in accordance with the Order of Reference dated 5th February, 1987, that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purpose of the said examination.

Respectfully submitted,

IAN SINCLAIR
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to ask a question. I have no intention of trying to impede in any way the committee's travelling or hearings—I just wanted to make sure that all of our procedures are followed. Is the budgetary procedure all in order and, in this case, do we have a budget presented? Or is that necessary in this particular case?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the procedure that we have been following recently is that when a committee is established to do a study of this kind and asks the Senate for authority to do a study, if it asks the Senate for the power to travel and to retain services, it does not ask for those powers in the original motion but only when it has a budget ready and approved. The reason is that senators have asked that they have an opportunity to know, when they are considering whether they should give those powers, how much it will cost.

Under the present system, the motion would pass without the power being given to the committee to travel or to hire assistance. Then, in accordance with the plans of the committee, a budget would be prepared and would be sent to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. The chairman of the committee would then come to the Senate and ask for approval of the travel expenses.

Senator Doody: Thank you. I simply wanted the procedure to be put on the record.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, my understanding was that after presenting the report, as I have done, and once it has been adopted—and I ask that it be adopted this day—we would then prepare a budget with the knowledge that we were going to travel. If the budget were not approved, of course, the committee would have the right to travel, but without being granted its expenses, and knowing some senators, that would have the same effect as not permitting the committee to travel.

I suggest that the proper procedure would be for the Senate to grant the committee the right to travel. Then the committee could present its budget, which would leave the matter wholly in the hands of this all-seeing body. I would suggest that is a proper procedure.

Senator Frith: I personally support the idea of this committee's travelling to study this particular subject, but the system proposed by Senator Sinclair is one that the Senate has changed. To have the authority to study a question, to have the authority to travel, and then to present a budget does not solve the problem raised by the chairman of the subcommittee on budgets, which is as follows: When a committee chairman comes to him with authority from the Senate for the committee to travel and to retain assistance but the Senate makes no mention of a budget, then the subcommittee chairman finds that he has nothing left to do. The Senate has no knowledge as to how much it will cost, but it has granted authority.

When the Senate gives authority for a committee to travel, unless there is an intervening stage where all of us can vote on the matter, no one knows how much it is going to cost. The Internal Economy Committee has no authority to turn down a budget, because the Senate has already given the authority to travel.

As Senator Barrow used to say, the only role that you leave the committee is for it to suggest that the committee is charging too much per diem, or some such thing. There is no other control.

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration is now suggesting that we furnish it with a budget so that the Senate will know how much it is going to cost when it authorizes travel and professional assistance.

This problem arose with the committee which Senator Kelly chairs and other committees. It does sound awkward to present it to the Senate in these two stages, but the reason for it is that senators were complaining about a committee wanting power to travel and the power to retain services and asking for that authority without telling the Senate how much it was going to cost.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I listened with a great deal of awe to Senator Frith. He said that what I proposed was a procedure that had been adopted in the past and that that procedure had been changed. Yesterday I heard that this Senate could do whatever it wanted about procedures. So, at this time, I am asking you to revert to your former practice.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, that this report be taken into consideration now, with the restrictions mentioned by Senator Frith?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart, that this report be now adopted, with the restriction above-mentioned. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Just to make sure it is even more confused, I should say on the point of order that unless I misunderstood, if this is the regular work of the committee—that is, it is not a special study—then probably what we just did is in order. It would be nice, would it not, if it were?

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is the time at which I usually present to the house the adjournment motion. I have been given a motion, but I am not in a position to give any explanation of it. Perhaps the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, or whoever, can tell us the order of battle for next week. As a mere government house leader, I hesitate to ask, nevertheless, I feel it incumbent on me, on behalf of my colleagues, to ask the chairman of the committee to tell the house leader what we are supposed to do next week.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I intend to make my report when Order No. 2 is called.

Senator Doody: Under those circumstances, I feel it expedient that we stand the motion until later in the day.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—STATUS OF AGREED RECORD OF NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR COPY OF NOTE VERBALE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government if he could give me some information with respect to the agreed record of negotiations between Canadian and French representatives, which was tabled in the Senate on February 4 and which is found in Debates of the Senate at page 448.

My question is a very simple one: Is this agreed record of negotiations between Canada and France the binding agreement? Did Mr. Lorne Clark have the authority to bind the Canadian government? Did his signature bind the government, or was there a further exchange of notes which would constitute the agreement? While I am asking, if there is a further exchange of notes, could we have that documentation before we resolve into Committee of the Whole?

Further, could the Leader of the Government take a look at the unofficial English version of the French note in which the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France presents its compliments to the Canadian embassy? It then refers to the embassy's Note Verbale No. 353 of December 30, 1986. Could we be given a copy of that note, if possible, for next week?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with regard to the second part of the question, I shall inquire. I do not know whether it is customary to table that kind of document, but, if it is, I will naturally bring it in and table it here. As to the first part of the question, the document referred to was tabled in response to a request from the Leader of the Opposition. I asked for the agreement and tabled it. I hope and expect that nothing was withheld.

Senator MacEachen: I assure the Leader of the Government that there is nothing sinister about my question. I ask it simply to know whether Mr. Lorne Clark had the power to bind the Canadian government. In other words, was he a plenipotentiary acting for the government with the capacity to bind? If he was not, then presumably there was a further instrument, probably signed by the Canadian ambassador. That is all I want to know. It is a little point, that's all.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, subject to correction, my information is that Mr. Clark was so authorized.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government concerning the sale of Teleglobe Canada. He will know, of course, that there is an investigation under way by the Toronto Stock Exchange because there appears to have been some unusual trading in Teleglobe shares prior to the announcement of its sale to one of several bidders. Is the government undertaking an investigation to ascertain whether or not there was a departmental leak which led to the unusual trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange taking place before the formal announcement was made by the government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I received a quick verbal briefing on this matter before entering the chamber a few minutes ago, in the course of which I was assured that the investigation by the Toronto Stock Exchange is a perfectly routine matter. However, experience has taught me to be somewhat sceptical of those quick and general assurances, and therefore I will take the question as notice and will look into it more closely. At the present time, the information I have been given, and what I convey to the honourable senator, is that the investigation is a routine matter.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the information that so far as I know is public knowledge is that the Toronto Stock Exchange is investigating whether or not there has been what is called "insider trading" that was unknown to the general public. I have seen nothing in the reports so far that would expand that investigation to ascertain whether or not there had been a leak, prior to the government's announcement, that of all the bids submitted, Memotec Data Inc.'s bid was going to be accepted. Therefore, I am wondering whether the government feels that it should look into this matter, because one does not need to be very suspicious to understand that there could have been a leak.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will make inquiries.

SPORT

CANADA WINTER GAMES, SYDNEY, NOVA SCOTIA—ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government confirm that the Prime Minister will be present for the opening of the Canada Winter Games in Sydney this coming Sunday?

While I am on my feet, I might say that our colleague, Senator MacDonald, will be there, as will be the Honourable Flora MacDonald and a number of others. I hope also to see my honourable friend and others there.

Senator Frith: Including the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Murray: Including the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, I am sure that other honourable senators from Cape Breton will also be present.

Senator Muir: I was invited, but he did not mention me.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, please!

Hon. Charles McElman: No honourable senator has called for order. I would like that to be shown on the record. No honourable senator has called for order.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH CN CONCERNING LONG-TERM RAIL CONTRACTS— MODERNIZATION PLAN—POSSIBILITY OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, could we anticipate that a positive announcement will be made with respect to the future of the Sydney Steel Corporation, either before or during the Prime Minister's visit to Cape Breton?

First of all, with regard to the purchase of rails by Canadian National, my information is that in order to allay various concerns or, indeed, misunderstandings that seem to have arisen about the matter, the two crown corporations—Canadian National and Sysco—are now preparing an agreement which they will both sign and which will put the arrangement on a clear and secure footing.

• (1420)

With regard to the modernization plan, I have nothing further to report. I am aware that my colleague, the Honourable Michel Côté, Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, met the other day with the Premier of Nova Scotia on the matter, but I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with him since that time. As soon as I have done so, I shall report back to the Senate. However, I have no reason to believe that any announcement on that matter will be made during the Prime Minister's visit.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, the announcements with respect to Sydney Steel and phase two of the modernization program, which is known as the Sydney Steel Business Plan, were made both by the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada on several occasions in 1985. In February 1986, an agreement between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada was signed.

Senator Murray: To which we are committed for $110 million.

Senator Graham: Yes. I am glad that we have that on the record as well. The Government of Canada is solidly committed for the amount of $110 million.

[Senator Frith.]

The Premier of Nova Scotia has said that the future of Sydney Steel is tied to an agreement between CN and Sysco for the purchase of rails. Those negotiations between the province, CN and Sysco have been going on for some considerable period of time. What I am asking the Leader of the Government is: Can he give us a time frame as to when that agreement will be signed?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot specify an hour and a day as to when this will happen. The honourable senator pointed out yesterday that the Minister of National Revenue had made an announcement over the weekend which he thought, and we all thought, conveyed the information that was sought and required. It appears that the announcement seems to be subject to different interpretations and, perhaps, to some concerns and misunderstandings which have arisen. That being the case, it was decided that CN and Sysco together should prepare an agreement which both of them would sign and which would put the arrangement on an unmistakable and secure footing. As I understand it, what we are talking about is an agreement to give effect to the traditional arrangement between these two companies with respect to the supply of rails.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, with respect to the traditional arrangements, it is hoped that we can anticipate that that arrangement will include all CN purchases in the future, not just domestic purchases.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are various nuances and various implications to that question. I do not think that I should run the risk of creating any further misunderstanding on the matter. There will be a piece of paper signed, understood and agreed upon by both parties, and that agreement will be made public. As I told the honourable senator, it is being worked on now, and I can only conclude that it should not be very long before it is signed and made public.

Senator Graham: Honourable senators, may I just make one point so that we all understand perfectly clearly what is at stake here, and that relates to the offshore purchases as well. For instance, in the calendar year 1986-87, CN has already purchased, or is in the process of purchasing, offshore, some 30,000 tonnes of rail. In the previous year, 1985-86, they purchased, offshore, 26,000 tonnes of rail, and in the year before that, some 6,700 tonnes of rail. Therefore, we see there is an escalating trend.

I also understand that some of those rails are head-hardened rails which Sysco, at the moment, is incapable of producing. However, as soon as the Business Plan Phase Two is completed, or is into its tenth or eleventh month, as I understand it, then Sysco will be able to produce the head-hardened rails.

Notwithstanding that, in this current year, 1986-87, CN purchased offshore some 12,000 tonnes of rail of an intermediate calibre which Sysco was quite capable of producing.

Senator Murray: What the honourable senator has said does conform to what I understand from government sources. I do not know the extent to which the offshore purchases by CN could have been effected in Canada. That is why it is, perhaps, a little difficult—and can lead to misunderstanding—to talk too casually about what the tradition has been. In other words, in terms of traditional purchases, are we talking of a percentage of the Canadian rails that CN normally purchases, or are we talking about the entire rail order, including offshore? As I said, I do not want to add to the misunderstanding. We can probably wait for a few days until the agreement is signed, sealed and delivered by the two crown corporations, and then we will know where we are.

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question following upon Senator Graham's questions. The response given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate was that the Minister of National Revenue had made a statement in Halifax. That is quite true; I happened to be there when he made it. However, following that, within minutes the Premier of Nova Scotia spoke and he was not at all happy with the statement of the minister, and I am sure the press releases will indicate that.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate, as a member of cabinet, could tell us when this agreement will be signed, on paper "and in blood, if necessary," as the Minister of National Revenue is reported in the press as saying. In any event, perhaps the Leader of the Government could tell us something concrete to the effect that this matter is definitely going ahead.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am aware of the two statements to which my honourable friend refers, the one by my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, and the subsequent statement by the Premier of Nova Scotia. It is precisely because this misunderstanding has arisen, or these concerns have been expressed, that it was decided that the best course would be to have the two crown corporations prepare an agreement which both of them would sign, indicating what the plans of CN would be in this respect, in order to put this situation on a secure and predictable footing.

As we speak, the two crown corporations are, according to my information, meeting to prepare this document. In view of the fact that both understand what is involved, I cannot believe that its publication will be delayed very long.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It seems that hardly a month goes by without the appearance of another crisis in our trade relationship with our friends in the United States. I am now referring to a proposed penalty on Saskatchewan potash producers of 43 per cent, which is being sought by the American producers as a dumping duty because they claim unfair competition in that regard.

The potash industry is a major industry in Saskatchewan. Many people find it unusual to learn that Saskatchewan is a major mining province. Potash exports to the United States in the first nine months of 1986 were 270 million tonnes.

Senator McElman: Including New Brunswick's exports?

Senator Buckwold: Yes. That figure is for all of Canada, and New Brunswick is coming into the picture.

Senator McElman: As a major.

Senator Buckwold: As a major, but not a real "major".

Senator McElman: Coming from Saskatchewan, you know that New Brunswick's industry is "major".

Senator Buckwold: It is a Class B baseball league, without denigrating our friends from New Brunswick.

But it is a serious situation and the industry is certainly perturbed.

The Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) has indicated the federal government will follow its traditional procedure of assisting the industry in fighting that imposition.

I am hoping that the Leader of the Government in the Senate will, in due course, be able to outline to the Senate some of the procedures that may take place and that may be slightly different from the normal routine of objecting. We do not seem to have been very successful at avoiding such duties in the past. We have seen that in the softwood lumber industry, and we have heard it talked about in the steel, hydroelectric power, natural gas and other industries.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Is the leader aware of any different approach, or is it just a matter of dealing with the niceties, or how far will we get in finally being able to say, "This is enough," because, as far as I know, and the industry has said this, there are no unfair trading practices. The application of a 43 per cent dumping duty would be an impossible burden and would result in hardship to an industry which is already suffering from very low prices and difficult markets.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the basis of my friend's question is still quite hypothetical. What has happened is that a United States senator from New Mexico has been pressing strongly for action for either anti-dumping duties or countervail against imports of Canadian potash.

The Canadian government views this seriously because that United States senator has managed to obtain some kind of assurance from the U.S. Secretary of Commerce that officials of the administration will assist the New Mexican producers with the filing of such a petition. However, I must say that, first of all, the potash producers have not yet filed such a petition with the United States Department of Commerce, so I cannot speculate on what might happen there; second, that the Canadian government is monitoring the situation closely. We have been in touch with Canadian producers and have assured them that they will receive assistance from the Government of Canada.

Senator Olson: That is the way all of the others started!

Senator Buckwold: I have a supplementary question. I think the situation may have been advanced further than has been indicated in the response given by the Leader of the Government. I am quoting now from today's Montreal Gazette, which states:

● (1430)

Two major potash producers from New Mexico, accusing Canadian companies of dumping potash into the U.S. market at less than fair market value, have asked U.S. trade authorities to impose a penalty duty of 43 per cent.

So, it is not merely a senator deciding to stir up a little action for his own benefit; it has got to the point now that I gather that a petition has been made officially to move in the direction that I have pointed out.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend's information may be more up to date than mine. It is, I suppose, possible that since I was briefed on the matter a petition has actually been filed with the U.S. Department of Commerce.

In any case, my answer remains that the Canadian government has been in touch with the Canadian producers to offer our assistance and support.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER—IMPOSITION OF DUTY BY EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday the head of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association issued a warning that a number of European countries were considering putting a duty on Canadian softwood in the aftermath of the Canadian government's export tax on softwood going into the United States.

Could the minister confirm whether or not this is a possibility and that the Europeans will act in that way? If so, what action has the Canadian government taken to forestall this serious threat?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my information is that the Canadian government does not foresee a significant diversion of softwood lumber to the European market. The Canada-United States softwood lumber agreement was not an admission by the government of subsidization, rather, it was a negotiated settlement to protect those who work in the industry, while protecting the right of the provinces to manage their resources and to keep forestry revenues in Canada.

Senator Molgat: I have a supplementary question.

Senator Frith: Well, are you going to let that go by?

Senator Molgat: The minister has not indicated whether there is a possibility that the Europeans will act in this way. Are they, indeed, thinking of this? If so, what action will Canada take?

[Senator Buckwold.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, I do believe that while concerns have been expressed by European lumber producers, and they have sent a letter to the European Economic Commission requesting the imposition of a 15 per cent duty on Canadian softwood, we say that the application of the export tax was consistent with our obligations under the GATT. Therefore, we do not see how the European Economic Commission could contemplate any action as a result.

Senator Molgat: But it is correct, then, that some European countries have made application to the E.E.C.?

Senator Murray: Some European producers have.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—REPRESENTATION AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATIONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have in my hand a letter from the Prime Minister of Canada to the Honourable John Crosbie, P.C., M.P., dated February 10, 1987. It did not come in a brown envelope; it came in a press release! It was put out by John Crosbie's office. It scares me, because it states in paragraph three—and I would like to put it on the record—that:

At the outset, I want to assure the people of Newfoundland, through you, that they can count on you, as their cabinet representative, and Morrissey Johnson and Joe Price to speak for them effectively and permanently on this issue.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: That is the cod issue. He goes on to say:

You are to be fully involved with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries on all further negotiations on this subject. Your counsel will be sought, together with that of Captain Johnson and Mr. Price on all matters affecting the fishery of Newfoundland and Labrador and matters involving the well-being and the interests of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

I thought, after listening to the five premiers or their representatives in Toronto last week, that the Premier of Newfoundland said that he had a written agreement with the Government of Canada that the Government of Canada would negotiate with that province before any agreement would be signed with any foreign country about the fish. Now the whole thing is left in the hands of the "Czar of the Gulf," John Crosbie.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: What is the sense of asking the premiers for their opinions? What is the sense of asking the members of Parliament or the members of either house when the whole thing is in the hands of Morrissey Johnson, Mr. Price and John Crosbie, P.C., M.P.?

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate this: Maybe this is a mistake on the Prime Minister's part; maybe he will consult the Premier of Newfoundland; maybe he will consult the Premiers of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick; maybe he will consult his cabinet representatives, Mr. McInnes and Mr. Tom McMillan, Mr. Merri-thew from New Brunswick and Mr. Elmer MacKay from Nova Scotia; maybe he will interview Mr. Pat Binns, the Parliamentary Secretary of Fisheries in Prince Edward Island, or Mel Gass, the former one. Otherwise, you might as well send them all home when it comes to fish.

What about our Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries—and our senator from Newfoundland—which studied the west coast fishery with some terrific recommendations, when compared with the study of the east coast?

Senator Doody: They took it away from him.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Senator: What's his name?

Senator Bonnell: His name is Senator Marshall, a good Newfoundlander.

An Hon. Senator: What about Bill Doody?

Senator Bonnell: My question is: First, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate speak to the Prime Minister and tell him that there are other people representing that region besides the "Czar of the Gulf," namely, John Crosbie? Will he be consulted? And, second, will he tell him, "Don't forget Premier Peckford."?

An Hon. Senator: Is that "sire" or "squire"?

Senator Bonnell: Will he also tell him, "Don't forget to consult Senator Doody as well, the deputy leader of this house—and don't put the whole thing in the hands of Mr. Crosbie."?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the honourable senator has given me an opportunity to add to the list of those who are being consulted closely—the names of my colleagues, Senator Doody, Senator Marshall and Senator Cochrane. The honourable senator has added, himself, a number of names from various other maritime provinces.

Senator Doody: The problem in that is to include himself.

Senator Murray: The point of the Prime Minister's letter was to reinforce the important role that is played in these matters by the ministers and members of Parliament in Ottawa. Unlike a previous Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney does not believe that members of Parliament are "nobodies".

Senator Frith: Only provincial premiers; that's all!

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, we have a letter here from the Prime Minister giving assurance to the people of Newfoundland that their representatives in the House of Commons and in the government will have an opportunity to determine the outcome of the present discussions.

It is incumbent upon me to ask if a comparable letter has been written to the ministers from Nova Scotia and a letter containing assurances that all the members of Parliament from that province, which is, indeed, also a fishing province, will be included in these crucial discussions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have no hesitation in pointing out—because it is a fact—that in the course of the current controversy, some highly placed people in Newfoundland have taken the occasion to try to cast some doubt on the role played by, and the effectiveness of, their minister and their members of Parliament in Ottawa. That did not happen in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick.

● (1440)

While I cannot say what was in the Prime Minister's mind when he wrote that letter, I think it is entirely proper and correct that he should have taken the occasion to reinforce the importance of the contribution that is made and the role that is played by the minister and members from the province of Newfoundland, given that background.

Senator Stewart: Then, we may conclude that the letter is not intended to imply that Mr. Crosbie is to be more influential in this matter than either Mr. MacKay or Mr. McInnes, or, indeed, that the members of Parliament from Newfoundland are to weigh heavier in these discussions than the members of Parliament from Nova Scotia. That is a fair conclusion?

Senator Murray: It would be a fair conclusion to say that the letter was not intended to be exclusive.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: I have the very strong impression that there may have been another letter written by the Prime Minister indicating that the next time a decision is made by the Prime Minister's Office, the Minister of Fisheries will be consulted.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are several hypotheses to that question, none of which I accept.

Hon. Charles McElman: I have a supplementary question. Could the answer given by the Leader of the Government be categorized by this interpretation of it—that it was a letter to mend political fences in Newfoundland rather than to look after the administrative needs of the situation?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators, it is not a question of mending any political fences at all, it is a matter of—

Senator Molgat: Rebuilding.

Senator Murray: —reinforcing for the people of Newfoundland the importance of the role played by their minister and their members in Ottawa, in view of the fact that the media and some highly placed people in Newfoundland have taken the occasion to stir up controversy to try to cast some doubt on that matter. I think it was a perfectly responsible initiative by the Prime Minister of Canada under the circumstances.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FOOTWEAR—REMOVAL OF IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, for several days Senator Bosa has been patiently awaiting an answer to his question about shoe imports.

For the moment, I simply wish to report to him that the Minister of International Trade met with representatives of the industry yesterday afternoon. I hope to have a further report on that matter within a day or two.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I can assure everyone that the Committee of the Whole has no intention of travelling outside of this building!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Doody: The people of Canada may have something to say about that!

The Chairman: Honourable senators, your Sub-committee on Agenda and Procedure has the honour to report to the Committee of the Whole.

Your sub-committee met last night, and I instructed the clerk, the assistant clerk and Mr. O'Brien to contact Mr. Siddon, the Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Oceans; the premiers of the Gulf provinces; and any other premier who might wish to appear before this committee.

I have been informed that the Honourable Thomas Siddon, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, is prepared to appear before your committee on Tuesday, February 17, at 11 o'clock in the morning, and that Mr. Lorne Clark and Mr. Robert Applebaum will also try to be present at that time with the minister.

If our sitting is not concluded after hearing these three gentlemen, we will continue in the afternoon, after the Orders of the Day, to hear from Mr. Gordon Cumming from National Sea.

That completes the information I have to report to you thus far.

I have therefore pointed out to the Leader of the Government that there will be no necessity for the Senate to sit tomorrow or on Monday but that we should resume our sitting at 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

Senator Godfrey: Would the chairman take us into his confidence and tell us who the members of the sub-committee are?

The Chairman: It is comprised of Senator MacEachen, the Leader of the Opposition; Senator John B. Stewart; Senator Jean-Maurice Simard; Senator Finlay MacDonald; and Senator Roméo LeBlanc.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt this short report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, is this the Mr. Cumming of National Sea? How were the witnesses determined? Was this done in consultation?

The Chairman: This list was suggested on the motion of the Leader of the Opposition. It was discussed yesterday during your absence.

Senator Doody: I should add, honourable senators, in all fairness, that at the time it was suggested that any other senators in the Committee of the Whole who wished to add names to that list were perfectly welcome to do so. It is also fair to say that yesterday Senator Marshall was in Juneau, Alaska, on official business. He was not just absent.

Senator Muir: He was there in his capacity as chairman of the Fisheries Committee.

Senator Marshall: I wonder if I could put this to the Leader of the Opposition: Since he considered Mr. Cumming of National Sea, did he consider any of the management of the fishery, the FBI in Newfoundland?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the name of Mr. Gordon Cumming was mentioned in particular, but I had in mind—and I think I mentioned it at the time—that it would be appropriate to add other representatives of the industry. It is clear from the motion itself and from the discussion we had that it would be appropriate for other names to be suggested. I assure the honourable senator that at least insofar as I am a member of the steering committee, I would be happy to cooperate.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I assume that we have the assurance that the committee on agenda will continue its attempt between now and next Tuesday to arrange for witnesses to attend. In other words, between now and next Tuesday, we will continue to arrange for the attendance of some of the other witnesses on the list, is that correct?

The Chairman: Yes, it is correct. All of the premiers and all of the people who have been mentioned have been contacted by telephone and have received a telegram. Unfortunately, we must keep in mind that this happened less than 24 hours ago. Thus far we have not received correspondence or approval other than that which I have mentioned.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, unless there are other questions, I move that we rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the France-Canada Fisheries and Territorial Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

NINTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (supplementary budget of Social Affairs, Science and Technology), presented in the Senate on February 5, 1987.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

By way of explanation, I remind honourable senators that this was a special request of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology for the work of one of its subcommittees on employment training. The subcommittee had an agenda planned for work of the committee in Europe. There was a requirement for additional funds, some $4,000. Since we were not then sitting, the Speaker and I authorized that funding according to the rules. The main committee approved that decision and this report was tabled. Honourable senators are asked to consider and to adopt the report.

I was told by the chairman of the subcommittee that, as it turned out, he did not actually need to use this additional money, but I think we should get this matter off the order paper. The quickest way to do so, it seems to me, is to adopt the report.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF DEBATES AND MINUTES—MOTION TO CALL PRINTING BUREAU OFFICIALS BEFORE THE SENATE—MOTION WITHDRAWN AND ORDER DISCHARGED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That officials from the Canadian Government Printing Bureau be called before the Bar of the Senate to explain the delay in the publishing of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators will remember that we have had an investigation of this matter by the Speaker. We have had assurances from the department which, in my view, are satisfactory ones. Therefore, I ask leave to withdraw this motion.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn and order discharged.

A PEOPLE APART-NATIVES IN SASKATOON

SPECIAL NEWSPAPER REPORT—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order;

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Buckwold calling the attention of the Senate to a special report by the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix entitled "A People Apart - Natives in Saskatoon".—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard J. Corbin: Honourable senators, even though I have been preparing notes to take part in this debate for the last few months, in view of the complexity of this issue, I have decided on reflection that it would be better for me to withdraw from the debate.

If other senators wish to speak, the way is clear for them to do so.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to intervene, this item on the Order Paper is deemed to have been debated.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

REFERRAL BACK TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON FILM ENTITLED:
"THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—INQUIRY STANDS

On Inquiry No. 4:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have postponed this inquiry because there are certain documents that we had requested of the National Film Board as a result of the meetings we held last session. We have not yet received them, but I expect them soon. I regret that this inquiry has remained on the order paper for this long.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask leave of the Senate to present the adjournment motion now.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 17th February, 1987, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if his intention is to ask leave on Tuesday to proceed immediately to Committee of the Whole and not to deal with other matters that would normally be considered during Question Period and those that would appear on the order paper.

● (1500)

I understand that we will be hearing from the minister at 11 a.m. Will leave be sought to proceed immediately to that order, and when the Senate resumes its sitting later revert back to the other orders? Because, if not, we might adjourn until 10.30 a.m. and this order would come up after Question Period. It seems to me that the best way to deal with it would be to assume that we will seek leave to proceed immediately to the order on Committee of the Whole and later seek leave to revert to the first order on the order paper.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I am in the hands of honourable senators in this respect. I have no objection to our sitting at 10.30 a.m.; but the steering committee had decided that 11 a.m. was the appropriate time. If honourable senators would prefer to meet at 10.30 a.m., I will certainly move that the time in the motion be changed to 10.30 a.m. Also, I have no objection to our proceeding immediately to Committee of the Whole and have Orders of the Day stand until later. That would facilitate business more easily.

Senator Frith: I believe that would be the best way.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 17, 1987, at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 17, 1987

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to Order No. 4.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I note that we have called witnesses before the committee this morning, and in a moment I will fetch the witnesses, who are now waiting in my office. However, before doing so, I would like to ask you, in your capacity as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures, what other witnesses have been scheduled for this committee and when they are coming. I note that we have Mr. Gordon Cummings on deck for this afternoon, but I have no further information as to witnesses beyond this date. Can you give us a report on that matter?

The Chairman: Honourable senators, my information is that we will have before us today the minister who, as the leader has said, is waiting with his two officials, and also Mr. Cummings who would like to be heard today. As far as I know, these are all the answers that we have received.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition and other honourable senators had suggested a number of other names as possible witnesses before the committee. I do not want to press the subcommittee chairman and his staff unduly, but it would be useful to know whether these people have been contacted, what replies they have given and when we might expect to see them, because we do have to schedule the business of the Senate for the coming days and weeks.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, my information is that all of those persons who were mentioned in the motion were contacted by telephone and telegraph and thus far we have only heard from the four witnesses I have mentioned.

Senator Frith: I am sorry, "heard from . . ."?

Senator Murray: From the witnesses who are appearing today.

Senator Frith: Are you referring to those from whom you have merely heard, Mr. Chairman, or are you referring to those who have their confirmed attendance?

Senator Murray: I will let the chairman answer that question.

Senator Frith: Do I understand that the only confirmed attendances that we have to date are the four mentioned, Mr. Chairman? Is it not correct that there are discussions taking place in an attempt to settle times for others who are interested in attending?

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I have just been informed that the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Leader of the Opposition in Nova Scotia have declined to appear before the committee.

Senator Frith: And as to the others who have been contacted, do we have any definite response from them either for or against?

The Chairman: No. My information from the Clerk Assistant is that we have no other confirmation or reply.

Senator Frith: And are there discussions taking place about those who have not committed themselves one way or the other?

The Chairman: Yes, there are.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator Murray: I think most of us saw a public statement attributed to the Premier of Newfoundland in which he also declined to attend. Is that the information that the subcommittee has?

The Chairman: No. I am informed that we do not have that information. He has not, either by telephone or telegram, informed the committee that he will or will not appear.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, can you confirm whether or not there was some indication from your communications with the Government of Newfoundland that the Premier of Newfoundland might be interested in, or was considering, heading an all-party delegation to come with colleagues from both sides of the legislature?

The Chairman: My information is that that is still under consideration.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of all senators, could we have, for the record, a list of all those who were asked to appear before the committee?

Senator Frith: That is already on the record.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will get that list shortly.

Senator Murray: I have just one question before I escort this morning's witnesses into the chamber. What about the unions and the company representatives, the industry representatives? Have they been contacted and are they coming?

The Chairman: The steering committee has not decided on the list of union representatives and other persons. We have met only once, and we will meet again this afternoon after the sitting.

Senator Murray: Thank you. We will return to this matter later in the week, because it is of some importance in connection with our future scheduling.

If it is the wish of the committee, I will now get the witnesses.

Senator Bonnell: Before you get them, I have a question to ask. If you have not contacted any of the factories, producers and companies, and if you have not contacted any of the fishermen's associations yet—and you have not even had your steering committee decide who you will ask—then do you know if we will be able to get all of the answers we need from our witnesses today, or will we need to sit tomorrow and next week? Do you not think it would have been wiser to have used the weekend to give those fishermen's associations an opportunity to decide whether they wanted to come or not? And, finally, have you decided that you will just ask those people like National Sea, to whom we have already given millions of dollars? What about some of the producers who are making a living by themselves in this country, who live on codfish, hake and haddock and other kinds of fish? Will you ask them, or will you just ask those who are heavily subsidized by the government?

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I have now been supplied with a list of those who were contacted. The following witnesses will be called:

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans;

Mr. Lorne Clark, of the Department of External Affairs, and Mr. Bob Applebaum, of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans;

The Premiers of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec, as well as the Leaders of the Opposition or their representatives;

The Secretary of State for External Affairs;

Mr. Cashin and Mr. Cummings, head of National Sea, and additional fishermen's associations to be chosen by the steering committee;

The Canadian Ambassador to France, Mr. Lucien Bouchard; and Others to be determined at a later date.

Senator MacEachen: Let us have a meeting of the steering committee.

Senator Marshall: The steering committee should meet now.

The Chairman: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: Let us deal with the fish we have in the boat!

The Chairman: —as I mentioned to you, the steering committee will have a meeting after we rise today. So, how do you want us to proceed?

Senator MacEachen: I want to hear the minister.

Senator Frith: We want to proceed.

Senator Argue: It is the biggest fish we have had for a long time!

Senator MacDonald (Halifax): Honourable senators, because of the unusual, unprecedented meeting of the Committee of the Whole today, and because the witnesses will be sitting where they will be sitting, and because members may wish to change their seats and be able to face the witnesses and to speak from another place, I move, seconded by Senator Balfour, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That rule 64 of the Rules of the Senate be suspended with respect to procedure in Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Balfour, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That rule 64 of the Rules of the Senate be suspended with respect to procedure in Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: This means that senators will not have to speak, raise questions or otherwise participate from their places, which is the normal rule.

Senator Murray: I am sorry to delay the proceedings further, but, if I am not mistaken, leave of the Senate would have to be sought from the Speaker. The Speaker will have to return to the Chair in order to effect Senator MacDonald's proposal.

Senator Frith: I do not think so.

Senator Murray: The motion is that, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding one of the rules of the Senate, we proceed in a certain way. I hope my friend will agree with my point of view. If he does, it will only take sixty seconds to deal with this motion.

Senator Frith: The motion should be moved in committee, and we should not ask for leave of the Senate.

Senator Bonnell: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I tend to agree with the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We are dealing with a rule of the Senate and not a rule of the committee. If we want to change the rules of the Senate, the Speaker must be in the Chair. If we want to move the motion in committee, we have to have the leave of the Senate.

I think we should continue the tradition we have had in place since Magna Carta. That is, we should remain in our places and stand up like men to say what we have to say. I am not in agreement with changing the rules and, therefore, I think it is unnecessary for the Speaker to return to the Chair. Leave is not granted. I think if you cannot stand up and be seen, speak up and be heard, and sit down and be enjoyed, it is not worth the effort to speak in the first place.

Senator Murray: In that case, leave has not been granted and the matter is no longer before the committee—although I would point out that the leave that was sought was leave of the Senate, I suppose it is still open to an honourable senator to find some other way of accomplishing the same purpose.

Pursuant to Order adopted on February 11, 1987, the Honourable Thomas Edward Siddon, P.C., Mr. Lorne Clark and Mr. Robert Applebaum were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, let me take thirty seconds to welcome for the first time to our chamber my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable Tom Siddon. Mr. Siddon is the member of Parliament for Richmond-South Delta and has been since 1978. He was Minister of State for Science and Technology until November 1985, when he assumed his present portfolio.

Mr. Siddon is accompanied by Mr. Bernard Applebaum, Director General of International Affairs in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and by Mr. Lorne S. Clark, Senior Negotiator for Canada-France Maritime Affairs, from the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that my colleague has an opening statement to make.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say to our witnesses that we welcome them in our midst and that we are pleased and honoured that they have accepted our invitation.

Witnesses, you are not in a court of law. You are not under oath. You are in the Senate of Canada. The Senate has a long-standing tradition of being factual. Of course, every word, either in English or in French, is recorded. You are at liberty to use either of the two official languages of our country.

The Senate, by a majority vote, has decided to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole. This will be a journey of research into the reality of this very important problem.

We want you to feel at ease and to relax. We will give you all the time you need to answer the questions properly. You may consult your assistants or companions at any time.

We ask you to please keep your preamble brief; in other words, you should not make a speech in answer to any question. My honourable colleagues have the reputation of being fair and cooperative. With a mutual understanding of the need to recommend a possible remedy for this very important problem, let us work together for the benefit of our country.

I now call upon the Honourable Thomas Edward Siddon, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Hon. Thomas Edward Siddon, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Honourable senators, in the spirit of the chairman's words of welcome, I already feel much at ease in this "other" house. I want to say how privileged I feel to be here today, having arrived, unlike other fisheries ministers, by a rather unorthodox procedure, that being a motion of the Senate. My principal purpose in being before senators today is to answer their questions in accordance with a motion, which I understand was introduced in the name of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, that the Committee of the Whole of the Senate be granted an opportunity to examine the various circumstances, merits and facets of the recently signed agreement between Canada and France on the maritime boundaries issue.

I will not take the time of this committee, Mr. Chairman, to repeat the introduction of the two officials who appear with me. Needless to say, I am accompanied by the two principal negotiators for Canada in the ongoing discussions with France on the interpretation and the implementation of initiatives which will resolve finally and permanently the boundary dispute in the vicinity of the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. Mr. Chairman, before calling upon my officials, and in accordance with your request that I be brief, I would simply like to give a short historical account of the various steps that were taken leading to the conclusion of an agreement on January 24, which conclusion merely represents but the beginning of an important process for Canada.

Honourable senators, the question of the boundary delineation in the vicinity of the French islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon has been before Canada for decades. In particular, however, since the declaration by Canada of our 200-mile economic zone in 1976, the question of how to define the boundaries around the enclosed islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon became very important for Canada. From a time shortly thereafter, in 1977 I believe it was, when France and Canada agreed to begin discussions on this important question, there have been meetings each year, I am told, at the diplomatic level between Canada and France, with a view to resolving permanently this serious problem, which is of costly and historical significance to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, especially those of Newfoundland and Labrador.

During 1986, with a view to resolving this issue, the momentum gathered, with the consequence that a series of meetings were held between our negotiators and their counterparts for France. Those meetings involved full participation and input by the affected industry representatives of Atlantic Canada representing fishermen and processors and, as well, the Atlantic provinces that had an interest in this important process. Through a series of meetings leading up to mid-January, considerable progress was made in putting together a package of undertakings, a package of conditions under which Canada would be prepared to enter into the formal negotiation of a reference of this boundary issue to some form of international arbitration.

Mr. Chairman, the implications for a solution to this problem in the area of the outer mouth of the St. Lawrence Estuary, which we call in fisheries parlance 3Ps, will be very significant in an economic sense for Canada. At the present time in the disputed zone, where France claims an area extending some 180 miles to the south of the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon—an area as large as the entire province of Nova Scotia, I am told—French vessels fish in accordance with quotas which they set and which do not concur with quotas that Canada sets in the same area, which we claim as largely being Canadian territorial waters. As a result of this impasse and the insistence by France on fishing groundfish—cod in particular—at levels some six times the level of quotas which Canada concedes to France in that area, the cost to our fishermen and the risk of the permanent destruction of those important fishing grounds can be measured in the millions of dollars per year. At the present time, what we consider to be the over-fishing by the French national or metropolitan vessels amounts to at least 20,000 metric tonnes per year, which might be valued at upwards of $40 million per year. So, you can see that the financial, economic and social implications of this unresolved problem are significant, indeed, for all Atlantic Canadians, especially for the fishermen whose livelihood, in this case, is being exported to another country.

Mr. Chairman, on January 24 the Government of Canada concluded an agreement with France, the elements of which I shall leave to my officials to explain to you in greater detail. In essence, the agreement of January 24 merely sets out three things: first, a timetable for negotiating two parallel agreements; second, a commitment of a certain allocation to France, both to vessels based in Saint Pierre and Miquelon and the French metropolitan fleet, in 1987; and, finally, in the context of the two agreements to be negotiated, a set of interim arrangements encompassed in one of those agreements dealing with French fishing quotas in Canadian waters beyond the end of December 1987. So, to repeat, a timetable has been established within which the two negotiators, industry and provincial government representatives will be fully engaged to establish what is referred to in diplomatic jargon as the “compromis”, or terms of reference under which the boundary issue would be referred to compulsory arbitration by a third party; and, second, parallel and coincident with that, an agreement to accept certain interim fishing arrangements between 1988 and 1991 by which time it is expected the boundary decision would be reached. I repeat, those interim fishing arrangements do not specify any particular quotas for France. There have been no a priori commitments to quotas or allocations beyond the end of 1987 contained within this agreement, but there is a controversial element in that a particular stock, known as the northern cod stock, in 2J+3KL, has been included in the agreement, the undertaking being by Canada to negotiate some undefined, but, we believe, modest, commitment beyond 1987 of allocation in that area on the Grand Banks as part of the package to persuade France to refer the boundary issue to this compulsory third party tribunal.

• (1120)

Mr. Chairman, I want to restate that there has been no numerical commitment of allocation in any of the waters of Atlantic Canada to France beyond the end of 1987. In coming to my conclusion, let me indicate that for 1987—and I think this point must be restated and stressed—French allocations of cod quotas in Canadian waters in 1987 will be one-half of what they were in 1986. There is a significant reduction of some 17,000 metric tonnes of cod because of the expiry. Because of an element of the 1972 treaty between Canada and France, that expiry after 15 years led to the withdrawal of the French metropolitan fleet from the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In the same package of quotas for France in 1987, I might indicate that there has been great misunderstanding of a reference to 15,600 tonnes of allocation to France.

Mr. Chairman, that 15,000 tonnes is part of the quotas to which Canada is obligated under existing treaties, and, as I said earlier, it represents a significant reduction of quotas to France over all previous recorded years. The 15,000 tonnes is comprised of some 10,000 tonnes of cod allocations, considerably less than in the previous period, as well as allocations of stocks which are surplus to Canadian requirements.

There is absolutely no substance to a suggestion that we have paid a significant price or given away additional fish in securing this agreement. The 15,000 tonnes was fully contained within the groundfish plan, which was published at the end of December 1986; fully negotiated with industry representatives through our groundfish planning process in the autumn months of 1986; and fully supported by Atlantic governments and Atlantic fisheries ministers, with whom I met most recently on December 1 to confirm those arrangements.

There is but one modest exception, which was agreed to by negotiators up to their most recent meeting in mid-January, and that is to allocate some 3,000 tonnes of what are referred to as surplus cod in the ice infested very northern waters between Labrador and Greenland, which are never fished to their full quota; and for that reason they are defined as “surplus”, and in this case the various provincial and industry officials were fully aware that such an offer would be made for 1987 alone.

Mr. Chairman, as a result of what I consider to be a misunderstanding, and a procedural problem, for which the government has apologized to Premier Peckford, there has been, of course, a good deal of public controversy over this decision to conclude an agreement in Paris on January 24; but I might add that the coming together of premiers last Monday evening in Toronto and, again, my meeting yesterday in Moncton with the Atlantic Council of Fisheries Ministers have produced a very interesting and, I believe, encouraging result.

With the exception of Newfoundland, the provinces of Atlantic Canada—as I understand the statements and the evidence which was presented to me yesterday in Moncton—the Atlantic provinces, including Quebec, agree that this is an important initiative for Canada, and they will support and be full participants in the negotiations which will unfold between now and the end of December.

There is some concern about a process matter. That has been explained and an apology has been made. I want to tell all members of this chamber that the Atlantic provinces feel this is an important initiative for Canada. Newfoundland has been included in the ongoing negotiations. Newfoundland has been invited by the Prime Minister to subscribe to these negotiations. We are extremely pleased with the undertaking and the willingness of all Atlantic provinces to continue on track and to be a party to these important negotiations. There is, of course, a residual disappointment on the part of Newfoundland, but we feel that in time that will be resolved.

So, the conclusion of my message, Mr. Chairman, is that we are staying on track. This is an important initiative for Canada which will bring untold positive material and social benefits to the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, and it is in that spirit that we have entered into this process.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, the officials would like to make a short presentation on the geographical aspects of the problem and on some of its technical and legal aspects and the implications of this process.

Would that meet with your favour, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, are we to understand that after this technical background the minister will be able to stay for some time and that this will not abridge the time the minister is able to spend with us?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I am available until at least one o'clock today. If honourable senators are not satisfied, we will see what other times can be arranged.

I am not available later this afternoon, but I think it would be helpful if the officials could make a presentation. I am certainly willing to answer any and all questions.

The Chairman: The honourable Leader of the Opposition will start questioning.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, according to the minister, it would be helpful for the presentation if we heard from the officials. I am quite prepared to hear from them, but I add that I hope we will have an opportunity to receive answers from the minister himself on some key questions today or subsequently.

Mr. Siddon: Absolutely. I might ask, then, the two chief negotiators for Canada to make a short but helpful presentation on the process and the elements of the agreement.

Mr. Lorne S. Clark, Senior Negotiator for Canada-France Maritime Affairs, Department of External Affairs: If honourable senators agree, Mr. Applebaum will indicate the key areas on the map that are of direct concern, then we will proceed with our presentation.

Mr. B. Applebaum, Director General, International Directorate, Department of Fisheries and Oceans: Mr. Chairman, I will not take long doing this. I know each senator has a map, but those maps may not be self-explanatory. That is why I think it would be helpful to sketch the various areas. This will help you to focus as we go through this discussion.

Area 2GH on the map is indicated by the letters as being in this area, but the actual area is within the 200-mile zone along the coast here. This is the 200-mile zone limit, and 2GH is this area off the northern coast of Labrador, between Labrador and Greenland, as the minister said.

The other area the minister referred to is 2J+3KL. Again, the letters are here, but the area is actually inside this red line, the 200-mile limit, and it incorporates all of the area down to the area within that line, but stops short of an area called 3Ps. It is not easy to see 3Ps from where the honourable senators are sitting, but if you trace it on your maps you will see the area it comprises. Each of these areas is a separate stock management area; each area contains a separate cod stock which is separately managed because it does not intermingle with the other stocks.

In this 3Ps area, as you can see, off the south coast of Newfoundland there is in red an approximation of the French claim. Their islands are marked; the green is their territorial sea limit, which they claim and we recognize, and which we state is the maximum claim to which they are entitled. They claim an equidistant line between the islands and all the territory, and that equidistant line gives them, according to their claim, a large area which encompasses most of the main fishing grounds in the 3Ps area.

The Gulf is indicated on the map and has two main stocks, the 4RS+3Pn stock, which moves between the Gulf and this little 3Pn area outside of the Gulf, and the southern Gulf stock, 4T+4Vn, which migrates outside the Gulf into an area just south of the Gulf.

Those are the basic elements that you will need to understand in order to comprehend when we talk about these various areas.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could review very briefly the 1972 Fisheries Treaty between Canada and France, because that is the cornerstone of all subsequent fisheries negotiations between the two countries.

In 1972 a formal treaty was signed which had four key articles. The first one—which was Article II—provided for permanent but unquantified rights for France in an eventual Canadian zone of extended jurisdiction. That, of course, later became known as the 200-mile zone. Article III, to which the honourable minister referred earlier, provided for a phase-out of the metropolitan French fleet from the Gulf of St. Lawrence over a 15-year period which ended in May of last year. Article IV provided for permanent and continuing rights for a small Saint Pierre and Miquelon fleet in the Gulf of St.

Lawrence, even after the phase-out of the metropolitan fleet. Article X provided for compulsory disputes settlement in the event of differences in interpretation or application of the 1972 treaty.

Since 1972 there have been periodic negotiations with respect to actual quotas. Since the 1972 agreement did not provide for any specific quotas, periodic negotiations have taken place over the intervening years for periods ranging from one year as a minimum to a maximum of five years, providing the French with precise quotas in Canadian waters.

Mr. Applebaum will continue with some comments on the recent implementation of the 1972 treaty.

Mr. Applebaum: The most recent arrangement with the French covering the last six years was negotiated in 1980, and came into force in 1981 for the six years remaining for the metropolitan vessels in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In that agreement, it was agreed that the maximum catch in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or of Gulf of St. Lawrence cod stocks, for the combined French fleet, both metropolitan and SPM vessels, would be 20,500 tonnes. That figure would run to the end of 1986, following which the metropolitan vessels, under the 1972 treaty, had to leave the Gulf. Therefore, following that date, there would have to be new consultations with the French in order to decide what the remaining Saint Pierre and Miquelon vessels would be allowed to catch in the Gulf for 1987 and beyond, because they had continuing rights to fish in the Gulf in perpetuity. Therefore, honourable senators, one element was the description of the arrangements for the Gulf stocks.

At the same time, during that period, problems developed in the area called 3Ps off the south coast of Newfoundland. Up until the early 1980s, the French had respected the quota that had been traditionally set aside for them as their customary share of that stock, which was in the range of 5,000 to 6,400 tonnes, depending on what the total allowable catch limit for that stock was. However, in the early 1980s and until recently, the French began to increase their catch in that area to the point where it was authenticated that in 1986 they actually caught something of the order of 26,000 tonnes of cod in an area where, as I stated, their fair share would have been 6,400 tonnes. Therefore, we were having serious problems at this stage.

The two things then came together: At the end of 1986, the deal with the French for the Gulf is at a conclusion, and the metropolitan vessels must leave the Gulf. Neither they nor the French government have made any provision for what they will do when they lose their fish in the Gulf. At the same time, the French had already begun the massive over-fishing in 3Ps. Those two situations created pressures between the two governments to try to resolve the problems that are there: the over-fishing problem and the problem of the boundary off the south coast of Newfoundland and off the south coast of Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Perhaps Mr. Clark will continue from there.

Mr. Clark: The maritime boundary dispute dates back to before 1972. During the 1971-72 fisheries negotiations, parallel negotiations were held between Canada and France to try to resolve what was then a continental shelf boundary dispute, because, of course, this was prior to the 200-mile zone era. As a result of those negotiations, at the same time that the 1972 fisheries treaty was concluded, a boundary agreement was initialled by the negotiators of the two sides which provided for a 12-mile territorial sea around Saint Pierre and Miquelon and an additional 12-mile continental shelf with certain provisions relating to hydrocarbon access and also to some ancillary fisheries provisions.

In 1972 the governments decided to proceed with full signature and implementation of the 1972 fisheries treaty, but not to proceed with the boundary agreement that had been negotiated in 1971-72. Therefore, the boundary agreement, in effect, was put on the shelf and was never given force by Canada and France.

In 1977, at the beginning of the year, Canada declared its 200-mile fisheries zone, in accordance with the new emerging international Law of the Sea. France followed suit almost immediately and declared a 200-mile exclusive economic zone, or EEZ, around the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. At that point, of course, we had the massive claims of the two sides in creating a zone of overlapping jurisdiction or a disputed zone. Furthermore, whereas in 1972 the disputed zone was relatively small because it dealt basically with the continental shelf dispute, because of the new emerging and evolving Law of the Sea negotiations under the UN auspices, the EEZ concept had come to be accepted, and therefore the French took advantage of that and tried to maximize their claim, and the large disputed zone that faces us today was created at that point.

Between 1977 and 1986, as Minister Siddon indicated, there were a series of negotiations to try to resolve the boundary dispute. The two positions were narrowed only slightly, and by the end of 1986—November, to be precise—the two sides, Canada and France, agreed that the negotiation route had been exhausted and that it was not possible to arrive at a negotiated settlement of the boundary dispute. At that point, the issue was how we could move from the exhausted negotiation route to compulsory arbitration of the boundary: judicial settlement in place of negotiated settlement.

Mr. Applebaum: I hope it is clear from our presentation that the reason this overfishing has been taking place off the south coast of Newfoundland is because we have that large area of overlapping claims. The fact that the French claim this large area means that it is impossible for us to enforce Canadian fisheries regulations in that area to control the French within the quota that we have set for them. That is the reason we have that overfishing problem there. We do not have a problem with the French in overfishing in any other area in Canadian waters. In all undisputed Canadian waters, they fish to quotas, they are inspected, they have observers on board, and there is no overfishing by France in Canadian waters except in that disputed area, which we cannot control.

Now, going along still on background, one of the important parts of the background here is the Canada-E.E.C. agreement which, after some start-up problems, went into effect in 1983. As of 1983, Canada has allocated to the European Economic Community, for five years—a period that ends at the end of 1987—9,500 tonnes of 2J+3KL cod, that crucial cod stock that I indicated on the map that is not surplus—it is non-surplus cod. We have also allocated to the E.E.C., under that treaty, 6,500 tonnes of surplus cod in 2GH, to the far north; and there is a squid allocation as well.

The main allocation that I want to refer to is the 2J+3KL cod allocation of 9,500 tonnes of which France has been receiving 1,545 tonnes, because that is what the community allocated to France: 1,545 tonnes. Most of the remainder is caught by the West German fleet. As I said, that agreement ends at the end of 1987, so there is no obligation under that treaty to give 2J+3KL cod or, for that matter, anything else to the E.E.C. after 1987.

I would like to go on and describe the negotiations that brought us to this point of the January 24 agreement. The French had been starting to press us in 1985 for consultations or negotiations—however you want to put that—on what their quotas would be in Canadian waters after the metropolitan vessels had to leave the Gulf at the end of 1986. For various reasons, we put off those consultations. They began in a serious way last spring when the French sent a delegation to Canada and the Canadian delegation, with all advisers present, met with them and heard the French demands.

The French demands were really quite extraordinary—they are all in the public domain. To put them simply, the French said, “Yes, we are leaving the Gulf where we have been catching 20,500 tonnes of cod, but when we leave the Gulf, we want a total of 30,000 tonnes of cod to replace the 20,500 we have been fishing up to now.” What they were saying was, “We have been fishing 20,500 tonnes of Gulf cod, but we want 12,000 of that to continue for the Saint Pierre and Miquelon fleet, which has the right to continue to fish in the Gulf, and we want 18,000 tonnes outside the Gulf and outside the disputed area,”—because, they said, “that is our area and we will not recognize it as yours. We want 18,000 tonnes of cod, primarily in 2J+3KL.” At that point in that meeting we were under directions to listen to the French views and say nothing; to ask some questions about how they got to these numbers, but not to respond—and we did not.

A subsequent meeting was held in Paris with advisers present. We explored further what their numbers were and put our own positions forward, which were that, basically, they were not entitled to any of this. They had agreed under the 1972 treaty to leave the Gulf. When the metropolitan vessels left the Gulf, there was to be a small quota for SPM vessels that continued, but Canadians were supposed to get the benefit of the French departure from the Gulf. That discussion was simply that kind of a discussion; it did not come close to any conclusion.

There was a follow-up meeting with the French in St. John's. Again, it was a full meeting, with delegations present from both sides, where some numbers were tried on the French.

Senator Argue: What time, what date? Excuse me.

Mr. Applebaum: The exact date, sir?

Senator Argue: Approximately.

Mr. Applebaum: I think it was in November.

Mr. Clark: Mid-November.

Mr. Applebaum: November, mid-November was the date in St. John's.

Senator Argue: The first one in Paris, or was there a prior one in Paris?

Mr. Applebaum: October. At the November meeting we again tried some ideas on the French. One of the main ones we said to them was that in the area outside the Gulf, we were prepared to offer them not cod but a mixture of other species—9,000 to 10,000 tonnes of various other species like Greenland halibut, redfish and 2GH cod, surplus cod in that area that I have indicated, as part of a 1987 to 1991 quota arrangement, which would also be tied in to settling the boundary—we would have to negotiate a treaty to get the boundary settled—and also tied in to a rollback of their overfishing in 3Ps to the 6,400 tonne quota, which was their fair share of that stock, and which we had allocated to them over the years. That meeting was not productive; we were very far apart on the question of the French claims.

Discussions went on through the diplomatic channel, and in a subsequent meeting between, basically, heads of delegations in Paris in December, there was a kind of modus vivendi worked out—not an agreement to settle these problems but an approach that would say that “during the forthcoming meeting of Prime Minister Chirac to Canada in January, perhaps we can agree not on the quotas but on some sort of a program to solve these problems, and maybe leave aside 1987 quotas in some way while we work out 1988 to 1991 quotas and while we work out some way of dealing with the boundary problem.” That turned into a meeting in Canada, in Ottawa, to which Prime Minister Chirac did not come. As you recall, his visit was cancelled, and the French Foreign Minister came. There was a meeting with the French to try to develop that program, but it did not succeed. So, at that point, the full delegation meetings with the French were over. Subsequent events developed after that which led to the January 24 agreement. Perhaps I could ask Mr. Clark to refer to those.

Mr. Clark: My colleague has mentioned that we listened to the French proposals in the early part of 1985 and then moving into 1986. The reason for this was that we had an arbitration on with France at that time called the La Bretagne arbitration. We had a dispute with France over filleting in the Gulf of St. Lawrence by a factory freezer trawler called the La Bretagne, which was registered in Saint Pierre and Miquelon. That dispute triggered the arbitration process, the compulsory dispute settlement process, for the first time under the 1972 treaty. Until the decision was rendered on that dispute, in effect, Canada wished to avoid substantive negotiations on quotas. We wanted to see what the judges said in that case. So we had these meetings with the French where we listened to their position without countering them, because we were waiting for the verdict in the La Bretagne case. When the judgment was handed down in July of 1986, indeed, it was adverse to the Canadian position, and the French won that arbitration—which is the only example we have to date of dispute settlement under the 1972 treaty.

My colleague referred to the January 13-16 meeting in Ottawa with full delegations present, the results of which were not satisfactory in that we were not able to close the remaining gaps and arrive at an acceptable package along the lines he described, that is, an interim arrangement for 1987 which would be accepted by the French, leaving to future negotiations the 1988-91 quotas and the treaty to refer the boundary dispute to arbitration.

The following week the French contacted the Canadian side to ask if it would be possible to have a heads of delegation meeting in Paris that would look at the elements that had been on the table the previous week, and that had been discussed with the advisers on both sides, to see if among those elements, with a little bit of flexibility on both sides, a "window of opportunity," as it was expressed, could be taken advantage of to try to come to an arrangement which would initiate the program of future negotiations. It was recognized by both sides that a total package deal was not really feasible at that point. Therefore, the French indicated that if we could construct a bridge that would take us beyond the impasse we were facing for 1987, we could have allocations unilaterally provided by Canada, reluctantly accepted by France, indeed, under protest, for these minimal allocations and an agreement to continue two-track negotiations, one on the 1988-91 quotas and the other on the parallel treaty to refer the boundary to arbitration.

As a result of that meeting, which took nearly two days, with a great deal of intense discussion at the head of delegation level—without advisers on either side from industry or, from the Canadian side, the provinces; from the French side, there was no representation from Saint Pierre and Miquelon—a bridge package to launch this program of parallel negotiations was arrived at. Since the signature of the 1972 treaty, quotas had always been agreed upon either explicitly or implicitly between Canada and France. For the first time, because of the impasse in which we found ourselves, unilateral allocations, made by Canada, protested by France, were put in diplomatic notes which were linked to a document called "conclusions agréées" or "agreed record." Though France protested that these quotas were below their legal entitlement, they explicitly agreed that for 1987 they would, nevertheless, accept them on the basis that the negotiations would continue for firm agreed 1988-91 allocations in parallel with the boundary reference negotiations.

What did the January 24 agreement provide? It provided for the status quo in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Thirty-five hundred tonnes of cod were allocated unilaterally by Canada and accepted reluctantly by France. Three thousand tonnes of surplus cod in the 2GH area was, again, unilaterally allocated by Canada and accepted by France.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that Canadian fishermen are allocated 8,000 tonnes of cod in that 2GH area and they fish less than 2,000 tonnes of it. It is clearly surplus stock that is not only not overfished but quite extensively underfished by Canada and by other foreign states to which allocations are given.

There was no 2J+3KL cod given for 1987. The French had tried, by every means possible, to get even a minimal allocation for 1987 in that area. Recognizing the sensitivity of that stock, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans instructed the negotiators that under no circumstances was any allocation to be given in that area for 1987.

It was agreed—as part of an overall package involving agreed 1988-91 quotas plus a signed, sealed and delivered treaty referring the boundary dispute to arbitration—that, in that context, the Canadian side could look at and have on the table some unquantified and still-to-be-negotiated quota of 2J+3KL cod for 1988-91. In addition, there was in the agreement an understanding that there would be a meeting of scientists reasonably soon to look at the whole question of the overfishing in the disputed zone, that is, in 3Ps. The idea was that the scientists would try to arrive at some joint recommendations, the eventual effect of which would be to get a roll-back, modest as it may be, of the French overfishing in the disputed zone in an area, of course, which Canada was not able to enforce because of the French claim.

The final two points in the January 24 package dealt with a continuation of the previous understanding not to board each other's vessels in that area in order to avoid confrontation; and, finally, a non-prejudice clause regarding the future negotiations with respect to the treaty on reference of the boundary dispute and with respect to the legal positions on the 1972 fisheries treaty so that the January 24 package could not be cited in a later arbitration or dispute settlement process as prejudicing either side.

As a result of the January 24 package, the main achievement was basically threefold. First, for the first time, there was a publicly declared commitment to go to arbitration on the boundary and to negotiate a treaty to ensure that a boundary reference would be placed before the judges by the beginning of 1988, if possible. Second, there was a very modest and tentative step in the direction of trying to move towards curtailing French overfishing in 3Ps by means of joint scientific recommendations. Third, the difficult, sensitive and emotional issue of 2J+3KL cod was avoided for 1987 and put forward to be dealt with and to be addressed in the context of the 1988-91 negotiations as part of the overall package.

Senator Hicks: I have a question for Mr. Clark. Does the agreement not to board apply only to the 3Ps area or to all the areas?

Mr. Siddon: The senator's question has to do with whether the agreement, in both of its components, applies only to the 3Ps area. Perhaps Mr. Applebaum or Mr. Clark would elaborate. Perhaps it was not made clear that the other element deals with interim fishing arrangements.

Mr. Applebaum: The agreement of January 24 does not establish quotas for the disputed area. The agreement of January 24 is actually a text which was signed and two unilateral notes, one by Canada to France and the other from France to Canada. It incorporates a number of things, but the key element is that it provides the French with 3,500 tonnes of Gulf cod for 1987, which was an approximation of their average catch over recent years for the Saint Pierre and Miquelon vessels. The Saint Pierre and Miquelon vessels have been catching roughly that average over recent years. That is continued as a status quo for 1987. As well, it includes the 3,000 tonnes of 2GH cod, the surplus cod, which is taken far north from the 3Ps area.

● (1200)

Senator Hicks: But the provision prohibiting boarding one another's ships applies to all of the areas, does it?

Mr. Clark: Senator, I think this is a very significant question and I will be absolutely precise. Because of the area of overlapping claims and because each side could treat such an area as being under its own jurisdiction, the potential for confrontation clearly existed. Therefore, it was agreed that a previously understood agreement dealing with that contested area should be renewed, but specifically limited to the area of overlapping jurisdiction, so that Canadian enforcement vessels are entirely free to enforce Canadian regulations against French vessels throughout the Canadian waters, including the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the areas of 3Ps which are not in the disputed zone. Indeed, we had an example of such enforcement just a couple of days ago.

The enforcement prohibition, therefore, applies only to the disputed zone per se, that part of 3Ps.

The Chairman: Before we pursue any further questions, are the witnesses prepared to summarize their presentation?

Mr. Siddon: If I might, Mr. Chairman, we have taken the time of the Senate long enough. At this time, I would like to make myself and these officials available for questioning by honourable senators.

The Chairman: I thank the minister, Mr. Clark and Mr. Applebaum. Honourable senators, we are ready for questions. They can be put directly to the minister, or he can possibly refer them to his associates. I call upon Senator MacEachen.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to thank the minister and his officials for their presentation, which has been thorough and helpful to our understanding of this very complicated subject. We understand the complexity of the matter and we understand, as well, the vital Canadian interests that are involved in achieving a satisfactory solution to the boundary dispute and to the negotiation on allocations. Therefore, certainly insofar as I am concerned, my intention is to support as strongly as possible Canadian efforts to establish the Canadian position, not only before the arbitration but in the negotiations.

I hope that in my questioning I will be able to live up to the high standards set by the chairman, who said that we were fair, cooperative, relaxed and easy.

Senator Argue: Let's not overdo it!

Senator MacEachen: I will attempt to live up to all of that as I ask my questions.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that other senators have questions. I have three areas I would like to explore with respect to the agreement, and only the agreement. If you wish to interrupt me at any point, Mr. Chairman, I will give way and return to them later.

I presume that the agreement reached on January 24 still stands?

Mr. Siddon: Absolutely, senator.

Senator MacEachen: It is still the effective document, then. It has not been modified or altered in any way.

As we know, contained in Article II there is a two-track negotiation proposed, first, to establish third party compulsory arbitration settlement and, second, to establish the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991, inclusive. I may add or interpolate at this point that I am not raising any points about the 1987 allocations. I do, however, have a question with respect to Article II(b), which reads as follows:

(b) a procès-verbal establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive . . .

As far as this agreement between Canada and France is concerned, what is included in the expression "Canadian waters"?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, if I might give an initial response, the thrust of the honourable senator's question has to do with the extent to which these interim fishing arrangements to be negotiated would encompass arrangements within the disputed area known as 3Ps, or that portion of 3Ps which is in dispute. I sense in the honourable senator's question that, by underscoring the reference to Canadian waters, he is wanting to lead us to a discussion of what provisions within the interim arrangements, as set out in clause 2(b), would be put in place in that interim period to deal with what he characterized as the overfishing problem. If I have grasped the essence of the honourable senator's question, I would ask either Mr. Applebaum or Mr. Clark to respond. Is that a correct interpretation of the question, senator?

Senator MacEachen: I really wanted to know what is included in the term "Canadian waters" in this agreement. What does it include on the map?

Mr. Clark: Senator, the answer to your question is a twofold one. The Canadian position is that what is included in the term "Canadian waters" is the Gulf of St. Lawrence and, outside the Gulf, what is encompassed in the Canadian 200-mile zone.

There would have to be an allocation for the Saint Pierre and Miquelon fleet inside the Gulf, as provided for in the 1972 treaty, and an allocation for the combined metropolitan and Saint Pierre and Miquelon fleet outside of the Gulf in what we call the Canadian 200-mile zone. From the Canadian point of view, that would include the zone of overlapping jurisdiction, or the disputed zone.

From the French point of view, the definition of the phrase "Canadian waters" is the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Canadian 200-mile zone outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence, excluding the disputed zone. Therefore, this does not, obviously, resolve the issue of the disputed zone, because that is to be addressed by the agreement in clause 2(a), and we are talking here about clause 2(b).

Senator MacEachen: Therefore, I am correct in concluding that there is no agreement between Canada and France as to what is covered by the term "Canadian waters". When the negotiators sit down at the table, the Canadian negotiators will say that "Canadian waters" includes all waters, including that portion of the disputed zone claimed by Canada, and the French will say that "Canadian waters" do not include that portion of the disputed zone which we claim.

First, I must say that I regard this as a very serious negotiating obstacle. The parties have come to the table with a vital concept unagreed and even disagreed. I believe that in that respect the accord may be seriously flawed, because there will be a battle at the very beginning over what is the meaning of "Canadian waters". The French, obviously, will not agree at all to establish quotas for French vessels in that portion of the disputed zone which they claim. Is that correct?

• (1210)

Mr. Siddon: Indeed. The conflicting interpretations, as described by Mr. Clark, underscore the difficulty of this whole process in which Canada has been engaged for many years. What we have here by way of the joint signature of the two nations to this document is a schedule and a joint undertaking to sit down and wrestle with this issue and a number of other serious, related issues, such as the question of 2J+3KL. I think that the honourable senator, from his previous incarnation in the other place, would agree that it would not be wise to write off the possibility of coming to grips with the control problem in 3Ps because of this difficulty. It merely underscores the ultimate importance of resolving the boundary issue once and for all. If we cannot put that at the top of our list as our ultimate objective, then, indeed, this question will remain unaddressed. Mr. Clark may have an elaboration to offer in the perspective of a previous negotiation of a similar nature.

Senator MacEachen: May I follow up on my point, as it is a very important one. By virtue of the wording and the disagreed understanding of what constitutes Canadian waters, there is no commitment by France to negotiate with Canada quotas in the disputed zone, which is now overfished and is now claimed by France. Is it right that there is no commitment to negotiate?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I might say—

Senator MacEachen: Yes or no?

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. Siddon: —that that is the case, but there is no commitment by Canada to grant any quotas in 2J+3KL or any other region. So I have admitted—

Senator MacEachen: I will come to that later, but I want to understand clearly that there is no commitment by France to negotiate quotas for the period 1988 to 1991 in the disputed zone, which is flagrantly overfished and is claimed by France. I think that there are two implications. There is the very serious implication that this agreement does not provide any legal way by which we can get France to negotiate on the overfishing or to accept quotas for that period until we solve the main problem. I highlight that.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, a legal way of solving this question has escaped successive Canadian governments for a decade. The only response that I would offer at this point is that it is worth the risk, because we have given nothing as a country beyond the end of this year to see if, during the process of negotiating the procès-verbale, this problem can be overcome.

Mr. Clark would like to give you another elaboration on this conundrum from an historical perspective.

The Chairman: Mr. Clark, are you a lawyer?

Mr. Clark: Yes. Mr. Chairman, this is a difficult and complex issue, and the senator has zeroed in on one of the key problems. However, we have faced this kind of problem before in the maritime boundary dispute over Georges Bank with the United States in which there was overlapping jurisdiction—a disputed zone similar to the one we now have with France. In the end, as all honourable senators know, we agreed with the Americans to go to the International Court of Justice to get a final decision on the boundary. During that period, we had a precisely comparable situation. There was an area in dispute where we were not able to enforce Canadian quotas, where the Americans insisted, since they claimed all of Georges Bank, in setting quotas for the entire region. The only way, of course, that we could get a definitive resolution was to put the matter before the judges of the International Court, and that is precisely our objective in this case as well.

So, whereas there is a difficulty with respect to what we claim as Canadian waters not being recognized as Canadian waters and, therefore, we cannot enforce our quotas, it was the same situation with regard to Georges Bank. We accepted a two-and-a-half year, nearly a three-year period, that it took to get a judgment on the Georges Bank. During that time, we lived with American overfishing and accepted the fact that we could not enforce quotas. In the end, the judges handed down their decision and gave Canada a substantial portion of Georges Bank, on which we have been able to fully enforce Canadian quotas and ensure protection of Canadian interests ever since. So, there is a precedent. The difficulty, and the heart of the matter, is that we could not agree on the boundary, and it would be circular to say that you have to agree on a boundary before you can have an agreement to refer the boundary to the International Court.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I understand the validity of the historical arguments. But it should be made abundantly clear, and the fishermen and all of us ought to understand, that there is no provision in this agreement by which we can bring France to the table to negotiate quotas in the disputed zone and to reduce overfishing in the period 1988 to 1991. The Prime Minister has indicated in his letter to Mr. Crosbie that a future agreement will not come into effect unless there is "a joint agreement on a total allowable catch for fishermen in the disputed zone during the period of arbitration in order to solve the problem of overfishing." Is it now the expectation that there will be a different track, a third track so to speak, not provided for in this agreement by which we can tackle the problem of overfishing?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, the honourable senator touches on a very interesting facet of this entire process. I would respond by saying that as a former minister and member of the Privy Council, the honourable senator will fully understand that while this process of fully exposing ourselves by way of testimony in this chamber is to be commended, it is also perhaps not in the best interests of Canada; there are certain matters with respect to the strategic aspect of our approach to these negotiations which some would believe should not be explored at this time. I can only assure him, and reinforce the words of the Prime Minister he has quoted, that in Canada's interpretation, the question of French overfishing in the disputed zone we claim to be ours will form an essential core element of these negotiations. If the honourable senator accepts that that is an undertaking of the Government of Canada, recognizing all the difficulty that it enshrines, I am sure that it is fully evident to France that this will be an important bottom line which we will not waive if we are to successfully conclude these two agreements.

Mr. Applebaum would like to add another dimension, but I would suggest that it is not necessarily wise that we display all our cards here in this place.

Senator MacEachen: That is fine with me, but all I can say is that it would have been much better to have negotiated a system of dealing with these quotas over that period, rather than leaving it up in the air and saying, "We are going to try to do it." The French are not committed to doing anything at all, and let us understand that. I just want to understand the agreement.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Applebaum would like to say one brief word of clarification.

Mr. Applebaum: I would like to try to help explain this situation by pointing out that the January 24 agreement was not expected to provide solutions to problems but was to establish a program for providing, we hope, solutions to problems. One of the key elements of that agreement was Article IV by which the French agreed to meet with our scientists to establish a fact base from which to work. A common situation that develops in these negotiations, and other fisheries negotiations as well, is the importance of developing a fact base upon which scientists or groups of scientists can agree, which helps to lead to conclusions about what the future quotas should be in various areas.

We hope that the particular arrangement which has been made will lead us toward some resolution of that overfishing problem. It is a hope, and at least we have set something in motion to try to lead us in that direction.

• (1220)

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that. I think that the study of the cod stocks and possible recommendation is a good step. It does not confer any commitment by France to negotiate this problem and include it in the parameters of the January 24 agreement. I have finished with that area and will let others speak. However, I have another area on which I have questions.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I seek your guidance. It would appear that we will not complete the questioning of the witnesses before 1 p.m. I am prepared to allow Senator MacEachen to follow his three areas, or to recognize Senator Marshall.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to let Senator Marshall speak.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, should we not complete our questioning of the witnesses by 1 p.m., is it agreed that we ask them to return at 2 p.m.?

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated earlier that he could stay until 1 p.m., but that he was not available later today. Therefore, I think the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure should discuss with the minister, the officials and their staff a convenient time for them to return, if that is the wish of the committee.

The Chairman: I assume that we have leave to proceed with this particular order—

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, we have another witness this afternoon.

The Chairman: Perhaps Mr. Cummings will be patient, if it is the wish of honourable senators to examine these witnesses further, even in the absence of the minister.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, did we not, in fact, include the names of Mr. Applebaum and Mr. Clark in the list? Certainly, when we are dealing with a bill, the minister usually appears with his officials. The officials do not speak but simply advise the minister, and we hear only from the minister. However, today we have established the procedure for this matter of having the officials speak separately, and we had them listed separately. I am wondering how the minister feels about having his officials appear as witnesses while we pursue some of these other areas.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might respond to the question. I have indicated that I will not be available this afternoon because of other commitments, which honourable senators will appreciate. It would be my view that as these officials are here in the name of the government, they should be accompanied by someone who speaks for the government; and we will try to arrange the appropriate company who should be available if the witnesses are to reappear in this chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it agreed that if we do not complete the questioning of these witnesses by 1 p.m., then, in keeping with the minister's suggestion, we will hear the witnesses further, and we will suggest to Mr. Cummings that he appear later this afternoon?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, I did not undertake to have someone on behalf of the government appear this afternoon with these witnesses. It will be necessary to grant us enough time to make appropriate arrangements.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the question should be asked, beyond the range of the quota and the allocation of fish in the various zones, as to what has happened in past years with regard to settling boundary disputes between Saint Pierre and Miquelon and Canada. I followed with interest, from 1973 to 1982, the Law of the Sea Conference and Canada's declaration of the 200-mile limit. During the Law of the Sea Conference, when Canada was negotiating the various aspects of the offshore resources and minerals, was the question of Saint Pierre and Miquelon—and, indeed, the threat that could arise by the declaration of the 200-mile limit—discussed in any of the nine or ten Law of the Sea Conferences and the negotiations around the table?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, in responding to the honourable senator's question, I would point out that while I, too, observed some of the process which was followed, and which led up to the declaration of the 200-mile limit, in accordance with the Law of the Sea article, it would be more appropriate for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or his representative—that being Mr. Clark who is here today—to deal with that question. I understand that the honourable senator himself had a considerable amount to say about that issue in 1976, when he was a member of the other place. I would like to ask Mr. Clark to comment directly on the extent to which during the course of the negotiations, in which Canada played a lead role in refining the Law of the Sea in all of its elements, the geological and other resource aspects of Saint Pierre and Miquelon were considered to be important by Canada. I might also ask him to comment on the previous attempts to resolve the boundary dispute in 1972 and again in 1982. Perhaps we could have a brief summary from that perspective.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, the negotiations under the UN auspices leading to the eventual adoption in 1982 of the United Nations convention on the Law of the Sea took place, of course, over a 12-year period. During the course of those negotiations, the particular issue of Saint Pierre and Miquelon was, of course, at the back of the minds of Canadian negotiators, and on occasion, for example, in dealing with the question of what later came to be known as the Archipelagic States article, we were always, as negotiators, very conscious of the fact that we should be careful to try to ensure that there was no language in the UN convention which gave particular care or comfort to the French in the event that they would seek to extend their jurisdiction over a wide area. But, at the same time, parallel with the UN negotiations, we did, in fact, have bilateral discussions with the French. Indeed, one negotiating round took place in New York, as we say, "on the margins" of the UN negotiations, and at that time the Canadian position, which had been adopted previously and which was maintained, was forcefully enunciated: that all that distant islands lying on the continental shelf of another coastal state were entitled to was a territorial sea and possibly as a result of negotiation—not as a result of legal right—a limited continental shelf beyond the territorial sea.

That Canadian position was enunciated over and over again. So, by 1977, when the French claim was in fact made immediately following the Canadian declaration of 200 miles, we were then addressing a factual situation, that we had an overlapping zone. But leading up to 1977 and that actual declaration, the efforts of the Canadian delegation in New York and in Geneva during the third UN Law of the Sea Conference were to avoid any language in the convention that could be of particular assistance to and a pretension of an eventual French claim.

● (1230)

Senator Marshall: I accept the answer, but it is not satisfactory. It was very obvious to many fishermen and others that if Canada were to extend the 200-mile limit, and France also, there was the danger of France using Saint Pierre and Miquelon as a weapon to extend limits to 200 miles, which France wanted to do, and did.

Was it not evident at that time that this could disrupt the situation, as is the case today with France claiming its right over the various zones and the amount of fish it is allowed to catch?

Can the witnesses tell the Senate why no one entertained the idea that Saint Pierre and Miquelon could cause serious problems? This occurred in 1976, which was prior to the declaration of the 200-mile zone.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable senator's question, our officials can speak from their recollection of events of those days, but I believe the honourable members of this illustrious house would have an even better recollection of what transpired at that time. Perhaps it would be interesting to comment on the extent to which we were close to an agreement with France in 1972, which agreement might have prevented this entire problem.

Mr. Clark, could you comment on that?

Senator Marshall: Could Mr. Clark tell us what the near agreement was? Was it the "12-and-12" extension?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Clark will elaborate on that.

Mr. Clark: The agreement that was actually initialled by the negotiators in 1972 would have restricted the French to a 12-mile territorial sea and a 12-mile continental shelf beyond the territorial sea.

Until 1977, until the actual French declaration, even though the possibility of exorbitant and extravagant claims was obviously in the minds of Canadians—indeed, the honourable senator himself, when he was a member of the other place, sounded a number of warnings at that time about possible French extension—the legal basis for that claim was clearly defective. It was clearly defective during the period 1972 to 1977. The problem and the issue is that we are dealing with an evolutionary system of law.

The International Law of the Sea has evolved dramatically, and in most respects, of course, in Canada's favour. But it has evolved dramatically over the past decade. What would have been clearly unacceptable, illegitimate and, indeed, illegal at an earlier period was later sanctioned by the international community. All we have to do ourselves is think of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. When that act was adopted in 1972, it was a centre of great controversy and protest by many major nations around the world, but the law evolved, and today not only are we absolutely confident of the legality and the correctness of the content of that legislation, we have even withdrawn the bar to compulsory jurisdiction before the International Court of Justice on matters relating to that legislation because of our absolute confidence that that is justifiable and legitimate legislation.

But in 1972 that was highly controversial. That is the situation now. We have had evolution whereby the French have tried to seize an opportunity to make what we still consider—and if and when we get before the judges we are quite confident we will be able to establish—is an unfounded, exorbitant and extravagant maritime claim.

Senator Marshall: Since the negotiators are from the Department of External Affairs, perhaps they could offer some comments on the ramifications of oil and mineral deposits in the disputed zone off Saint Pierre and Miquelon?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Clark will to the extent possible.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, this is a time when one asks the indulgence of the chamber to be kind to the witness.

Senator Frith: We can get back to fish if you want to.

Senator Marshall: This is a serious situation. This has been going on for years. It is not only the fish that I am interested in. It is more than fish that the French want. If we want to discuss the problem, let us go back a few years to see what has happened. This is history repeating itself time and time again. The players are different, but the same questions were asked 10, 15 and 20 years ago. So let us get the whole story.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, in all of the bilateral negotiations with France between 1977 and 1986, representatives of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources were on the Canadian team for the very reason that the honourable senator has pointed out, the question of potential hydrocarbon resources in the disputed zone. The representatives of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on the Canadian negotiating team dealt with and addressed those questions.

The best way I can respond, and the most honest way I can respond to the question, is to make three points: First of all, there is a potential for at least limited hydrocarbon resources in the disputed zone, according to the hydrocarbon experts; the sites of potential hydrocarbon resources are, generally, at the outer limits of the area France claims, and we firmly believe that if we can get arbitration of the boundary dispute, the eventual area that is awarded to the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon will not include areas where there is potential for hydrocarbon resources.

Senator Marshall: It appears that France has agreed in principle to go to an international tribunal to settle the boundary dispute. Could the witnesses disclose what further terms we want agreement on during the course of the next year with regard to that referral to the international tribunal to settle this dispute?

Mr. Siddon: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there is a technical problem as to what technical elements would be contained in the "compromis" or the terms of reference.

We are not talking about the interim fishing agreement; we are talking about the treaty on the boundary referral. Again, Mr. Clark should attempt to deal with this.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, I can be very brief. The "compromis", or treaty, on the boundary reference will include, first of all, a decision on the forum; that is, whether it will be the International Court of Justice, a chamber of the International Court of Justice, or what is referred to as an ad hoc arbitral tribunal. It will then address the question of the specific judges. If it is a chamber of the International Court of Justice, there is some choice as to what judges will sit on the case; if it is an ad hoc tribunal, there is a complete choice as to who the judges will be. It will be a matter for agreement between Canada and France.

Next is the question of how the particular dispute that is put before the judges is phrased. We call it the "Question". There are legal niceties attached to how one phrases the dispute put before the judges. The precise question is to be negotiated between Canada and France; once that question is agreed upon, it is locked in and that is the precise dispute that is put before the judges.

Then come the terms of reference for the decision—that is, timeframes for the submission of what are called "memorials" and "counter-memorials" in an international legal case—and then time references for the oral argument. So, the overall timeframe for the conduct of the case is spelled out in the "compromis" or boundary reference treaty.

Then, at the end of the treaty, there is a specific indication, spelled out absolutely clearly, that the decision will be final and it will be binding on both parties. Therefore, by entering into the treaty, the two sides commit themselves that when the judges render their decision, the decision is unchallenged. Some questions can usually be asked within, normally, a 60-day timeframe about the decision, but the decision itself is unchallengeable and unappealable, and it is binding in the sense that it will be implemented by the parties. That is the content of a "compromis" or boundary reference treaty.

Senator LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister, I would like to make one or two comments and then I will ask a few questions.

With respect to the 1972 agreement, a lot of comments have been heard. I speak of it freely because I did not originate it; it was originated by my predecessor, Jack Davis. If anyone thinks that it is a bad piece of work—and that seems to have become the accredited version in a great many areas and in a lot of people's minds—I hope that they will go back and read the agreement that existed between Britain and France on the access to the fisheries of Newfoundland. That agreement makes the 1972 treaty look like an extraordinarily daring piece of international poker.

By the way, I might say that the advisers stay while ministers pass, so we see many familiar faces, and I welcome them.

Under the treaty between Britain and France, which was, as I am told, binding when Newfoundland came into Confederation, the French could fish practically off Don Jamieson's beach. That agreement was quite complete. In fact, as the access of Newfoundland was defined, both Newfoundland and France had equal access to that fishing and therefore the 1972 agreement was quite a progressive piece of diplomacy. In the Gulf of St. Lawrence, an area where some 20,000 fishermen were dependent on the resource, we were phasing out, over a period of years, nations that had fished in that area literally for centuries. Therefore, if I can, I would like to rehabilitate the 1972 treaty. We all have 20/20 vision in hindsight. The difficulty is that we are not dealing with the past; we are dealing with the next phase and, in that sense, I do not envy the negotiators. I recognize that there are certain things that they are not completely free to discuss in an open forum such as this one, because there are tactics and strategies which they have to propose and which ministers must accept or reject.

On the question of process, perhaps I may be allowed to put one or two questions to the minister while he is with us. I understand that between the meeting of the 24th and the previous meeting with the advisers, the request came for a head of delegation meeting only. I believe it can be historically sustained that even when there is a head-of-delegation discussion, the key advisers are sounded out and they sit, if I can use the term, in the antechamber in most cases, especially when there is to be a substantive change.

I would like to ask the minister why in this case the advisers were left out in the cold and not allowed at least to sit in the antechamber.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, without in any way wishing to appear to skirt the question, I would repeat what Mr. Clark said earlier. Following the meeting in Ottawa in mid-January, on which occasion the French Foreign Minister was in Canada and exhibited considerable displeasure with Canada's intransigence in this matter, the French delegation had occasion to reflect, upon their return to France, as to the possible merits of the specific package of proposals that Canada had placed before France. Finding that those elements were not in excess of items which had been fully discussed with the industry and provincial representatives, they asked for a return to the table to be arranged between the heads of delegations. As nothing additional had been added to the package that the Canadian government had endorsed, I might say, Mr. Chairman, it was agreed that they should return and attempt to secure an agreement on that basis.

During that period there were informal contacts, but, as has been conceded, there was really a breakdown of communications; one or two strategic phone calls had not been made at the right point, and we have fully apologized and atoned for that oversight to, in particular, the Premier of Newfoundland.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, there was an agreement that the committee would rise at one o'clock.

Senator LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, I would not consider that this line of questioning is closed by the adjournment. We will come back to it.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps out of respect for the honourable senator asking the question, I could take one more question. The honourable senator is, of course, very knowledgeable and has excellent recall of the history of that time in 1972 and in 1976, when he himself had something to do with the extension of jurisdiction. That extension made a lot of things possible and benefited greatly the Atlantic fishery; an event, incidentally, which we celebrate later this year. I think we could take another question, if it is the wish of the Chair.

Senator LeBlanc: I am invited in such a nice way to ask a question which I hope will not be a nasty one. If it is, then I am at a considerable disadvantage. Frankly, I do not expect the minister to be able to give a completely candid answer, because he, too, has to keep in mind cabinet solidarity. However, I would like to know whether, in his mind, there was a linkage between other imperatives of the government and the fisheries issue.

In asking that, I go back to what appeared to me to be a great deal of wisdom over many years, and that is that if you ever put fish against farming, or agriculture against automobiles, you end up having very serious imbalances in the country.

I would like to ask the minister: To what extent did he feel that there was pressure from above, in the name of some other priority or some other national goal? That somehow we had to settle with France? In saying that, I would underline to him two historical facts: There are two very powerful nations with whom we have had very difficult fishery discussions: the United States and the Soviet Union. In the case of the Soviet Union, we closed the ports on the Atlantic coast. We did not just threaten to close them; we closed them to get their full attention, and the matter did go to the highest level.

The other example I would use is the case of Alaska, where again the United States could not focus on the issue of the salmon interception until we started fishing heavily one of the rivers, namely, the Taku, that fed Alaska waters. Again, that produced the expected results.

Surely, with a country such as France, in the name of the fishery and not in the name of cultural interests or Francophonie or anything else, we have some other ways of exerting pressure. I do not feel any pressure being exerted. In fact, I felt in many cases that the government was presenting the case for France; not the case for Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable senator, I would categorically reject any suggestion that I or any of my colleagues experienced pressure from above, wherever that might be, in the same way that I am sure he never experienced such inspiration in his deliberations.

I would say that the course of action which was agreed to and the instructions which our officials carried to Paris were fully supported by the government and by ministers who speak in the name of the government, and that the sole objective in securing the preliminary agreement of January 24 was in order to resolve a long, lingering problem which can bring untold economic advantage to the fishermen and the people of Atlantic Canada. That is the sole objective. When the senator speaks of forms of linkage which have been applied to other nations such as the United States—which is an example he gives—the kind of pressure that was brought to bear was contained within the sector in which the benefit was being sought. I can assure all honourable senators that we are bringing to bear all forms of reasonable pressure which Canada, as a peace-loving non-confrontational nation, would be prepared to exert and in accordance with international protocol and mutual respect among nations. As we have said repeatedly—ministers of the government—if we cannot reach an agreement on terms acceptable to the fishermen and the interests in Atlantic Canada, who will benefit by an ultimate resolution of this problem, then I guess history will repeat itself and there will be no agreement.

• (1250)

It is my undertaking and it is the task of these negotiators, on behalf of their respective ministers and the government, to work in good faith persistently, with the bottom line being the interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, to seek a resolution of this serious matter.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Siddon. It is ten minutes after one. Senator Frith, did you have something?

Senator Frith: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

I move that the committee rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Thank you, Mr. Clark and Mr. Applebaum.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the France-Canada Fisheries and Territories Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I suggest that in view of the time we resume at 2.15 p.m., or 2.30 p.m., rather than at 2 p.m.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 2.30 this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2.40 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION VISIT OF DELEGATION TO FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY— NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, February 19, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the visit of a Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association delegation to the Federal Republic of Germany, from January 15 to 27, 1987.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, REPUBLIC OF INDONESIA

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I call your attention to the presence in our gallery of His Excellency Dr. Mochtar Kusumaatmadja, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Indonesia.

We warmly welcome this high official of a country which is a very good friend of Canada's.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BANKING

MATTERS WITHIN EXCLUSIVE FEDERAL JURISDICTION— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

One bank has now incorporated a subsidiary in one province to deal in securities. There has been an announcement from another province that they intend to deal with this matter and with the extension of the powers of banks in matters of dealing in securities. We have had ongoing conversations in another province with representatives of the industry, including banks, regarding this issue.

In view of the fact that banks and banking are within the exclusive legislative power of the federal government, could the Leader of the Government inform us as to what action the government will take respecting the powers of banks regarding securities and matters of financial institutions within the exclusive power of the federal government?

TRANSPORT

CLOSING OF CN SHOPS, MONCTON—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Now that the Government of Canada has intervened in a CN issue, more or less forcing CN to enter into an agreement with Sysco to the effect that CN will buy 80 per cent of their rails to keep the plant in Nova Scotia open, which we support, will the Leader of the Government explain to the people of New Brunswick why the same deal cannot be worked out with CN regarding the Moncton shops?

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I should like to know why the situations are not comparable. It is my understanding that 1,200 jobs in Moncton are at stake, whereas in the instance involving Sysco only 2,000 jobs were involved. Does this have anything to do with the Prime Minister's attendance at the Canada Winter Games in Cape Breton? Since 1,200 jobs are at stake, the people of New Brunswick want to know what the situation is.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the situation with regard to Canadian National and Sysco is that over the years

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

CN has purchased a certain proportion of its rail requirements from Sydney Steel Corporation.

What the Sysco operation required and, in the event, received from Canadian National was a business undertaking that Canadian National would continue to purchase rails from that supplier in the traditional proportions. This was a business arrangement between two companies. Sysco required it for its own future security.

As the honourable senators knows, the situation in Moncton is an entirely different one. Notwithstanding that, he also knows that the Government of Canada and the Government of New Brunswick made every possible human effort to preserve as many jobs as possible in Moncton. He knows the history of that as well as I do.

Senator Thériault: The honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate also knows that for years and years CN had a policy of dividing the repairs carried out at the various shops, 40 per cent being done in the west, 40 per cent in Montreal, and 20 per cent in Moncton. Why did the government allow CN to do away with that policy, which has become well established over the years, and thereby eliminate jobs in Moncton by having the work carried out in Winnipeg and Montreal?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there are a number of misapprehensions and a number of hypotheses being put forward in the various questions asked by the honourable senator. As I have suggested to him on a previous occasion, if he wants to debate this matter, let him put a Notice of Inquiry on the Order Paper and one of us on this side will undertake to give a considered reply on behalf of the government. It is not appropriate to do that during Question Period.

• (1440)

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I will not be told by the Leader of the Government in the Senate what is or what is not appropriate for Question Period. Twelve hundred jobs are at stake in New Brunswick. I think this is an important matter and, as a senator from New Brunswick, I feel that I have a full right to ask the government to answer for this. What is not factual about the questions I have asked or the statements I have made? Over the years CN has had a policy—and this cannot be denied—whereby 40 per cent of the repair work was done in Winnipeg, 40 per cent in Montreal and 20 per cent in Moncton. CN was allowed to do away with that policy last year. It closed its shops in Moncton and the government stood by and did nothing. But when the Prime Minister has to visit Nova Scotia, the government can put pressure on CN to give 80 per cent of its rail work to Sysco—and I am glad about that. I just want to say that we are prepared to invite the Prime Minister to come to New Brunswick, if he will do the same for that province!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SPONSORSHIP OF U.S. TELEVISION SERIES "AMERIKA"

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the controversial television series "Amerika". On Sunday night I watched that turgid drama proceed with its glacial speed and I noticed, half way through the program, that one of the co-sponsors of "Amerika" is Canada Post.

I ask the Leader of this Government in the Senate to remind his colleague, the minister responsible for the Post Office, that this is a series from which Chrysler of Canada and Chrysler of the United States withdrew because of the nature of the program. This series has been condemned and criticized by present and past United States representatives to the United Nations and a cross-section of responsible political leadership in this country and in many other countries, including the United States, yet, here is Canada Post promoting Priority Post half way through that cold-war drama.

Could the Leader of the Government obtain from his cabinet colleagues the rationale behind Canada Post's participation in the sponsorship of this program on CTV in Canada? Could he find out the cost of the time, as well as the amount of money paid for the commercial and the frequency of the commercial during the first instalment of that 14½-hour drama? Could he determine the marketing objectives that Canada Post hopes to achieve by reaching the audience of "Amerika"?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I suggest to my honourable friend that he would have done better to have confined his television viewing yesterday to the magnificent live television coverage of the opening of the Canada Winter Games in Cape Breton.

Senator Perrault: May I say, in that regard, that I was the sports minister who got the Canada Games for Cape Breton and that I was not invited by the Conservative government to attend the opening ceremonies. Honourable senators, I had the great honour to go to Cape Breton to make the announcement that the games would be held there. This was the result of a Liberal cabinet decision inspired and recommended by myself, and I was left off the invitation list, which is par for the course for this government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if my friend had been there in the flesh yesterday, he would have seen that there was a magnificent bipartisan spirit present in Cape Breton—a spirit that has done marvellous things for Cape Breton and for Canada. I also want to tell him that he would have seen many Liberals, Conservatives and members of other parties there to take part in those ceremonies. Finally, I want to tell him, as I am sure he knows, that I will be there in a couple of weeks' time for the closing ceremonies. If he attends those ceremonies, he can be assured of a very warm welcome.

Senator Frith: Is that an invitation?

Senator Murray: Of course.

I would be interested, as is the honourable senator, to obtain from Canada Post an explanation of the market rationale, as he puts it, for sponsoring that particular program. I will see what information is available and bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I ask at the same time the name of the advertising agency which induced or persuaded Canada Post to be a co-sponsor of "Amerika". I would like to know the amount of advertising or agency fees realized by that company for the placement of that promotion on "Amerika". Finally, might I say that it was also a joyous, non-partisan occasion when we announced the awarding of the games to Cape Breton, at which time there were representatives of the Conservative Party present.

Senator Frith: Are you not going to thank him for the kind invitation he extended?

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I wish to advise Senator Perrault that I was born in Cape Breton, that I have been a member of the PC Party for 18 years, and that I wasn't invited!

Senator Frith: Anybody else?

Senator Perrault: Come on over!

LOSS OF DIE FOR NEW ONE-DOLLAR COIN

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, as a supplementary on Canada Post, perhaps when the Leader of the Government is seeking that information, he might ask whether they can find the die for the one-dollar coin that has been lost for some time now. We cannot even make the new one-dollar coin this year because they still have the die somewhere in Canada Post.

Senator McElman: It died in the post office!

Senator Bonnell: Could the government leader see whether the new Postmaster General can find the die so that we can get that new one-dollar coin for Canada?

AGRICULTURE

MORATORIUM ON FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I might say something by way of consolation to Senator Perrault. A few years ago, I was instrumental, along with my colleagues in the cabinet, in providing the city of Regina with an accessible and acceptable modern airport—one that was very badly needed. Saskatoon had the Otto Lang airport and I thought that Regina should also have a good airport.

Senator Frith: The Argue International, perhaps?

Senator Argue: When the invitations went out and the speeches were made, I was not invited to take part. But that is all right. Nothing was said about a previous government having been responsible for the airport. To my way of thinking, it was a little cheap, but that doesn't matter. There will be a change of government some day, and I hope that the new government will give credit to this one for whatever it may be doing that is constructive. That may be difficult to remember, but, at any rate, I make no complaints. The people of Regina know why and how the airport happens to be there, and I guess that is good enough.

An Hon. Senator: Not to mention the hotel!

Senator Argue: The hotel we do not need and I hope it is not built. The airport was badly needed, but an extra hotel at the airport, which is almost within walking distance of downtown Regina, is not required.

In any event, preambles apart—

Senator Flynn: One of your shortest!

Senator Argue: That is right, and my opponents have been very agreeable today, they have not made many serious interruptions.

Honourable senators, I was pleased to read that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been given quite a major promotion. He has been appointed to the P&P Committee of the cabinet. I think that puts him in a very powerful position to respond to suggestions made in the Senate and to carry them forward. I would ask the government leader whether he can give us any information on whether the Minister of Agriculture and the government are likely to end at an early date the moratorium placed on Farm Credit Corporation loans by way of preventing foreclosures. I believe that the moratorium does not have a termination date but is open-ended, and I ask that it not be lifted at this time. If the minister has no information on this matter, I will understand that, but I plead with him to take this request to his colleagues. The time for seeding is around the corner, and it would be a great disservice to the agricultural industry of this country and to those farmers whose loans from the Farm Credit Corporation are in arrears if that moratorium should be lifted now.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—AUTOMOTIVE TRADE

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, on the question of the current Canada-U.S. trade negotiations, the Minister of International Trade yesterday in the other place stated that now “the whole issue of automotive trade . . . is open for discussion.” In light of the current public concern about the Canadian government’s lack of due process in informing provincial governments with regard to matters respecting their strategic economic concerns, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in his capacity as minister responsible for federal-provincial relations, inform the Senate whether the Province of Ontario was informed of this new development and whether that province agrees that “the issue of automotive trade” should, indeed, be “open for discussion”?

● (1450)

senators, I must confess that I have not seen the statement that my honourable friend attributes to the Minister for International Trade, nor do I quite understand the context in which the statement was made. Let me tell my honourable friend and the Senate how the consultative process between the federal government and the provinces works in these trade negotiations. Every three months in this city a First Ministers’ meeting on trade is held, at which the premiers receive a direct report from Ambassador Reisman and from Ms. Carney as to the progress of the negotiations and where they renew the mandate for Ambassador Reisman and his negotiating team. In addition, every three months, or more frequently if necessary, the federal and provincial trade ministers meet to review in a more detailed fashion what is happening at the negotiations. After every negotiating session, our negotiators are in touch, by way of a conference call, with their provincial counterparts. I don’t suppose there has ever been an international negotiation with which the provinces have been more closely associated or more fully informed.

Senator Graftstein: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate obtain for us the information that I have asked for: Has the Province of Ontario been informed that “the issue of automotive trade” is now, in the words of the minister, “open for discussion”?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall have to see whether there is anything new in the statement that my friend attributes to Ms. Carney. I regret very much that I have not had an opportunity to read her statement. I shall do so as soon as I have a minute.

GRAIN

GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—EXCLUSION OF MUSTARD SEED

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could give us an update on a question that I asked a week ago. It is with regard to the response that he got from the Minister of Agriculture with respect to the review committee announced in connection with the stabilization fund, but which has not come into existence as yet, and, particularly, with reference to whether or not mustard seed will be included in the acreage that is calculated for payment.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING

Hon. H.A. Olson: I also asked the Leader of the Government last week a question about the investigation under way with respect to insider trading with regard to Memotec Data Inc. and the sale of Teleglobe Canada. All I would like to ask of the minister at this time is whether or not there is an RCMP investigation under way into whether or not there was an advance leak of information by people who had some knowledge to some people who were able to make what appears to be several million dollars on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with regard to the Teleglobe matter, I see no reference to the RCMP in the briefing notes that I have. I am told that under the Canada Business Corporations Act, the director has responsibility under federal law, and that he is exercising that responsibility under section 228 of the act. That section authorizes the director to investigate any proceedings which he regards as unusual. I am told that the investigation is based on the trading pattern of Memotec stock to determine if any insiders were involved. As the honourable senator has pointed out, the Montreal and Toronto stock exchanges and the Quebec and Ontario securities commissions are also conducting investigations into the same issue. I have no information to suggest that another investigation into any alleged or possible leaks from the government is taking place. Nor am I aware that one is warranted.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, when I asked the question the other day, I think I specifically asked whether the government had conducted, or is willing to launch, an investigation to see whether or not there was a link between those possessing advance information as a result of a possible leak and the unusual trading patterns that followed on both stock exchanges. It is a fairly important question, because I think there is a very large number of Canadians who believe that it was an unusual trading pattern. The matter is being properly investigated and, as is common in such situations, both stock exchanges have launched investigations. I believe that those stock exchanges lack the competence to extend their investigations into whether or not there was a leak by people in government who knew, or believed they knew, that the bid by Memotec would be accepted. That is my reason for asking the question. Who is investigating that part of the matter, which is extremely important to the government's purposes?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the investigations that are being conducted are based on the trading patterns of Memotec stock to determine if any insiders were involved. Now, this involves the provincial securities commissions and they are carrying out the investigations within their jurisdictions. As I have indicated, the director, under the jurisdiction of the Canada Business Corporations Act, is carrying out an investigation, as he is authorized to do, into any proceedings which he regards as unusual. The Minister of State for Privatization, Ms. McDougall, has been in touch as well with the Toronto Stock Exchange and has offered her full cooperation and that of her staff. I can tell the honourable senator that the decision on Memotec was not taken until after the markets closed on February 10. The exchange was notified immediately to ensure that there was no insider trading or insider knowledge. The government is awaiting the results of the investigation by the Toronto Stock Exchange.

I am not sure whether I understand the honourable senator correctly, but I think that he is suggesting that there might have been a leak somewhere in the federal government as to the decision of the government to accept the Memotec bid. I have not seen any suggestion to that effect, nor am I aware that any investigation is taking place on that precise matter. However, I shall make inquiries.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think the minister understands very clearly now what I asked last week. I think I indicated in those questions that there are a lot of people in Canada who believe, or who suspect, at least, that there is a link between the unusual trading patterns and the increase in the value of the shares that followed, and that there is a possibility that there was a leak from someone who knew, not that the decision was going to be made but that the recommendation to accept that bid was going to be accepted. If the minister is telling me now that there is no attempt being made to investigate whether or not what I have outlined happened, then I would suggest to him that the investigation by the stock exchanges is not adequate. They do not have the competence to investigate a federal government department.

Senator Murray: I said that they are not the only ones investigating. I have told the Senate that.

Senator Olson: I understand that. But is the minister telling me now that there is no investigation under way by the RCMP or anyone else to find out whether there was a link or a leak? If that is the case, then I am very dissatisfied. It seems to me that the other part of the question that he tried to answer was that there was some official who is also looking into the unusual trading patterns. That is not the question. The question is whether or not there was a leak.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is exactly the question that the honourable senator is putting, citing as his authority the suspicions of a lot of people.

Senator Olson: Right.

Senator Murray: If that is the best that the honourable senator can do, then I suggest he would be better off to keep quiet. If the honourable senator has any evidence to suggest that there was such a leak, let him bring it forward; let him go to the RCMP and present that evidence. What is the basis of those suspicions, may I ask?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, it seems to me to be fairly obvious that there are a number of people who knew what the recommendation was going to be. It is also very clear—

Senator Murray: Are you accusing—

Senator Olson: I am accusing the government of being negligent in that it does not follow up when we know that a profit of several millions of dollars was made on the stock exchanges by a number of people who were involved.

Senator Murray: That is being followed up.

Senator Olson: Surely the government should have the guts to launch an investigation to find out whether any members of the government or their advisers leaked that information in advance of the public's knowing.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has come pretty close to a blanket accusation against members of the government or their advisers. I will let that stand on the record for what it's worth, and we can discount it by about 100 per cent.

There are two investigations going forward on the matter to which the honourable senator referred, one of them within the provincial jurisdiction and one in the federal jurisdiction. I think the honourable senator can be satisfied that if there is the slightest indication of any leak or impropriety on the part of any person, those matters will be followed up by the RCMP or the appropriate authority. But, in my view, it is going a bit far for the honourable senator to stand in his place and demand investigations on the basis of what he says are the suspicions of a great number of people, even if that "great number of people" especially includes himself.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is quite a different answer from the one which the Leader of the Government gave a few minutes ago. He said there was no investigation that he was aware of to try to identify a leak or to see whether there was one. He now says that we can assume somehow that if there has been any impropriety at all, there will be an investigation. Does the assumption of impropriety include the possibility of a leak in advance of public information?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I said that if there is any indication of any impropriety, that will be followed up by the appropriate authority—and I repeat that; but I am not responsible for the honourable senator's highly cultivated and developed suspicions.

INDUSTRY

AWARDING OF CF-5 CONTRACT TO BRISTOL AEROSPACE LTD.—STATUS

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. No doubt he is aware, as we all are, of the CF-18 contract that was given to Canadair some time ago. At that time great concern was expressed in Manitoba. The government, in order to try to soften the shock, gave a smaller contract concerning the CF-5 supposedly to Bristol Aerospace Ltd. That was announced by the minister, the Honourable Jake Epp, over a month ago.

Last weekend there was an article in the Winnipeg Free Press saying that Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg had not heard a doggone thing about it since then, and that the company did not know whether the announcement was factual. Once again, the people in the province are wondering what has taken place. My question is serious and down to earth because of the people's concern. Can the Leader of the Government make representation to the cabinet to ensure that announcements are made quickly to reassure the people of greater Winnipeg and Manitoba that the CF-5 contract is a reality and not just an announcement?

GRAIN

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—FINAL PAYMENTS FOR GRADES 1 AND 2 SPRING WHEAT

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to repeat a question that I asked of the Leader of the Government some time ago. I would like to know whether he has any information to convey to the Senate. Can the Leader of the Government say what consideration the government may be giving to the request from western grain growers that they be paid the final payment due to them by the accounting procedure of the Canadian Wheat Board for high quality wheats, namely, number 1 CW and number 2 CW? To refresh the memory of the Leader of the Government, it was on the occasion that he told me that I had made a long preamble, the same as Alvin Hamilton. That is what enables me to remember the occasion.

In the high quality Wheat Board accounts, there was a surplus, which normally would have been paid to the producers of those high quality wheats, of $54 million. The total overall wheat account had a deficit of $200 million. I guess the amount was $253 million; the $52 million came off and the net loss was $201 million. My question again is: Is the government actively considering reimbursing the wheat producers the $54 million of their final payment, which they believe—and I believe also—is rightfully theirs, but of which, because of a kind of accident of circumstance—I do not have to explain that—they have been deprived of that final payment? Is this matter being considered by the government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will have to ask my colleague, the Honourable Charles Mayer, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, for a report. I will try to get one as soon as possible.

Senator Argue: I appreciate that. Is the Leader of the Government aware that there has been a precedent in the past for this kind of action? Following a surplus in the durum account in 1968, the government of the day reimbursed the producers of durum for that amount, when, according to the system, they had their payments denied. I would ask the Leader of the Government whether he is aware of that.

As a supplementary, is the minister aware that a Conservative member of Parliament has raised this question in the House of Commons? Is the government, apart from the caucus, giving active consideration to this problem?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must confess that I was not aware of those matters, but I am now.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE AGREEMENT—DENIAL OF THREAT TO NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. As he is the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations, and in view of the fact that the province of Quebec received 45 per cent of the industrial development grants last year and the province of Newfoundland received 1 per cent, I would like him to clear his name, as I know he is a man of honour. I would ask him to stand in his place and tell us that he was not the cabinet minister who threatened the Premier of Newfoundland that, if he did not play ball in connection with the Canada-France fishing agreement, the government would cut the funds to Hibernia, to the NATO base and to the hydro-electric development in Labrador. I would like the Leader of the Government to clear his name, because one might think that he could have been the one since he is the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations. I know that he would not make that kind of threat—he would not do that; but I would like him to stand in his place and say, "It was not me."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I believe my friend and colleague, the Honourable John Crosbie, has given the definitive response to that allegation.

Senator Bonnell: In other words, I guess it might have been the Leader of the Government. He did not say that it wasn't.

Senator Murray: It was an Anglo-Saxon word that is unparliamentary.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have three delayed answers to questions. I suggest that rather than reading them, I should simply ask that they appear in the Debates of the Senate for today.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SELF-GOVERNMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: A question was asked in the Senate on December 19, 1986 by Senator Lucier concerning Indian Affairs—Self-Government—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

In order to advance aboriginal self-government in Canada, this government decided to take a two-track approach to self-government, involving constitutional discussions as well as community-based negotiations of self-government.

A government policy statement on Indian self-government was released on April 15, 1986. This outlined three main objectives for community-based self-government initiatives, namely:

- to increase local control and decision-making capability;
- to recognize the diverse needs, traditions and culture of Indian people; and
- to provide greater accountability by Indians to their own electors.

The community self-government negotiation process is designed to respond to proposals from communities which seek to establish self-government arrangements beyond the current limits of the Indian Act. Proposals from communities deal with such issues as: the structures and institutions of self-government; membership; jurisdiction over land and resources, language, culture and education, health and social services and economic development. Negotiations are designed to lead to agreement on practical arrangements for self-government in Indian and Inuit communities, with new legislation expected to implement agreements. Bill C-93, the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act, was the first piece of legislation passed under this policy.

Self-government negotiations with Métis and non-status Indian communities are also under way, with provincial governments taking a lead role in negotiations.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION AGENCY RECOMMENDATIONS— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 3, 1987 by Senator Perrault regarding Transport—Grain Transportation Agency Recommendations—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

Since the release on June 13, 1986, of the Honourable Jack Horner's report reviewing the Western Grain Transportation Act (WGTA), the Minister of Transport has made it clear that he does not intend to take any position on the recommendations made in the report until the industry's reactions are fully considered and analyzed.

Mr. Horner has just submitted his final report to the Minister, who is studying it.

Senator Perrault can rest assured that there will be full public discussion before any significant changes are made to Grain Transportation policy.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—ITEMS FOR NEGOTIATION

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 4, 1987 by Senator Frith regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade Negotiations—Items for Negotiation.

Cultural industries is a phrase which refers to those undertakings which give expression to the intellectual and artistic aspects of Canadian society. It would not be appropriate to attempt to set out a comprehensive catalogue of specific commercial undertakings in the cultural field. It is the subject matter of the individual industry and the latter's capacity to give expression to our national identity which set the bounds of our area of concern. In addition, the government is involved in an intricate set of trade discussions with our American neighbours. An overly precise formulation of our concerns could simply place the negotiators at a tactical disadvantage.

In a speech to the University of Chicago in September, 1985, the Prime Minister stated that those industries that define and reflect our national identity are a special area of concern. Since September, 1985, the Government has consistently repeated the message that Canada's cultural identity and those industries that give it expression are not up for negotiation.

The protection of Canada's cultural identity is not something on which the Government is prepared to compromise, for it is part of the essence of Canada. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, if Canada and the United States cannot reach an agreement which reaches our trade goals while protecting the essence of Canada then a deal will not be struck.

The Government is seeking to negotiate a comprehensive trade arrangement which will eliminate as many barriers as possible in the trade between Canada and the United States. The government is confident that this can be achieved while at the same time ensuring that Canada's strong sense of herself will be reinforced.

The Senate and the Canadian people can be assured that the government while seeking to negotiate a new trade arrangement with the U.S. will diligently protect Canada's ability to maintain and strengthen its national identity.

Honourable senators will recall that, under the bill, every member of the board is entitled to be paid reasonable travel and other expenses incurred by them in connection with the business of the board. I have an explanation for that. While that is included in the bill itself, the people at the National Archives intend to follow the practice which is now followed by the National Library of Canada and the National Museums of Canada, and that is that the payment of travel and living expenses shall be made only to those board members who are not on salary or allowances and who are management staff of the National Archives itself. I hope that clears that up.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I thought the clause, which is a standard one, clearly excluded the board officials, and then said nothing about their travel expenses.

Senator Doyle: I have a copy of the bill in front of me, and it states, in clause 9(3), as follows:

A member of the board, other than the Archivist, the National Librarian or the Secretary-General of the National Museums of Canada, is entitled to be paid such amount—

Is it the exception of those three?

Senator Frith: Since this is a standard clause, I was asking, since they are excluded, what is the source of the authority for paying them, but Senator Doyle can obtain that information and put it on the record at some other time, if he wishes. We will not hold up third reading of the bill just because of that.

Senator Doyle: I will determine what flexibility there is in their pay and allowances.

Senator Frith: We will not hold up third reading for that.

Senator Doyle: Thank you.

The only other thing I should like to mention is my gratitude and the gratitude of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for the contribution of Senator Bosa who, not only in the Senate but in the committee itself, drew special attention to the fact that the bill is a piece of legislation which deals with the authority and powers of the National Archivist and the National Archives themselves, but does not lay any emphasis whatsoever on the somewhat dire straits in which the institution finds its facilities. It was reassuring to know that there is sympathy for early attention to what is a great need. I look forward to hearing from Senator Bosa on that subject when we do discuss matters of budget.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF CANADA BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the third reading of Bill C-7, respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend other Acts in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, there were one or two matters raised during the course of discussion on Bill C-7, one being the question asked by Senator Frith regarding the payment of travel, meals and other such expenses to board members.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

The Chairman: I call upon the honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief comment to make about an understandable question raised earlier by the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the work of the Committee of the Whole.

It is clear from our earlier proceedings that the minister, or a minister and officials, will again appear before the Committee of the Whole; therefore, we must make provision for that in our future schedule. But in order to ensure that we give full consideration to the availability of witnesses, and in order to give some thought to the schedule of the committee, I suggest that when the Senate rises this afternoon, the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures meet so that it can consider these questions and report tomorrow when the committee will meet again.

The Chairman: It is the hope of the subcommittee to meet as soon as the Senate rises.

Senator Frith: While we are dealing with procedural questions, honourable senators will remember that last week I mentioned I had heard from the CBC regarding televising the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole. The first thing I want to say about that is that I was partly mistaken. I had heard from Mr. Don Newman who is, I think, head of CBC television news in Ottawa. However, he is also President of the Parliamentary Press Gallery. It turns out that he was communicating with me on behalf of the press gallery—that is, on behalf of the television networks—regarding the possibility of obtaining a common feed. The communication was not only from the CBC.

That brings me to my second point, and that is whether the committee wishes to consider offering access to the television networks for televising the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole on this matter.

As the members will know, the sound feed from the Senate—and I assume also from the Committee of the Whole—goes automatically to the Press Gallery. That same sound feed is on channels 80 and 81 of the OASIS system, which are the two channels reserved for the Senate.

• (1520)

I have not had a conversation recently with Mr. Newman, but I can tell you that when I did have a conversation with him, he talked in terms not of the elaborate set-up installed for the delivery of the Speech from the Throne but something else that would need to be worked out with the steering committee. Therefore, it seems to me that we should give that matter some thought. Obviously, nothing can be done about it today, but honourable senators might like to think about it, and I would like it brought before the committee at an appropriate time to see whether the committee, after reflection, would like to have that happen. I do not wish to give the proposal the kiss of death, but I would be in favour of having that happen.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I personally would like to support having television in the Senate chamber covering what I consider to be an historic event, namely, discussion on the floor of the Senate of this major public issue.

There are some of us who are pretty sensitive to what the press says about the Senate. However, those of us who are active and spend almost all of our time, seven days a week, considering and discussing public issues and doing our jobs as senators realize that there is no better way that we could establish the credibility of the Senate—or the lack of it, if we want to do a poor job—than by bringing television cameras into this chamber. In my opinion, the Senate is a forum where senators generally do their homework; where there is less partisanship; where there is less name calling; where there is a reaching to the crux and the heart of issues far more frequently than in the House of Commons. If the television cameras were brought in, it would establish what I believe to be a fact, and that is that the Senate does very useful work.

I would argue also on another point, namely, that the people of this country have the right to see on television the proceedings of this chamber and, in particular, the proceedings with regard to this major public issue that has, at times, strained the very fabric of our Canadian way of life.

I for one have been in Parliament, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate, for close to 40 years now and I think it is time we in this chamber were on television in order to let the public decide about the Senate; about the issues that we raise and how we conduct ourselves. If we do this, I think we will receive good marks from the Canadian public at large.

I recommend strongly the televising of these proceedings.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe the honourable senator is anticipating a debate that may be launched in the committee at a later date by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. Personally, I will await that occasion before discussing the merits of his suggestions.

For the moment, and for the record, I want to say—and I know that the honourable senator agrees with me, because he did so on the last occasion when we had this discussion in the Senate—that the decision is not one for the committee to take but rather for the Senate as a whole.

Senator Frith: For the Senate. It is a decision for the Senate as a whole; we have left it to the committees to decide individually for themselves in this respect.

Senator Corbin: I would like to ask a question of Senator Frith. I do not wish to put words into his mouth or thoughts into his mind, but, by the manner in which he broached the topic, I was left with the impression that perhaps we would let the steering committee decide this matter for us, collectively. I am sure that is not the impression he wanted to leave with us today, and therefore I think I misunderstood him absolutely. I see him shaking his head, therefore I was wrong. Right?

Senator Frith: Senator, that depends on what you think you were wrong about. However, from what I heard you say, you were not wrong.

My recollection is that we have left the question of televising of the committees with the committee concerned. In other words, if a Senate committee wishes to admit television, the committee itself can make that decision. In any event, that is how I think it should be, and perhaps that could be checked.

At the end of the session today, my proposal is to move that the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole be televised. That is, that we invite the television networks to establish a common feed to televise the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole on the matter that is now before it, the terms and details to be worked out by the committee on procedures. In other words, if we agreed on the principle, then the detail would be worked out by the committee, with members of the committee—that is, the Committee of the Whole—in the course of the debate, making suggestions for their consideration.

In other words, the principle would need to be settled by the members of the committee, and the only thing that would be left to the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures would be such things as where the cameras would go, and so on.

Senator Corbin: I have a further question, honourable senators. Perhaps Senator Frith could explain to us why it is that the press gallery, its president or chairman, is suddenly interested in our operations when, day after day during full sittings of the Senate, there is rarely, if ever, anyone in the gallery, and yet we do not lock the door to the press gallery. They are welcome here at any time. What is it that they are attempting to accomplish by thrusting this suggestion upon us all of a sudden? Is it that they expect us to lay a golden egg, or something of that nature? Why this sudden interest on the part of the press gallery, when at least half a dozen of their 600-odd members could be sitting here at any time at each one of our regular sittings or attending our committees? Have they been bitten by some rare insect that we might be unaware of? Why this unexplainable interest?

I ask this question as a former journalist myself. There are other journalists here surrounding me on both sides of the house. I see them all over the place. In our day we would do our job and attend meetings in order to gather information and report the facts fairly and objectively to an attentive public. However, I cannot see what it is that the press gallery hopes to accomplish by thrusting cameras into this chamber. I might add that unless we have control of those cameras and they are manned and operated by the staff of the Senate, I for one can stand here now and say that I will never go for such a proposition. We do not have the infrastructure; we do not have the facilities, and we do not even have the budget for that. I do not think we should contract out to the CBC, or any conglomerate of the news agencies in the country, to do that job for the Senate. That is a method of expanding into the public that should be under our full control.

[Senator Corbin.]

However, that is a different debate altogether. Has the time come for the Senate to accept its responsibility in this matter? Must it be prodded and prompted by the press gallery? That is an entirely different issue. Perhaps Senator Frith or someone else could tell us why it is that the press gallery has so suddenly become interested in this matter. The last time they were interested in this place was approximately 18 months ago when the Senate dared stand up to the government and say "You cannot do this." They then disappeared; they vanished down the halls of this building and we never saw them again. So what is going on now?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as far as I know, and from my experience, the interest of the television news people in televising the proceedings of the Senate and its committees is not at all sudden.

● (1530)

An Hon. Senator: What is the occasion?

Senator Frith: That is the case for everything in news. The interest of news people in what is taking place is always occasional; it arises when they see a newsworthy occasion. We are talking about television news, now; we are not talking about televising all of the proceedings—it is a matter of making it available to them. All news people work, as I understand it, on what they consider to be occasions of interest to the public. So it is always occasional. In this case, it is not sudden. I have been here almost ten years and I know from friends in the television business and in the news business that they are interested in televising certain newsworthy proceedings of Senate committees. They would be interested in having the right to televise the proceedings of the Senate—but that is a different story. That is something, as Senator Corbin has said, that has to be analogized as to the arrangements on the other side. That is a totally different and a much larger question.

As to why they are interested in televising—if it seems sudden—the proceedings of the Senate in Committee of the Whole on a matter other than legislation, let's face it, that is pretty sudden for all of us, too, to do what we are doing here. It is not fair to say that they are suddenly interested in the proceedings of this committee and being invited to televise some of the proceedings—the ones they are interested in doing; it is a news question. It is an interest because it is an event that they think is newsworthy. It is that simple.

I agree with Senator Corbin that televising the proceedings of the Senate itself in the way it is done in the other place is another question.

Senator Roblin: I am interested in getting an explanation that appears to be emerging now as to what exactly is being proposed. I must confess that when I heard that an application had been made to televise our proceedings, I thought that was what was meant, namely, to televise the proceedings of the committee. But I am gathering the impression that that is not the case at all. What is apparently being proposed is that we should allow the televising of what portions of what transpires here that the news media think is a good idea. That is something quite different. In other words, we will fill up the sixty-second slots—that is what we are here for, apparently, under this proposal.

Senator Godfrey: Thirty-second slots!

Senator Roblin: What? Twenty seconds, thirty seconds? Well, whatever it is, it is not very long.

Senator Murray: You have sixty seconds.

An Hon. Senator: He will do it in five seconds.

Senator Roblin: I can see a situation where the proceedings of the committee are not transmitted at all but, rather, the comments of some of the senators who happen to strike a responsive chord in the news media, or the witnesses who are before us at the same time.

I would like to know—and I think this is something that the committee could look into—the precise definition of what is proposed. I would like to know how it is intended that the contribution of the various senators and the contribution of the people at the table will be recorded on television. Will there be a number of different cameras in here operated in the usual way that television cameras are operated? In other words, it is something quite distinct and different that is being proposed from that which we are accustomed to hear and see about the other place. That comes as a bit of a surprise to me—if I have it gauged correctly—because I thought that what was being proposed is that we in the Senate chamber would have the same kind of attention from the television media as they have in the chamber in the other place. But if it is a question of people coming in to take snapshots of us, as it were, from time to time, then I think that is quite another matter, and something that I think we should give some consideration to. If that is all they want, then they can arrange interviews—as is often the case—outside the chamber, which would suit their purpose very well and would enable them to pick and select what news items they want to give publicity to, which is their business—that is another matter altogether.

I was under the impression that televising the proceedings of the Senate conveyed the same notion as televising the proceedings in the other place. If that is not the case, then I certainly reserve my position as to what attitude I personally would take toward it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, so that anyone who wants to talk about it is clear—I had hoped I made it clear—the inquiry I had was neither an inquiry to set up a system for televising all the proceedings of the Senate nor was it to set up a fixed arrangement here that would televise all of the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole, in the sense that it would be fed into something that would show it continuously. The inquiry that I had was concerning the possibility of the Committee of the Whole being treated like a committee where the cameras could come in, record the proceedings and use for news programs those portions that they wanted to use.

Senator Flynn: They would just use what they like.

Senator Frith: I am reporting what I was asked about. I think I have made it clear that—anyone else can shake their head the same as Senator Flynn is doing—all I am telling you is what was requested. When I make my motion, I will try to make it as precise as I can in order to make what is being proposed quite clear. However, I can go this far and can say that it was not an inquiry to say that because we are sitting in Committee of the Whole on the Canada-France agreement, suddenly they wanted to televise all the proceedings of the Senate exactly as they do in the House of Commons—that was not the inquiry I received.

Senator Roblin: Well, this is disillusioning. This must be particularly so for Senator Argue, because I understood from what he said to us that he favoured the full portrayal of the proceedings of this house on television, as they do in the House of Commons. I thought that was what we were talking about, too—particularly after I heard his eloquent statement. Now, however, it appears that such is not the case. We have to get a clear definition as to what is going on here.

Senator Frith: It did not appear just now; you were simply not listening, that's all.

Senator Godfrey: I have been on two committees which have been televised recently. One was the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. We normally have an attendance of eight senators; we had twenty-one the day that we were being televised. I arrived five minutes early and could not find a seat at the table. The next day when we did not have television, we had four senators there.

It worked in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce; we allowed them to use the cameras, they took what they wanted and departed—

Senator Murray: No, no. My friend is wrong about that.

Senator Godfrey: —so I do not see any difference between a Committee of the Whole and the other committee.

Senator Murray: I beg to differ with my honourable friend. We did not let them come in, take what they like, and depart. There were ground rules that were agreed to by a subcommittee of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

Senator Frith: Oh, so we have a precedent; good!

Senator Murray: There were ground rules that were agreed with the networks. All of the proceedings were taken—

Senator Frith: But not broadcast.

Senator Murray: —and were broadcast on a certain channel, as I recall. In any case, after that—as happens in the House of Commons, of course—the news editors made their own decisions as to which—

Senator Frith: Exactly!

Senator Murray: —ten or fifteen seconds of the proceedings they decided to broadcast on the noon or evening news.

Senator Frith: Exactly!

Senator Murray: In any case, I understand that Senator Frith will make a motion in due course, and we will have an opportunity to consider this further.

Mr. Chairman, a witness is waiting. Shall I escort him into the chamber?

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall our next witness, Mr. Cummings, President of National Sea Products, be invited to attend the committee now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Bring him in.

• (1540)

Pursuant to Order adopted on February 11, 1987, Mr. Gordon Cummings and Mr. Robbie Shaw were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I wish to inform the committee that we now have with us Mr. Gordon Cummings, President and Chief Executive Officer of National Sea Products. He is accompanied by the Vice-President of the company, Mr. Robbie Shaw.

The Chairman: We would like to thank you both for appearing before us today. Do you have an opening statement, Mr. Cummings?

Mr. Gordon Cummings, President and Chief Executive Officer, National Sea Products: Yes. On behalf of the 8,000 people of National Sea Products, I would very much like to thank you for inviting us here today.

As many of you no doubt know, National Sea is Canada's largest fish-based food company and one of the largest vertically integrated fishing companies in the world. We own and operate 59 vessels and provide employment for more than 8,000 people.

However, we are more than just a large offshore fishing company. National Sea is deeply involved in every sector of the Atlantic fishery. It is the second largest private-sector employer in the province of Newfoundland. For many communities in Newfoundland—such as Burgeo, La Scie and Arnold's Cove, there is no economic alternative, since National Sea purchases the daily catches from hundreds of inshore fishermen who fish the coves and inlets all along the shores of Newfoundland.

As many of you know, employment in Atlantic Canada now and in the future is what is at stake if France continues to plunder our fishery resource as they are doing on the south coast of Newfoundland now. Conservation of any species is the intelligent way to ensure that the resource is replenished for the future. Newfoundland fishermen know this, but France seems to refuse to accept this basic tenet, and that is the crux of the problem with which you have been dealing.

The Honourable Tom Siddon, union representatives, industry representatives and fishermen's associations deliberated long and hard last year and agreed to a fishing plan for the east coast of Canada for 1987. That saw a painful reduction of 50 million pounds of quota. We agreed to this in the interests of conservation.

It is a matter of fact and of record that France has dramatically overfished in the disputed fishing zone south of Newfoundland called 3Ps. It is a matter of fact and record that France intends to continue to overfish in waters inside our 200-mile limit.

[Senator Murray.]

In December, 1986, Gardiner Pinfold Consulting Economists Limited, a highly respected firm with particular expertise in matters related to the east coast fishery, produced a study paper for the Fisheries Council of Canada. Let me quote you some statistics from that report.

The quantity of cod in dispute in the Canada-France boundary discussion is 103 million pounds. The number of Canadian workers affected is probably about 10,000. The landed value of cod in the dispute is between $20 million and $25 million. The market value of this cod in dispute is between $40 million and $50 million. The potential loss of income by fishermen and plant workers is between $25 million and $30 million.

For Canadians, this area of dispute is primarily an inshore fishery. Just over 85 per cent of the Canadian catch taken in this area is taken by some 3,000 inshore fishermen operating from some 145 ports and landing sites along the Newfoundland south coast. The fishermen's catch is purchased, in large part, by the offshore companies. The other 15 per cent is taken by the offshore trawlers, most of which also operate from south coast ports in Newfoundland. This total catch supports, in whole or in part, some 20 fish plants.

Honourable senators, there is no question that overfishing of Atlantic cod by the French will have a negative impact on the economy of the east coast, particularly Newfoundland. Overfishing by France, in our opinion, must be stopped.

We have been greatly encouraged to see the Government of Canada take a strong and decisive stand on this issue during the last several days. We believe it is time for all Canadians to support the government in its new approach to negotiations with France. National Sea intends to assist the government in any way it can to bring about a resolution of this difficult situation as soon as possible.

I should like to add, Mr. Chairman, that I gather this morning there was a comment regarding the notion of government funding of National Sea Products. I would like to correct any impressions that might have left. In the 1982-84 period, when there certainly were difficulties in the Atlantic fisheries, we understand and realize, as do you, that over $100 million of Canadian funds was infused by the Government of Canada into several companies in Atlantic Canada.

Only one large company, National Sea Products, managed to survive that period with private investment by Atlantic Canadians, thus turning the situation around. Twenty million dollars was invested by private sector Nova Scotian investors and $75 million by the Toronto Dominion Bank with no government guarantees or, in any other way, any government support. Basically, National Sea Products was the only one of the major companies to survive that difficult period without government support.

Today we are the largest seafood base company in Canada, indeed, in North America.

I would be pleased to deal further with that matter, if any honourable senators were interested. Along with my colleague, Mr. Shaw, I would be delighted to answer any questions with regard to the Canada-France dispute.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Honourable senators, there are a couple of points on which I think Mr. Cummings could be helpful to us. The first relates to the matter of excessive French fishing. We were told by the minister that, because of the agreement as to ownership and jurisdiction in the 3Ps division, the expression "Canadian waters" used in the Agreed Record is not satisfactory and that, consequently, on the basis of this agreement, there can be no assurance that there will be controls to prevent overfishing.

Is the lack of controls to prevent overfishing in 3Ps a principal part of your company's objection to the situation as it now stands?

Mr. Cummings: Honourable senators, we have great concern about the French overfishing on the south coast of Newfoundland in the 3Ps zone. Last year, apparently, the French fished about 26,000 tonnes of cod in that area. The quota that we, as Canadians, set for the French was 6,400 tonnes. The French have given us indications that this year they intend to catch between 30,000 and 47,000 tonnes in that area.

The Canadian government and our scientists estimate that the total amount that should be caught there by all peoples is 41,000 tonnes of which 35,000 tonnes is for Canadian interests. Certainly, if the French fished 30,000 to 40,000 tonnes and Canadians fished some 35,000 tonnes, there would be a serious reduction in the stock, and that is a matter of great concern to us.

• (1550)

A matter of equal concern to all of us, I think, is the fact that the agreements and negotiations with France to date have not dealt at all with when we might be able to stop overfishing. I think it is in everyone's interests to try in the year 1987 to come to some understanding with France that will stop the massive overfishing. If we really go to 1991, which would mean five years' massive overfishing, I am afraid there is the real possibility that the stock in 3Ps will be devastated. After 1991 no one will have to worry about what the quotas will be, because there will not be any fish to catch. We must appreciate that that is the stock which feeds the south coast of Newfoundland, an area for which there is no other economic alternative. Well over 100 communities are dependent on that stock, and that stock only. Certainly, we are all concerned about the fact that the problem of French overfishing to date has not been addressed. As we sit here today, nine French factory freezer trawlers are fishing in the 3Ps area.

Senator Frith: Can you tell us the capacity of those nine trawlers?

Mr. Cummings: They are not all of the same size. They can carry from about 600,000 pounds finished—which would be 2 million pounds of gross fish weight—up to about double that, or they could process at any one time between 2 million and 4 million round pounds or gross pounds of fish.

It is also interesting to realize that we have one factory freezer trawler licence in all of Canada. To think that there are nine foreign factory freezer trawlers operating in our waters—nine vessels from one country operating basically without control—we must realize that this is an awful lot of fishing capacity. Those vessels certainly could harvest 40,000 tonnes of fish.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Could we stay with this matter of the freezer trawlers for a moment? In the 1972 agreement, there was a provision that a maximum of ten French trawlers registered in Saint Pierre and Miquelon could continue to fish along the coast of Newfoundland. We are not all deep sea fishermen. Could the witness explain to the committee the difference between these ten French trawlers and the ships to which he has just now referred?

Mr. Cummings: The 1972 agreement—which, incidentally, terminated May 15, 1986—refers to ten Saint Pierre and Miquelon based trawlers. I think I am right in saying that six trawlers currently operate out of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. They are offshore type trawlers of the kind envisioned in the 1972 agreement.

The nine factory freezer trawlers that are also operating now were not envisioned, I think it is fair to say—certainly not by Canada—when the 1972 agreement was signed. First, they are not based in Saint Pierre and Miquelon. These vessels are based in metropolitan France in a place called St. Malo.

I believe that the intent of the 1972 agreement was that there continue to be some rights given to the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon to carry on their fishery as they always have done. But I think that we as Canadians would regard the nine vessels currently operating on behalf of metropolitan France as foreign freezer trawlers having come from Europe, in essence, no different from those of Russia, Cuba or any other country. They are the sort of vessel that we, by declaring our 200-mile limit in 1977, were hoping to remove. In fact, we have been successful as Canadians in removing the factory freezer trawlers of all nations other than France, except for those vessels that are really harvesting surplus fish.

That is the long way round in terms of answering your question and I apologize. I can say that I do not believe that the nine vessels currently operating out of metropolitan France were in any way intended to represent those that were envisioned in the 1972 agreement. They were supposed to be vessels operating out of Saint Pierre and Miquelon by and for the benefit of the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Could you tell us the size of the vessels in terms of fishing capacity?

Mr. Cummings: The French, for a while, were trying to build vessels up to the maximum length allowed in this agreement for factory freezer trawlers so that they could slide them in under the agreement. Certainly, in terms of fishing capacity, the vessels that are coming over from metropolitan France can harvest many more times the amount of fish in a twenty-four-hour period than I think anyone, at least from the Canadian side, would ever have visualized when reaching the 1972 agreement.

Senator Bonnell: Mr. Chairman, I have an article before me about the freezer trawlers and, if I may, I would like to ask a supplementary question. This article gives the impression that the nine factory freezer trawlers from continental France were somehow changed from the time of this agreement, whereas the previous trawlers were not factory freezer vessels but 50-metre trawlers out of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. A chap from the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union has said that there are no options left for the fishermen in Newfoundland but to face real disaster and starvation. Was there any reason to give those licences to factory freezer trawlers—which operate seven days a week, 365 days a year—other than the fact that one licence has already been issued to a freezer trawler of National Sea?

Mr. Cummings: I can try to answer part of your question, senator. I do not know that I have the answer to other parts of it. I suppose one would have to ask Mr. Siddon and the Department of Fisheries why the nine licences were granted. The one licence that was granted to National Sea did have included in it, as a specific proviso and restriction, the provision that the vessel could not operate in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. That was a provision included in the beginning, on the suggestion of both the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and ourselves, so that we would not jeopardize in any way the Canada-France agreement, and so that there would be no notion in mind of setting precedents. I am not aware of anything that France has said about this request for the nine vessels that in any way relates it to the fact that Canada has licensed one vessel and is willing to license two more.

As I understand it, France is saying that these are French territorial waters. France claims that this area is one of its sovereign territories and that is why the French believe they can operate these vessels in a manner unimpeded and unrestricted by Canadian regulations. That is the common problem we are all dealing with.

Senator Frith: The French maintain that the 3Ps area is sovereign French territory?

Mr. Cummings: Yes.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, are we being nice about this or is one side being favoured?

Senator Bonnell: I have just one supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. Someone from the government, possibly the minister from Newfoundland, stated that if the French did not want to abide by the quotas, the Newfoundland ports might refuse to allow the factory freezer trawlers to use their facilities in order to get fuel or supplies. In your opinion, do these factory freezer trawlers have to use the Newfoundland ports to any great extent, and is that a very great threat to these factory freezer trawlers?

● (1600)

Mr. Cummings: The typical factory freezer trawler can operate about 60 days, if nothing goes seriously wrong, and never have to go into any port. So from the point of view of their operations, unless they had a serious mechanical problem, they are probably not impeded very much at all. I understand that from a diplomatic perspective, if one country bans another country from using its ports, it is seen as a serious signal, and I further understand that it was hoped that when the Government of Canada took this action, it would be seen by France as a serious signal. But in terms of what this action does to the operation of the fleet, it is very little, if anything.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask another question concerning division 3Ps. I have read the annex to the Paris agreement of January 24. There I found that Canadian and French scientists are to evaluate the state of the cod stock and formulate, if possible, a recommendation on the proposed catch for 1987, and that, if possible, they are to formulate recommendations for the TAC for cod from 1988 to 1991. Are we to understand that this annex does not reassure you that the overfishing in 3Ps, to which you have referred, will not take place in 1987 or in the period 1988 to 1991?

Mr. Cummings: The past practice and record of France would indicate that they have very little interest, if any, in conserving the stock. I have very little confidence that that particular clause will do anything to help the stock. What we have to do collectively, and as quickly as possible, is reach a full and final settlement with France on both the boundary and on the ultimate fishing rights. Letting the matter go on for five years will place that stock in great danger.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I have one final question at this time. The Prime Minister has written a letter in which he has given the assurance that any further agreement to allot cod to France in the Canadian fishing zone will be dependent upon a joint agreement on the total allowable catch for fishermen in the disputed zone during the period of arbitration—that is, the 1988 to 1991 period—in order to solve the problem of overfishing. I have gone through the Paris agreement and I can find no basis upon which to found his assertion. I gather that you were no more successful than I was.

Mr. Cummings: Basically, the Paris agreement has a dual track thought in attempting to deal with the method of arbitration for the period 1988 to 1991 and an interim fishing agreement, which is basically an agreement that Canada and France will sit down and talk. Certainly there are no assurances in that agreement which say that France will stop overfishing. If we want to be realistic about the matter, it is in France's interests to stall this issue as long as they can and to overfish as much as they can. I think we all believe that when this matter is finally resolved, France will have a 12-mile limit and will not have access to any of that stock. Thus, France has no long-term interest, as we as Canadians must have, in the preservation of that stock for, indeed, the people of Newfoundland and, ironically, the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. We have to realize in this matter that the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon are at the same risk as the people on the south coast of Newfoundland.

Senator Rowe: Did I understand you to say at the beginning of your presentation that your company is the second largest employer in Newfoundland?

Mr. Cummings: Yes.

Senator Rowe: Whom do you regard as the largest employer in Newfoundland?

Mr. Cummings: The largest private sector employer in Newfoundland is Fishery Products, which employs some 8,000 people. We employ over 2,000 people. When I made that comment, the other two words I used were "private sector". Obviously, the largest employer in Newfoundland is the public sector.

Senator Rowe: My second question is this: I have heard, as we all have, that the fishermen of Saint Pierre and Miquelon are sympathetic toward the plight of the Newfoundland fishermen in this matter. If that is so—and I qualify my question because I do not know that it is—do you see any long-term or, for that matter, short-term benefits in this sympathy of the fishermen of Saint Pierre and Miquelon toward Newfoundlanders?

Mr. Cummings: I do not think that there is any doubt that the true fishing community of Saint Pierre and Miquelon has the identical problem that our fishing interests on the south coast of Newfoundland have. That is, if vessels from metropolitan France come in, scoop up the resource and basically devastate it, and return to France, then there will be no fish, or very few fish, left for either the people of the south coast of Newfoundland or the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. Keeping this point in mind and realizing that it is Saint Pierre and Miquelon which gives France its claim to say that they can have this wonderful 200-mile limit, it would seem to me that as we go through the year it is in the interests of Canada, in its overall negotiating posture, to ensure that we always keep the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon on our side, and that in whatever proposals we make, we include provisions that look after the people of those islands reasonably such that, quite frankly, we divide them away from France. Clearly, when this matter ultimately comes to arbitration, or if it ever becomes a subject of world opinion, it would be in our interests to have the communities of Saint Pierre and Miquelon on our side rather than on the side of metropolitan France.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have a number of detailed questions, but, first, I want to ask a general question. When the agreement between Canada and France was made public, I understand that Mr. Cummings found it to be, how shall I say it, unsatisfactory. At least, he is reported to have said words with that implication. So I would like to know from Mr. Cummings what he finds wrong with the Canada-France agreement, if anything.

Mr. Cummings: I can answer that question in two parts. I believe that many people, including myself, have voiced concern and disappointment not only when the agreement was announced but also when there was a delay of three days in the agreement's being announced. The reality is that it is now three weeks later and the agreement has been signed between the two countries. I certainly do not believe that it would be in our interests to try to renege on an agreement which we have signed, but, rather, that we should work forward. Since that time, when I did speak up, a fair number of things have happened, and it is my view that we should now be working forward to make the best of the situation we are in. The thing that I find most ironic about the situation is that we as Canadians are having a great time fighting each other—and I must admit that I was part of that—and meanwhile the French are out there fishing every day and are not in any way concerned about us. At this point, probably what is in our best interests as Canadians—hopefully all Canadians, and particularly in supporting Newfoundland—is to look forward rather than dwell too much on how we got where we are. In simple terms, we are where we are.

Senator MacEachen: That is fair enough. Looking forward, we have an agreement which is the only instrument in place by which we can reach a conclusion with France. I have been wrestling, as you have, with the question of overfishing. It is my conclusion, from reading the section of the agreement dealing with the procès-verbale, that there is no mechanism established in the agreement by which Canada and France can negotiate about the control of the fisheries in the disputed zone. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Cummings: That is certainly right. I could go even further and say that the sad truth is that France does not want to have an early agreement which would control the overall level of fishing, because they are not interested in a long-term conservation approach such as we as Canadians would espouse. But it does seem to me that we have an agreement which says, basically, that we will sit down and talk about terms of arbitration this year and a 1988-91 fishing plan, and whether that fishing plan could in theory have reasonable catch limits and controls. I do not think that the agreement precludes in any way our going further or trying to move the agenda along faster; and I would hope that there would be a change—and I certainly sense a change in the last several days—in the approach on this matter by our government that we would not feel constrained by the agreement to deal only with those matters.

The things that we as Canadians want to get an agreement on are a final agreement on the boundary and a final agreement on a permanent fishing arrangement between Canada and France, if there is to be any. I do not believe there is anything in the agreement that precludes us from doing that, certainly not within the consultative processes in which we are involved. What we are encouraging is that Canada move forward aggressively in this thing and not limit itself only to the agreement. The agreement sets minimums, but certainly it does not set maximums. So, I think that we can go further, but the agreement is only a start.

Senator MacEachen: I agree that there is no limit to our aspirations in terms of getting things done; but less than a month ago we signed an agreement with France in which we laid out the conditions under which we would settle this very difficult question. In that framework, to which we agreed less than a month ago, there is no provision or commitment by France to negotiate with us on quotas in the disputed zone.

Senator Flynn: But in other areas we have always the possibility of reducing the quotas.

Senator MacEachen: Yes, but I am trying to ask Mr. Cummings about a fresh framework, about an instrument recently signed with France in which they have very clearly and skillfully avoided any commitment to negotiate quotas or control overfishing. It is all right now for the Prime Minister, after the agreement has been signed, to say, "Yes, we have to do something about those quotas and about controlling the overfishing," but that opportunity escaped the government when the agreement was signed. So I am asking Mr. Cummings, with all of the nobility that we can muster, to look into the future to determine how we can overcome this particular obstacle. How do we overcome it—by reopening the agreement?

Mr. Cummings: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Shaw is our representative on the consultative process. If you would permit me, I would ask him to answer that question.

Mr. R. Shaw, Vice-President, National Sea Products: Honourable senators, I believe that you are correct in how you put the situation, except that it is clear to me that we have open terms of reference in upcoming negotiations for the rest of this year which allow Canada clearly and unequivocally to negotiate on the basis of insisting on a reduction in the fishing effort in 3Ps by the French, and I believe that the Prime Minister's letter to Mr. Crosbie, which was made public last Thursday, indicates that fairly firmly. So I believe that the consultative committee—although I have not spoken to all of the members—is now under the impression that the terms of reference clearly are that the negotiations in the next nine months must include a reduction in the fishing effort in 3Ps, and I believe the minister said that this morning.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Shaw refers to "open terms of reference", what terms of reference are they? I quite agree that the Canadian government would wish, as you and I would wish, to deal with the overfishing; but there is no term of reference in the agreement that would permit that to happen. I am asking how it is going to happen, if the French say, "Yes." The French knew perfectly well what they were doing, because, if you look at their note verbale, they exempted very clearly the disputed zone from any consideration of quotas. Therefore, I think it is all right for us to make aspirations about what we would like to do, but we recently concluded an agreement with France in which that is not permitted. How do we get over that?

Mr. Cummings: I am not sure that it is not permitted, but I believe you have hit on a crucial point in this, which is, how do we get France to really want to resolve this issue? Because clearly what France does not want to do is resolve the issue. They want to drag their feet. The question is, how do we drag France to the negotiating table in a manner where all of a sudden they want to do something?

• (1620)

Senator Frith: That is something against their interest.

Mr. Cummings: Against their interest, potentially, yes, and that is the conundrum.

I have to be very open with you and say that we have advanced, in the last week, several ideas on how that might happen. I am sure all honourable senators would agree that, this being on the public record, sharing some of those ideas with you now would not be very prudent on my part. Although I would like to do that, I am sure all of you would tell me I should not do that, because it is important that we as Canadians keep our negotiating thoughts and ideas as private as we can so that we may use our strategies as best we can.

But there is no doubt at all in my mind—and I think you have the nub of the problem—that in terms of how we deal with France on this issue, we have to change what I would call the relative balance of power and desire. To do so, in my mind, will take a great deal of effort on the part of Canada, because, quite rightly, France would rather do nothing. France's choice is to do nothing; that is France's best option.

I suspect that that will result in some tough negotiations taking place with France. I suspect that we will reach a time when we will require a great deal of support from the people of Canada and from the Government of Canada. We will have to take these stands, because underneath it all, as you have correctly identified, as of February 17, there is no great desire on the part of France to resolve this; there is quite the opposite, a great desire to stretch it out. The real challenge to Canadians is to reverse that.

I was encouraged by the consultations which took place over the past week. I saw for the first time that sort of thinking coming forward. I hope that we will develop over the next several months several strategies that will force France to bargain much more than France has wanted to bargain thus far.

Senator MacEachen: To bargain with respect to the overfishing?

Mr. Cummings: I would hope that the bargaining will go further. What Canadians should start trying to resolve is the boundary dispute, first of all, and we should try to resolve that because it affects not only fisheries but perhaps oil and gas. We should also try to finally resolve a fisheries agreement which would, as part of that, resolve the overfishing. I hope we would go further than that. That included, but not only.

Senator MacEachen: I agree that is an important Canadian objective, but there are two partners. The French have to be somehow convinced to deal with the overfishing question soon rather than, as is provided for in the agreement, that the status quo will prevail in the disputed area for a period of at least three or four years. So, I think you are implying that there must be some other strategy, apart from the agreement, that will bring France to the table to discuss all of these matters.

Mr. Cummings: Absolutely.

Senator MacEachen: It is not the treaty, it is something else.

Mr. Cummings: Absolutely.

Senator MacEachen: I have a few more questions, but I think I should allow a senator from Newfoundland to have the floor.

Senator Marshall: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your impartiality and the fact that you allowed me to be third on the list three hours ago.

The Chairman: Fourth!

Senator Marshall: Mr. Cummings, the minister said this morning that in area 2GH Canada was allocated 8,000 tonnes of fish and Canada only caught 2,000 tonnes, which means that area was underfished by 6,000 tonnes. Can you tell us why that was the case? Could you comment on that?

Mr. Cummings: Area 2GH—and I am sure you must all be getting fed up with this alphabet soup of fishing zones—is the zone far to the north of Labrador. The Canadian fleet does not have vessels that are ice strengthened sufficiently to go up there during the winter when the fish are sometimes there.

In addition, there is a real question as to whether the fish that are there—and are there only sometimes—are indeed fish from Canadian waters or fish from Greenland that migrate into Canadian waters and then migrate back. It is also far away from any processing plant and, therefore, is very expensive to harvest.

The combination of the fish not always being there, its being much more expensive to harvest, and its being much farther away from port means that we as Canadians have not built the class of vessel required to exploit that area. We are quite convinced that some winters there are no fish there at all.

In terms of the 3,000 tonnes which was given to France in 2GH, my strong suspicion is that France will never catch that allocation. That, on its own, was not a major concession.

Senator Marshall: There is a total allowable catch of 20,000 tonnes. Were the biologists wrong? Where did the figure of 20,000 tonnes come from?

Senator Frith: Is that in 2GH?

Senator Marshall: Yes.

Mr. Cummings: To be honest with you, we do not think that much is there, but you will have to ask the biologists that question.

We have not tried to go up there. National Sea Products does have some quota in that area, but we regard that as being fish not worth trying to catch.

Senator Marshall: What areas does the licensed factory freezer trawler you have in operation now fish in?

Mr. Cummings: The "Cape North", Senator Marshall, operates for part of the year in zones 2J and 3KL, which is really this time of year when northern cod congregate offshore.

We also take one trip a year to the Scotia Shelf in zone 4VS where we fish for pollock, and we take two trips a year to 2J+3KL where we fish for ocean perch or redfish.

The licence that was granted to National Sea Products for that vessel stipulates that at least 50 per cent of the fish processed on board must be fish that otherwise would not have been caught. As you may know, we as Canadians have not in the past ever caught all of our ocean perch or redfish quota, nor all of our pollock quota. So half of the fish caught during the year by the "Cape North" is basically redfish and pollock and the other half is codfish.

Senator Marshall: Are you given an allocation in 3KL? You have indicated that you do some fishing there.

Mr. Cummings: Of the 254,000 tonnes, approximately 110,000 tonnes is northern cod in 2J+3KL, which is one quota. National Sea Products has about 36,000 tonnes of that total offshore allocation.

So the "Cape North" fishes about 6,000 tonnes of the 36,000 tonnes of quota allocated to National Sea Products, the other 30,000 tonnes being caught by what are called wet fish type trawlers that come back into port every ten days.

• (1630)

Senator Marshall: I want to attempt to rationalize your one licence that was alluded to by Senator Bonnell. You will recall when you got that licence that there was available one licence for FPI and one for maritime fishermen. Even at that, there was strong objection at the time from Newfoundland. Can you recall that situation for us and tell us what the objection was?

Mr. Cummings: Senator, without trying to paraphrase Premier Peckford or Minister Rideout too much, their concern was not necessarily with that one vessel but, rather, that the one would be a precedent for many more. Further, if a very large component of the total allowable catch were all of a sudden processed on factory freezer trawlers, there would be less fish processed on shore and more aboard the factory freezer trawlers.

As part of our specific licence, we indeed agreed with the Province of Newfoundland that there would be no change in the amount of fish processed by Newfoundland plants as a result of the "Cape North". As an undertaking, we said that since the vessel was based in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, and the new jobs were therefore being created there in Lunenburg, any loss of shore employment would also occur in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. In fact, that is what we have done.

I would remind everyone that in that debate the town council of Lunenburg unanimously endorsed our application; the Economic Commission of Lunenburg County also endorsed our application, as did the local provincial member and Mr. Crouse, the local federal member. The Government of Nova Scotia also supported our application, and I am proud to say that I think we have carried out, and indeed surpassed, any of the requirements put forth in the licence when granted. Certainly, I believe if you talk to the Government of Newfoundland today, they would agree that National Sea has fully lived up to the terms and conditions and that the granting of that one licence has had no impact on Newfoundland, as we promised.

Incidentally, with respect to the other two licences, you are quite right: One is reserved for FPI and the third is reserved for the independent offshore group. Approximately 20 per cent of the total quota offshore is held by 18 smaller companies, and the idea is that if they wish to put together a consortium in some way to acquire a licence, they can do so.

Senator Marshall: We can then conclude that the ten factory freezer licences held by the metropolitan French fleet would have a serious impact on the future of the fish stocks in that area.

Mr. Cummings: There is absolutely no doubt that if France harvested 40,000 tonnes of cod per year in that zone south of Newfoundland called 3Ps, and if we as Canadians also harvested approximately 40,000 tonnes per year, in the space of approximately five years we would devastate the stock, and the jobs of 10,000 Newfoundlanders and approximately 150 communities on the south shore of Newfoundland would all be in great jeopardy, because what we would be doing is harvesting double the amount of fish that we as Canadians believe is prudent to harvest in that area. I might say that that fish stock is the staple of the south coast of Newfoundland.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Cummings, I would like now to turn to the port situation. The government has indicated that they would refuse or deny the use of eastern ports to metropolitan French vessels. I would like to ask if you know anything about the ports of Saint Pierre and Miquelon with respect to their capacity, their size and their ability to handle large quantities of fish. I understand that they have a plant there of 500,000 cubic feet. I understand that Saint Pierre and Miquelon have said that they would not allow metropolitan France to process their fish in Saint Pierre and Miquelon, but could France ignore that prohibition and force the people of Saint Pierre to allow the metropolitan French vessels into port for water and fuel, et cetera?

Mr. Cummings: Senator, I am in the same position as you are in, only being able to read what is written in the newspapers. Certainly, last week the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon refused to off-load more than 100 tonnes of finished product from a factory freezer trawler that came in. To date, I have heard of nothing that would indicate that France intends to force Saint Pierre and Miquelon to do that.

The port in Saint Pierre and Miquelon is quite capable of handling those factory freezer trawlers, if they so desired, although not all at once. It would then be fairly simple to bring in refrigerated containers in order to ship that product out of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. In other words, if Saint Pierre and Miquelon wished to cooperate, they could be servicing those factory freezer trawlers and, indeed, off-loading them without any help from Canada. That is why I am encouraged by the actions of the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon, and why also we feel it is very important that Canada, as part of our strategy this year, stay on side with the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon to make sure that they see Canada as being the true concerned advocate of the preservation of stocks, and that we continue to have them see France as being the clear aggressor in trying to devastate the stocks, which is not in the interests of the people of Canada or of the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

Senator Barootes: Unfortunately, my questions have largely been answered by the inquiries made by other senators. However, I do have one or two questions to ask.

Is it possible for Mr. Cummings to tell us if, under the new agreement for 1987, the French allowable catch of cod will be higher than that for 1986, and how does it compare to 1985?

Mr. Cummings: The quotas set by Canada for cod stocks in 1987 are lower than they were in 1986. The reason for that, of course, is that we had a 15-year agreement with France which terminated on May 15, 1986, and under that agreement we basically had to set aside 20,000 tonnes of fish for France. That agreement having terminated, Canada essentially repatriated 17,000 tonnes and set aside 3,500 tonnes for the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. Therefore, in terms of quota, there is a lower quota set in 1987 because there is no fishing agreement.

In terms of actual catch, this is really the third year when France will try to fish heavily with their factory freezer trawlers. They started doing that in 1985; they were much more aggressive in 1986 and have continued into 1987. It may very well be that what will physically happen is that France will harvest as much or more fish in 1987 than they have in past years because of their total disregard for Canadian quotas. Therefore, I think we must separate quotas from actual catch.

Senator Barootes: Following that, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that through the sunset clause of the 1972 agreement in the St. Lawrence area, there was some saving of cod for fisheries other than France. From the questions and answers, as I understand it, we now think that they intend to overfish quite heavily in the area that we call 3Ps.

When we ask ourselves why the French would overfish in 3Ps, we see that it is perhaps to make up for their loss in the Gulf of St. Lawrence area. However, if we examine it further, surely the overfishing is because they choose to disregard Canadian quotas placed in that area and because they are claiming sovereignty rights over that area, because they do not agree with our maritime boundaries.

There was the opportunity in 1972, during that Maritime boundaries discussion which bears on overfishing, quotas and boundary area, to look at a 12-mile territorial limit and a 12-mile continental shelf. Had we accepted instead of rejecting that 12-mile situation, could you project what our situation would be today in respect to your company, Newfoundland fisheries and the Newfoundland fishermen on that south coast—only in relationship to 3Ps, which is the disputed area?

Mr. Cummings: Well, basically, if France or Saint Pierre and Miquelon—let us call them one and the same for now—were limited to a 12-mile boundary in and around Saint Pierre and Miquelon, I do not think any of us would be talking about fish today or in the last three weeks. I would remind you, though, that in 1972, when this 15-year agreement was signed, Canada had not declared the 200-mile limit. The notion of a 200-mile limit and the whole Law of the Sea and the evolution of the 200-mile limit came after 1972.

To establish our 200-mile limit, we entered into several agreements with several countries, including England, on five-year fishing agreements which, basically, gave those countries five years to phase out. In fact, the longest agreement that we have had with anyone is the 15-year agreement with France. Certainly, I think we would all love to see a 12-mile limit around Saint Pierre and Miquelon now. Incidentally, when all of this is said and done, that is certainly what it will come down to. The ironic thing is that France recently settled a border dispute with England on the Channel Islands, which were islands near France owned by England, and, surprise, surprise, it came out a 12-mile limit!

Senator Barootes: So the five-year period that you referred to in treaties with other countries in 1972, or thereabouts, is not too unfavourably comparable to the four- or five-year period we are now placing on trying to separate and settle this boundaries dispute in 3Ps. It has been the same period of time, I take it.

Mr. Cummings: All of the agreements that we signed with other countries were agreements of a five-year duration. We were not involved in a five-year dispute trying to resolve a boundary issue. It is fair to say that in most of these other agreements that we concluded with countries that resulted in five-year agreements, those agreements were concluded in months, not in five years.

From the point of view of Canada, if nothing is resolved short of five years—let us say that we go to arbitration, but it only resolves itself in 1991 and, heaven forbid, France overfishes for five years—we may, in fact, have a devastated south coast of Newfoundland. I hope that no Canadian would want to see that sort of thing happen and, thus, I hope that all Canadians would support Newfoundland, Atlantic Canada—indeed, our government, in working towards resolving this issue more quickly than five years.

Senator Barootes: In other words, I take it that if we went five years with France rowing its own boat as it pleases, we would end up with a fishing desert in that area.

Senator Rowe: What I have is more of a commentary than a question. If you wish, I will take a minute to go through it now.

I would like to revert to section 2G2H that we talked about earlier, where there was 6,000 tonnes of fish available and only 2,000 caught, I think, was it not, Senator Marshall?

Senator Marshall: It was 8,000.

Senator Rowe: Eight thousand, out of which we extracted two thousand.

It is an area I happened to know fairly well when I represented Labrador in the legislature. That section of the Labrador coast from Cape Harrison is not on this map. Roughly, from Cape Harrison north to the most northerly point of Labrador, namely, Cape Chidley, is the section that we were talking about.

We are talking about a part of North America where fishermen have to contend with just about every impediment and obstacle under the sun. I happen to speak with some authority on this, because my father was a Labrador skipper, as they call them in Newfoundland, for the greater part of his working life. He spent a great deal of time, as he got older, talking about his experiences down there. It was quite obvious to me then, as it is now, that we are talking about one of the most difficult places on the face of this earth in which to operate. The tides—not generally known—of Cape Chidley are one of the two or three highest tides in the world, comparable only with the tides of the Bay of Fundy and the one in China. Then there is the weather itself of one type or another—the worst weather—the type of weather that sank the “Ocean Ranger” several years ago. That type of weather is common in Labrador. There is also no end to the ice and icebergs. And the fish we are talking about are totally unreliable.

My father, who used to go north fishing, would return home one year out of four with no fish at all. It seems to me that we assume that because the fish are there, or nearby, we can count them as an asset. That is not true with this part of North America.

To sum it up, we are inclined to exaggerate the opportunities down in that part of the province.

There are one or two other things I wanted to say, but I will have an another chance some other time. I defer to Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I want to focus attention on the divisions 2J+3KL for a minute.

As I understand the present arrangement, as set forth in the agreed record, Canada has agreed that if an agreement is reached with regard to the 1988-1991 period, that agreement will provide quotas to France in divisions 2J+3KL. In other words, if there is an agreement, France will get codfish in those divisions.

No attempt has been made in the agreed record to establish how many tonnes of codfish they will get, but they are to get some. We are told that the French were extraordinarily insistent upon this provision. One wonders why they were so extraordinarily insistent when there is no minimum on the quantum to be taken. That being the case, I want to put a hypothesis before you to which I should like your reaction. By reason of the 1972 treaty, the French metropolitan fleet now is excluded from the Gulf, and they are trying to pick up that fish temporarily, for the next four or five years in 3Ps. They anticipate that, eventually, one way or another, they will be limited to a 12-mile territorial sea around Saint Pierre and Miquelon.

They will have freezer trawler capacity and they will have a market. Consequently, they are looking forward to the day when they are going to have to catch fish elsewhere; they are establishing their claim to a substantial quota in divisions 2J+3KL. They will argue that the Government of Canada has licensed these freezer trawlers and, consequently, by implication, has recognized the need for large quotas; that the Government of Canada, by agreeing to give them cod quotas in 2J+3KL—if, indeed, there eventually is an agreement—has admitted the validity of their claim. They anticipate that, eventually, they will be taking many tonnes of cod in that area. Is that a reasonable hypothesis as to why they insisted, at the highest level, I understand, that they be given cod quotas in those divisions?

Mr. Cummings: I think your hypothesis is, by and large, right. I would also point out that in the particular area we are talking about, this species is often referred to as northern cod. It is the biggest single fish stock we have in Atlantic Canada, and it represents more than 25 per cent of all the fish landed in that area. Certainly, in many respects, it is the most valuable fish we land in Atlantic Canada. It is in an area where, in 1987 for conservation reasons, we as Canadians accepted a cut in the quota of some 22 million pounds; a cut which certainly is of a quota which is totally fished by Canadians. It is the same fish which did not come into shore in such great quantities in some parts of Newfoundland last summer. That certainly caused a fair amount of public concern in Newfoundland.

It is difficult for any of us involved in the fishery to believe that we really should allow France into what is our most valuable fish stock.

Having said that, fortunately the agreement, as signed, does not say how much is to be caught. I think we have to develop a strategy for dealing with France. There is a strategy which, quite frankly, would result in your worst case scenario. It is certainly one which we worried about but has not been realized. It is clear from statements made last week by the Prime Minister, Mr. Crosbie and Mr. Siddon that there is a realization that even a small amount of northern cod being allocated to France is an exceedingly serious situation and one which certainly would be almost unthinkable on the part of those of us involved in the fishery in Atlantic Canada. This applies particularly to Newfoundlanders who regard northern cod as their basic resource, just as Albertans regard oil and the people of Saskatchewan regard wheat. I think we have to develop a strategy which does not give away significant amounts of northern cod to France.

The ironic situation in all of this is that France has not come to the conclusion that they no longer own Canada as a colony. France considers itself to have an inalienable right to fish forever in Canadian waters because they were once a colonial power. We will have to develop some strategies that exploit their thought that they have some continuing colonialistic right to fish. This is so particularly when you realize that another country which had a fair amount to do with populating Canada, namely, England, has lost its colonial right to fish codfish among others in Atlantic Canada. In fact, England was overfishing codfish hundreds of years ago and is no longer doing so. It is up to us to get the French out of there, too.

Mr. Shaw: There was a little misunderstanding in Senator Stewart's statement. He seemed to indicate that the fact that the Canadian government licensed the ten trawlers gave the French a greater claim to 2J+3KL cod. Many people feel that the government was crazy in licensing those ten freezer trawlers, but, in fairness to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the fact remains that there was method in their madness in that the ten freezer trawlers were licensed by the Canadian government in order to prove before a world court, or whatever third party arbitration might take place, that Canada is still exercising jurisdiction in those waters. There was a technical, legal reason for that licensing, which I do not believe in any way can be seen as providing a greater claim to France for 2J+3KL cod.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): On that point, as I understand it, the reason French authorities sought those licences was because those freezer trawlers would be taking fish outside the area which they regard as French waters.

Once we have licensed them for the purposes of taking fish outside French waters, then it may be argued that by authorizing the vessels, we have, by implication, authorized an adequate quantum of fish to make the vessels profitable. That argument has been used again and again against governments by fishermen.

Mr. Cummings argues that it is important that the quotas given to France in 2J+3KL be extremely small. What I think is unfortunate is that we have admitted the principle that they will be given any quota. From here on, it will be a negotiation to decide how big or how small the quota will be. We have established that if, indeed, there is an agreement, they will be getting codfish out of the northern cod stock. That has been established by this agreement.

We have gone over that precipice and we are going to have to live with the results of our fall. There is no way that is going to be reversed. We may be able to argue that their quota should be extremely small. They, of course, will have ways of putting pressure on Canada to make it as large as possible. We have admitted the principle, is that not correct?

Mr. Cummings: There are all sorts of precedents in Canada for having a licence for a fishing vessel and not having a fishing quota. There is certainly no implication that in getting a licence for a fishing vessel you then have some God-given right to a quota. Those things are separate.

I also point out that there is a long-term agreement between the European Economic Community and Canada which provides the European Economic Community with about 10,000 tonnes of northern cod. If my memory serves me well, the French share of that is 1,545 tonnes. That means that France does have a right, albeit for a small amount, three million pounds, to some northern cod now. That comes under a long-term agreement which has been in force since, I believe, 1977 or shortly thereafter.

Certainly if, in fact, there is nothing done under the Paris 1987 agreement, it will not be the very first pound of northern cod that France has taken from the 2J+3KL area.

• (1700)

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Am I not correct in saying that, for Canadian purposes, the northern cod now caught by the French vessels is taken by the European Economic Community? Is it not correct that the European Economic Community, in its wisdom, assigned that proportion of its quota to France? Now we are giving France, in its own right, access to the northern cod. Presumably West Germany will say that they want at least equal treatment with France.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator van Roggen: Mr. Cummings, I apologize for raising this question with you, because it might well be that I should have asked it of the officials who appeared this morning. Unfortunately, I had to go to a luncheon meeting. To the extent that you are able to, would you comment on the third party settlement? As I read the agreement, I do not see that the French have agreed to do anything other than initiate negotiations which will submit to compulsory third party arbitration the dispute regarding the fishing rights from 1988 to 1991. Have the French, during the discussions or negotiations to date, given any indication that they will submit this dispute to a third party? Have they said which third party they will submit to? Will it be the World Court? Will it be a bank of the World Court? Have they settled on the judges they will accept? Are you aware of whether they have made any forward movement to indicate that they will further the process of getting this thing to a court?

Mr. Cummings: So far they have indicated that they do not want to go to the World Court. The obvious reason they do not want to go to the World Court is that almost certainly that court will decide on the 12-mile limit. That has been the direction taken by all World Court rulings in this sort of arbitration in recent years between other jurisdictions around the world involving small islands near a continental country.

As to who will be the judges and where they will come from, none of that has been agreed to simply because, as the agreement is written, that is really what was seen as the subject of discussion in 1987. What France has agreed, therefore, is to discuss with Canada an arbitration and an interim fishing arrangement, but it has not agreed that by the end of 1987 the French will necessarily do anything. Therefore, I think it is in our interest as Canadians to develop quickly some strong strategies which will encourage the French to do that and more.

Senator van Roggen: Mr. Cummings, you have twice said that strong strategies should be developed to force France's hand in this matter. It does not seem to me that this agreement has gone very far towards forcing France's hand on anything, but I may be wrong on that.

Senator Flynn: You probably are.

Senator van Roggen: I want to stay with the question of the third party settlement for a moment. I repeat that Mr. Cummings may not be the appropriate witness to answer this question, because it is a legal one. I would be most interested, if other senators would, in having a competent legal person appear before this Committee of the Whole to tell us what mechanisms are available to a country such as Canada—which has a claim that would limit the right of Saint Pierre and Miquelon to a 12-mile limit—to force an arbitration, where there is no agreement, short of gunboat diplomacy. I think we should have on the record the full background on the legal situation we would find ourselves in if we had no agreement whatsoever with the French, to bring them at least to the point of submitting to third party arbitration the settlement of this boundary dispute. Without such an agreement, the overfishing on the part of the French will simply destroy the stocks.

It would seem to me that in order to bring the French to heel, Canada will have to take a much tougher position than any that has been taken in these negotiations to date. The French have taken additional quotas to which they would not have been entitled for their metropolitan fleet and have offered to do nothing other than initiate negotiations on the boundaries.

The Chairman: Senator van Roggen, your suggestion has been heard by the subcommittee. As soon as the Senate rises, that committee will meet and your suggestion will be brought before it.

Senator Flynn: I believe that question was partially answered this morning.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the attention of Mr. Cummings has been drawn to the question of northern cod. He has described for us how valuable that stock is to the Atlantic fisheries. This question is, of course, one of the issues of the controversy in the agreement. We have dealt with the matter of overfishing with all of its implications and now we are dealing with the NAFO division 2J+3KL, which is the division of the northern cod.

It is clear from the Canada-France agreed record that if any agreement takes place at all on the boundaries and the simultaneous settlement of quotas in Canadian waters for 1988 to 1991, the quotas will include cod quotas in NAFO division 2J+3KL. That is the wording of the accord, and it has been confirmed by the press release. It certainly cannot be withdrawn at this stage, unless we want to re-open the agreement and get the consent of the French to renegotiate.

Mr. Cummings has mentioned the long-term agreement between Canada and the European Economic Community on the access to the northern cod. It is true that there has been an allocation to the European Economic Community, which has been subdivided between France and the other countries, the larger portion going to the Federal Republic of Germany. That treaty will terminate.

In the absence of this particular hostage to fortune, there would be no European access to the northern cod after the termination of a long term agreement. One asks—and one has to ask—why did Canada agree to offer cod quotas in the context of an overall agreement to France? I think that we have been provided with the answer: That was the price we had to pay to get France to negotiate the settlement of the boundary dispute.

Senator Flynn: What about the price we would pay if we did not get agreement?

Senator MacEachen: Of course, we are talking in the context of an overall agreement, but we are also talking in the context of the agreement that was made in January. I am saying that we would not have had that agreement in January unless we included the offer of northern cod. The Minister for External Relations, the Honourable Monique Landry, told the House of Commons quite candidly why this course was taken. I quote from her statement:

● (1710)

We now realize, and we admitted as much to the French, that they want to retain their position, and as a result, if we wish to settle this boundary dispute, we will have to grant them cod quotas from divisions 2J+3KL.

One can debate whether it was wise of the Government of Canada to make this arrangement, but I do not think we can overlook the reason why it was done. Canada is desperately anxious to get a settlement of this boundary dispute. The French are desperately anxious to get as large a quota as possible of northern cod. Basically, that is what the negotiations will centre upon. Perhaps I should not say “basically”, but there will be a link between these two positions. As we show resistance to a substantial allocation to the French of northern cod in the context of the overall agreement, French resistance to formulating satisfactory terms for arbitration will increase. That is the way the negotiations will go. I find it quite unfortunate that we have ended up in this position.

I can only say to you that if you have strategies, they have to be put in play, because it is not a winning strategy to trade two Canadian values against the French. We have to give on one or the other. The Premier of Newfoundland is no innocent when it comes to the sensitivity of that subject, and neither are you. You understood how sensitive this matter of the northern cod was. That is why the French extracted that concession from Canada. I think that it was extracted at a very high level, and not just by Mr. Guillaume, who signed the document on behalf of France. If you have any strategies, I think that you ought to tell us about them, because I am quite frustrated that you have given us no, shall I say, balm with respect to the agreement. You say that there are other things and that you have heard about them. Mr. Shaw has said that there are terms of reference that open up new business. We do not know about that, so we are frustrated.

Mr. Cummings: I can understand your frustration. At the same time, I think we would be more frustrated if, by discussing in public our strategy, it resulted in giving away a significant amount of northern cod to get a settlement. I think that we as Canadians must focus at this point on insuring not only that we have strategies but that we win. It strikes me that it will be a darn tough thing to do to win or, at least, to come out of this thing whole. I certainly do not think that tipping our hand early on as to what some of our strategies might be will help us to win. I understand your frustration, and I suspect that you have an idea or two that you might share with others. I think we are all frustrated by the events surrounding this matter. It has been going on for a number of years. I think it is fair to say that we as Canadians have been aware of this problem for longer than just the last month.

I am encouraged by two things. First, I sense that as a result of the efforts of this past month, there is a greater awareness amongst the people of Canada of how big the stakes are in this matter. In the end, as government, legislators or anybody knows, you can only move as fast as the people of Canada will allow you to move. The second encouraging thing is that I have seen in the last week a change in the attitude of the government toward these negotiations, and it is a much stronger attitude. Certainly, you have identified, quite rightly, that this will not be an easy process. The French are tough bargainers who will not be easy to deal with. I think that it will take all our wits not to give away anything in terms of our strategy. I hope that we will all agree that it is more important to win than to, perhaps, alleviate a bit of frustration by talking in public about what some strategies might be.

Senator MacEachen: I guess I agree with the necessity for prudence. However, I believe that we have also paid the price for excessive secrecy in conducting the most recent agreement. I think that this ought to be borne in mind. You may be in on the secrets, and I suppose that those who are do not find it a secret matter any more.

I would like to finish up on one point, and it is about the French and the Government of France. It is pretty clear that you have used very strong words about the French government. You have accused them of devastating the fishery and of having no interest in the stock. I do not say that you are alone in these accusations, because ministers of the government have used equally strong words. Mrs. Landry has said that they were threatening the livelihood of the residents of Newfoundland and were leading to the total depletion of the stocks. Of course, Mr. Crosbie has said that they do not give a continental for anybody. Today you said that they have plundered the stocks. That is a very hard, tough, but perhaps necessary comment.

Are we to conclude that despite all our efforts by this and previous governments to create a good relationship with France, they really do not care, that they are totally irresponsible internationally and have no concept of stewardship in terms of looking after this important resource? That is what the evidence is leading to. I hesitate to accept the notion that France is, totally, that bad. Is that the finding that this committee should make, that the French are internationally irresponsible in the fisheries? Obviously that is a rhetorical question, but it is a very important matter. The Prime Minister is energizing Canadian relations with France, and ministers are saying different things. Is there a consistent approach to this matter that we can take?

● (1720)

Mr. Cummings: Clearly, on a number of these things it is a matter of government policy, and I am not going to try to second guess ministers. In terms of specific fishery management, there is little doubt in my mind that France has little, if any, regard for the Canadian resource. We find it somewhat frustrating, through some of our contacts, to listen to participants in the French fishery bragging about how they have caught three times the amount of fish they were supposed to catch in Canadian waters and got away with it. They have no remorse, and, in fact, they think it is the sort of thing that one boasts about. Certainly, when we have announcements by France that they are going to fish at least four times over the quota set by Canada in 3Ps, all of the track record and the utterances would suggest—and this is a sad conclusion—that France has very little regard for us in this matter. That puts us in a very different position from which to negotiate and certainly is a mind-set which none of us would like to adopt, but which we have to adopt if we are to have any real chance of succeeding in the negotiations, which will be very tough. I do not think that we can appeal to fair play or anything else. We have to be tough.

Senator van Roggen: Mr. Cummings, I am having great difficulty, as the evidence comes forward, following what it is that we have done. I understand your comments about not tipping our hand on all of the strategies that we may have up our sleeves, bringing pressure to bear on the French and trying to get them to a reasonable conclusion of these negotiations. But, without tipping our hand as to what those strategies might be, I am unable to fathom what Canada received from the agreement that was signed. It does not appear to me that one solitary, single, tittle of anything has come to Canada from that agreement. As you say, they are going to continue to overfish as much as they like, and without regard for conservation, the disputed area, which they claim as their sovereign right. But why do we give them even one fish, or even one nickel's worth of regard or consideration, of any nature whatsoever, outside the disputed area until they agree to go to third party arbitration on that, which they have not done? The French have taken some extra stock—northern cod and other fish—since the agreement was signed on January 24, but what has come to Canada? I cannot see that we have got anything.

Mr. Cummings: First, I would want to ensure that I do not convey the impression that I am in on all of the secrets or have all of the inside track. I do not, and neither does Mr. Shaw. Certainly we are being consulted and are putting forward ideas, but at that point it is a matter of opinion and feeling as to whether we are being listened to, and we believe that we are being listened to. It is as simple as that.

In terms of what Canada has got out of the agreement, I would think that the witness who was here this morning—whom, unfortunately, you missed—namely, the Honourable Tom Siddon, would be the person you should ask. Mr. Shaw tells me that he will be back. I guess I await eagerly and with interest the answer to the question when you ask it of him.

Senator van Roggen: Thank you, Mr. Cummings. That is an adequate answer.

Senator Frith: Mr. Cummings, you said that you are now being consulted. Were you consulted before the agreement was signed?

Mr. Cummings: Yes; in particular, Mr. Shaw was a member of the consultation group that was consulted through the year 1986. As I guess was widely publicized, the consultative group, including Mr. Shaw, did not go to Paris at the end of January, and certainly, in terms of that particular weekend, we were not consulted, as indeed was no one else.

Senator Frith: So the agreement that you saw was a surprise.

Mr. Cummings: Well, the surprise was that there was an agreement signed without the consultative process happening—yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Cummings, were you surprised at the inclusion of the reference to some cod quota in 2J+3KL? You knew that the French were asking for that. Were you surprised that that was conceded by Canada?

Mr. Cummings: Yes, we were.

Senator MacEachen: You did not agree to it?

Mr. Cummings: I think it is fair to say that all participants in the fishing industry, whether it was ourselves, the unions in Newfoundland, the Government of Newfoundland or the Government of Nova Scotia, regard northern cod as a stock which we should be repatriating to Canada, as being the most single important stock in connection with the health of the Canadian fishery.

Senator Flynn: Would you exchange that for the cod in the disputed area?

Mr. Cummings: I am sorry, senator, I am not sure that I understand the question.

Senator Flynn: You say that the northern cod is the most precious stock that we have. But I thought that the stock that is in the disputed area was also very important. I thought the purpose of the agreement was to try to solve the problem in the disputed area.

Mr. Cummings: Both stocks are exceedingly important. To put it in perspective, the 3Ps stock and the stock on the south coast of Newfoundland feed the Burin Peninsula, Placentia Bay—basically the south coast of Newfoundland. Take that stock away and you devastate the south coast of Newfoundland. The 2J+3KL stock feeds all the way from the southeast tip of Newfoundland up to Labrador, and is another stock which is of importance to a major part of Newfoundland—and, indeed, is also the major feed stock for a significant part of the offshore, mainly in Newfoundland but some of it in Nova Scotia. I would like to regard both as being Canadian resources that we would like to see exploited by Canadians for the benefit of Canadians; and hopefully we would all agree that we would rather see neither stock exploited by any foreign country, including France, for the benefit of foreigners at the expense of Canadians.

Senator Flynn: In any event, there would be a quota so far as the northern cod is concerned. You would retain the control to that extent. You would not give quotas for northern cod that would be completely detrimental to Canada. The jurisdiction of Canada over this area is not disputed.

● (1730)

Mr. Cummings: That is right. One must realize that when one starts talking about giving away fish, one is really talking about giving away jobs, lifestyles and social structures. Just as we would not talk about giving away some of the wheat in Saskatchewan, or some of the oil in Alberta, or some of the trees in British Columbia or Quebec, I hope that we would not be giving away Canadian fish and that we would try to focus on keeping Canadian fish for the use of Canadians.

Senator Flynn: But if we have more fish than we can consume or dispose of ourselves—that has been done over the years for good and bad reasons.

Senator Doyle: Mr. Cummings, a brief question. A few moments ago you spoke of the need for having a strategy to win, and that that must be foremost in our minds as we go on from where we are at.

Would you know whether most of the players, if not all of the players, who have been involved in this process up to this time, believed that they had conceived a strategy to win?

Mr. Cummings: I honestly think you should ask them that question. As you know, we were not present nor did we help negotiate the deal. You should ask them whether they felt that was the most advantageous strategy possible for Canada.

I have no doubt that they were trying to do their best for Canada. As to whether it was most advantageous or not, you had Mr. Clark and Mr. Applebaum before the committee earlier today. They were the people who, in the end, called the shot on behalf of all of us.

Senator Roblin: Just a single point, Mr. Chairman. With reference to 2J+3KL and the quota that has been allotted to the European Economic Community, I believe that that quota falls in fairly soon, does it not?

Mr. Cummings: Yes, this is the last year for the 10,000 tonnes under the long-term agreement. Certainly our hope is that that quota will return to Canadians next year.

To put that into perspective, Senator Roblin, we as Canadians absorbed in 1987 a 10,000 tonne quota cut in that there was concern about the entire biomass there, that it was not growing as fast as had been hoped earlier.

It is certainly a stock that we as Canadians have the capacity to harvest more than we do and would like to harvest more than we do and have markets for more. It is a stock that is not surplus to Canadian needs. In any event, this is the last year of the European Economic Community LTA.

[Mr. Cummings.]

Senator Roblin: I agree that is not surplus to Canadian needs, but it is comforting to think that that supply will fall into our control at the end of this year.

I suppose that when one adds up the numbers as to the amount of cod that is being taken by Canadians and the amount of cod being taken by others, these are significant facts. When you add it to the change in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, you get a considerable accretion, I would think, in the amount of cod that Canadians can catch. I for one think that that is a good thing.

Senator De Bané: Mr. Cummings, how do you view the fish off the coast of Newfoundland? Do you think it should be harvested by fishermen from Newfoundland or by fishermen from all of Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Cummings: It is a fundamental question, Senator de Bané, as to whether or not fish stocks are administered on behalf of all Canadians or whether they are provincial. There is no doubt that if one deems them all to be provincial, some provinces will win and some provinces will lose.

For example, over the past 100 years the industry and the fishermen of Nova Scotia have tended to go farther afield. There are records dating back to the 1800s that indicate schooners sailed out of Nova Scotia and fished off the coast of Newfoundland and, indeed, off the coast of Labrador, and fished in waters that no other Canadians fished. Obviously, if there is 100 years or more of history, one would be loath to say that a resource off another province's coast could not be harvested by someone from another part of Canada.

Clearly, we have areas where all provinces wish they had more jurisdiction. The Gulf of St. Lawrence is one you would be familiar with and one where every province wishes it had more fish quota for their plants. That is a conundrum all ministers of fisheries faced, and I suppose a conundrum you faced when you were Minister of Fisheries, particularly with redfish.

As the president of a company that has plants located in all four Atlantic provinces, and one who would like to regard the resource as being a Canadian resource, I would think any move to contemplate making the resource a provincial rather than a Canadian resource would require a great deal of thought and should not be something that anyone should regard as being a simple matter.

Senator De Bané: I should like to add one point. Governments in Ottawa up until now have always resisted the idea that that resource should be provincial, not only because of the simple fact that fish swim—and perhaps Mr. Garon of Quebec did not understand that at the time—but because that resource is federal and should be harvested by all Canadians.

Granted there are some very special considerations that should be given to adjacent populations, but to say that only fishermen from New Brunswick should fish in a certain area and those from Nova Scotia or Newfoundland should fish in a certain area should be resisted.

If my memory serves me correctly, in 1980-81 there was a discussion of that topic and, except for Mr. Peckford and the Péquiste government of Quebec, all of the Atlantic provinces rejected the idea that it should be transferred to provincial jurisdiction.

Finally, I should like to tell you that I was quite disturbed by the statement you made a few minutes ago to the effect that we should ultimately have all countries out of our waters.

As you are aware, almost 20 countries have, since the extension of the jurisdiction in 1976, been granted fishing rights in our waters, and each, of course, for special consideration, some to induce participation in NAFO, others to have access to their markets, and others as a question of foreign aid.

So when you say we should tell them to get out of our waters, I think that that policy would be short-sighted as long as 90 to 95 per cent of the resource is caught by Canadians.

Mr. Cummings: I apologize, Senator De Bané, if I gave you the impression I said "all foreign fishermen out."

As you know, a fair amount of the foreign effort is in resources and species that Canadians do not want to catch, and our obligations under the Law of the Sea are that we should allow others to harvest fish that we do not want to harvest. Certainly fish such as grenadier and, up until this year, silver hake and others have been harvested totally by foreigners. Indeed, it is fair to say that we have gained greatly at NAFO through the support of such countries as Cuba and the Soviet Union. These countries have supported the Canadian position and have done so with respect to resources that, by and large, Canadians did not want to catch.

My specific reference was to northern cod where clearly there is a Canadian desire and a Canadian capacity. I have much greater difficulty with the concept of giving away to foreign interests northern cod which is clearly not surplus to the Canadian need.

Senator De Bané: I understand that a few years ago we offered Spain 5,000 tonnes of northern cod as an inducement to enter into NAFO.

Senator Hays: Mr. Cummings, my question arises out of what I heard this morning. One of the officials who accompanied the minister indicated that the Canadian quota for northern cod in the 2GH area was 8,000 tonnes and that, in the last year, only 2,000 tonnes had been utilized. From that I took the implication to be that there was no great impairment of the stock as a result. I am not sure whether the official intended me to take that implication, and I would appreciate your comment.

Mr. Cummings: The 2GH stock is certainly not a stock that we as Canadians fish vigorously. The reality is that the 3,000 tonnes that we gave away for 1987 to France more than likely will not be caught. Certainly, we should not regard that 3,000 tonnes as being a major concession. It is only one year, and as you have identified, it clearly is a stock of which we as Canadians will not harvest the quota.

Senator Adams: Mr. Cummings, my concern is mostly with the Labrador coast area. I have visited that area a few times and it seems to me that most of the locals fish for salmon and char in the area of 2GH. They also fish for cold water shrimp. Can you tell me whether the trawlers have been catching these other stocks, or have they been catching only codfish?

My concern lies mostly with the fact that some of the local people along the coast fish for their own consumption, although some do fish commercially. You indicated that because the areas of 2G and 2H were too far away from Newfoundland, that you were agreeable to giving those areas to the French. My concern is that the rights of the local fishermen should be preserved in this area.

Mr. Cummings: I must confess, senator, I was having difficulty hearing what you had to say. I think the question you asked was: Is there a concern for disturbing the inshore fishery with respect to salmon, shrimp and other fisheries through trying to harvest cod offshore, which the French will do. I can answer you with 99 per cent certainty that it should not have any impact. Certainly, salmon do not tend to congregate out on banks, as do codfish. I would assume, and I think the assumption is valid, that any fishing which would be done by France in 2GH, if they chose so to do, would be with full Canadian observer coverage, and certainly it is not too difficult to tell whether they are catching codfish or salmon, and basically we would not find salmon harvested as codfish. As I say, salmon are not bottom feeders, as are cod, so there would be very little risk.

As you say, senator, that is a very valuable shrimp area. Virtually all of that shrimp fishing is done by foreign vessels. There are some Canadian licences, but, basically, the shrimp fishing is done by foreign vessels and there is no by-catch of cod allowed.

The Chairman: On behalf of the committee, I would like to thank Mr. Cummings and Mr. Shaw for their very interesting presentation.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Before I leave the Chair, may I say to the members of the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure—in other words, the steering committee—that we will meet in room 263-S immediately after the Senate adjourns.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Canada-France Fisheries and Territorial Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 18, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT FROM CHAMBER

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I rise for the purpose of advising the Senate that I shall not be present in this chamber for the rest of this week. I have out-of-town meetings with ministers responsible for aboriginal constitutional affairs which I must attend.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

HISTORY OF FRENCH SHORE

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, yesterday or the day before, I circulated copies of a chapter of the history of Newfoundland and Labrador that deals with the French Shore. Today I find that a number of senators have not received copies. There are nine left. If any honourable senator would like to get a copy of this sometime during the afternoon, I would be glad to make it available.

BUDGET SPEECH

ACCOMMODATION FOR SENATORS IN COMMONS GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the Minister of Finance will deliver his budget speech in the other place at 4.30 this afternoon.

I wish to remind honourable senators that no one but senators will be admitted to the Senate gallery in the House of Commons on this occasion. This step is being taken for the purpose of providing accommodation in the gallery for as many senators as possible. This will ensure that honourable senators will not be excluded from the gallery on account of many of the places being occupied by relatives and friends of senators.

RADIO ACT

REPORT OF TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE
ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-3

Hon. Léopold Langlois, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 18, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-3, intituled: "An Act to amend the Radio Act", has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, 30th October, 1986, examined the said subject-matter and now reports that it recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS
Chairman

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-38

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—PROBLEMS OF SHARED JURISDICTION

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, my natural modesty prevents me from quoting myself—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator LeBlanc: —but some days ago, in the course of my remarks, I referred to “creeping jurisdiction” as the background to some of the speeches and questions that were being raised in connection with the Canada-France fisheries treaty. I now have a Canadian Press despatch from St. John’s, which says:

Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford may be easing his campaign against Ottawa now that he has a promise that shared jurisdiction for fisheries will be on the next constitutional agenda.

There is then a direct quote from Mr. Peckford:

“We’ve been at this now a long time,” he said. “If we can now start talking seriously about some joint management and shared jurisdiction over the fishery, it would allay a lot of fears that we have for the future of the resource.”

May I ask the Leader of the Government, who is the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations, whether the Prime Minister has given a promise that the issue of shared jurisdiction over fisheries will be raised at the next conference; and, if so, will the Senate be given a chance to debate it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators. The fact of the matter is that the ten premiers agreed in Edmonton last August that their first constitutional priority was to have Quebec’s assent to a constitutional accord. So the first round will be a Quebec round.

At the same time, the premiers agreed—and it was later reiterated at the First Ministers’s Conference in Vancouver in November—that other constitutional proposals would be put off until the second round of negotiations; and, as a matter of fact, fisheries was among the issues specifically mentioned in the Edmonton declaration as an agenda item for the second round. That is what Mr. Crosbie had in mind.

Senator Frith: Mr. Crosbie?

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Senator Murray: My reference to Mr. Crosbie was in connection with some statements that he made in the course of, I believe, a radio or television interview in Newfoundland the other day.

Senator Frith: I thought that Senator LeBlanc was quoting Mr. Peckford.

Senator LeBlanc: If the reports are accurate—and, from what the Leader of the Government has said, they appear to be—I would suggest that an invitation be issued to the premiers of the other provinces, for whom the problem of shared jurisdiction may raise very substantive questions, to appear before the committee which is now sitting.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have tried to describe the schedule of events as we foresee them. We hope that it will be possible to get Quebec’s signature to a constitutional accord. Following that, there will be a second round of constitutional negotiations. Some provinces want to discuss Senate reform; others may want to discuss the entrenchment of private property rights; some may want to discuss telecommunications; and at least one province wants to discuss fish.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to the question asked by Senator LeBlanc. When the premiers agreed on what would be on the table in the second round, was the general item “Fisheries” or “Shared jurisdiction”?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have the Edmonton declaration in front of me. I find that I have the Vancouver declaration in front of me, the final paragraph of which reads:

During the coming months first ministers hope to conclude an agreement that will enable Quebec to become again a full partner in the Canadian federation and to undertake later another stage in constitutional reform on matters that will include, among other items, Senate reform, fisheries, property rights, et cetera.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, as I understand what has now been stated by the Leader of the Government, no new commitment has been made to the Premier of Newfoundland with regard either to the fisheries question generally or to the matter of shared jurisdiction. I am asking if that is correct, that no new commitment has been made, let us say, since January 1. The reason I am asking that question is that the news report to which Senator LeBlanc referred says that Mr. Peckford said yesterday that he has won “a major victory.” Then the article quotes the premier:

“We’ve been at this now a long time,” he said. “If we can now start talking seriously about some joint management and shared jurisdiction over the fishery, it would allay a lot of fears that we have for the future of the resource.”

The implication of the quotation is that some new commitment has been made to the Premier of Newfoundland. The answer given earlier by the Leader of the Government was that, indeed, the discussion that is to take place on the general topic of the fisheries is one that has been set up for quite a long time.

My question is: Is there any new commitment which would justify Mr. Peckford's saying yesterday that he had won a major victory?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there is no new commitment of the kind to which the honourable senator refers. What gave rise to that article was an interview that the Minister of Transport gave, I believe, on radio or television in Newfoundland. I saw the transcript of that interview, and the Minister of Transport was asked about the possibility of some constitutional negotiation covering fisheries and jurisdiction. Mr. Crosbie indicated his complete understanding of Newfoundland's position on this matter, even while acknowledging the problems this posed for a number of other provinces, including Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and others, and he went on to say that the matter would be on the table at the next round of constitutional negotiations. He meant to say the second round, the round immediately following the Quebec round.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, are we to understand from the Leader of the Government's reference to Nova Scotia that the Premier of Nova Scotia is in possession of exactly the same information with regard to the question of jurisdiction of fisheries as is the Premier of Newfoundland?

Senator Murray: As far as we are concerned, the answer to that question is emphatically in the affirmative. The position of the government on the matter of any discussions about fisheries in a constitutional sense is contained in the communiqué from the annual conference of First Ministers in Vancouver in November. The reference by Mr. Crosbie to Nova Scotia was simply, if I recall, by way of acknowledging the problems Newfoundland's constitutional proposals would cause to that province. Perhaps I should obtain a transcript of the relevant portion of Mr. Crosbie's interview and bring it into the Senate, and, in the meantime, send a copy to my honourable friend.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I must tell him that I think he has skated around this problem very easily. I would like to put a direct question to him. Will he, or can he, inform the Senate today, now, whether, in fact, the Government of Canada favours shared jurisdiction over fisheries in this country?

• (1410)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the matter will be discussed in the second round of constitutional negotiations. I do not propose to expatiate upon constitutional matters in the course of Question Period.

Hon. Michael Kirby: I have a supplementary for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is also the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. In responding to both Senator Thériault and Senator LeBlanc, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations has twice talked about the second round. In so doing, he certainly implied in his answer to Senator LeBlanc that no issues of interest to provinces other than the Province of Quebec would be discussed until a first round was completed. My question is: Does a first round constitute one meeting, or, in fact, is the minister saying that no other constitutional issue of interest to any other province will be discussed until an agreement has actually been concluded with the Province of Quebec?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the agreement that the provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada have is that a first round would attempt to obtain Quebec's signature to a constitutional accord, and that discussions during that first round would be limited to the five conditions put forward by Quebec for its assent to the constitutional accord. We hope and expect—and I remain optimistic about this—that the first round will succeed, and then we will proceed, as agreed, to the discussion of other constitutional proposals.

Senator Kirby: I have a further supplementary, honourable senators. The minister is doing an excellent job of avoiding the issue. The question was: What precisely constitutes the first round? Would he define whether the first round is a series of meetings stretched over a decade, or is the first round one meeting? What exactly does the minister mean when he uses the phrase "a first round"? Those are his words.

Senator Murray: I hope that it would not take a series of meetings over a decade. I hope that it would take, at most, a meeting or two of First Ministers. Of course, if there were agreement on various constitutional proposals, the various governments would then have to lay those proposals before their legislatures and have them passed. Meanwhile, work would be going forward on a second round.

I may say, without anticipating the nature of the possible accord, a number of provinces have indicated an interest in entrenching in the Constitution during the first round the obligation to hold the second round, and perhaps even to list the agenda items. My friend will recall that this was done in the case of the aboriginal constitutional negotiations that are now going on.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I have a supplementary for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. When the leader talks about the first round, does the first round consist of many rounds, like a boxing match? Further, does the agenda consist of many items on the several rounds?

In the Globe and Mail of February 18—

Senator Flynn: What does that prove?

Senator Bonnell: I am addressing my question to the government leader and not to anyone else over there.

Senator Flynn: We are here just the same, and we have to listen to you.

Senator Bonnell: Then you listen and keep your mouth—you know what!

Senator Flynn: I am sure I do that as often as you do.

Senator Bonnell: Premier Peckford has been promised that shared jurisdiction for fisheries will be on the next constitutional agenda. If Premier Peckford has been promised that—Senator Barootes: He said he was promised that?

Senator Bonnell: That is what the Globe and Mail said.

If that promise has been made to Premier Peckford, as is stated by the Globe and Mail, does that mean the first round's agenda will include many items?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the first round will concentrate on the five conditions put forward by Quebec for its assent to a constitutional accord.

Premier Peckford, nine other premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada agreed in November that fisheries would be one item on the agenda in a subsequent round of discussions on constitutional questions.

Senator Bonnell: In other words, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is saying that the article in the Globe and Mail of February 18, that says that Premier Peckford was promised that, is not accurate, and that the question of jurisdiction over fisheries will not be on the agenda for that first meeting.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have not seen the article to which the honourable senator has referred, so I cannot comment on it.

Senator Flynn: It would not be the first time the Globe and Mail has lied.

Senator Frith: Nor the first time that the Conservatives have lied.

Senator Flynn: That's a different story!

Senator Frith: Yes, it sure is.

Senator Flynn: I will challenge you and the Liberal Party on that score any time.

Senator Frith: Good idea!

Senator Flynn: So shut up!

Senator Frith: We accept your challenge.

Senator Flynn: We will meet you anywhere, any time.

Senator Frith: Challenge accepted!

Senator LeBlanc: Honourable senators, given that the Minister of Transport has become a member of the quartet dealing with the fisheries issue, after the Department of External Affairs, the PMO and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans have made a mess of it, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if we can expect letters giving shared jurisdiction to the ministers responsible for fisheries representing Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and New Brunswick, because that is no less important than the treaty with France?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I replied to a similar question asked by Senator Bonnell the other day by saying that the letter which the Prime Minister sent to the Minister of Transport was perfectly proper and understandable, given the circumstances, and was certainly not intended to be exclusive.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question.

[Senator Barootes.]

Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate serious when he says that he is not prepared to tell the Senate at this time whether the Government of Canada is prepared to discuss the question of shared jurisdiction over fisheries with the provinces?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Government of Canada is aware of the interest of at least one province in discussing that matter in the second round of constitutional negotiations.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, if the Government of Canada is prepared to discuss the question of shared jurisdiction with at least one province of Canada, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us where the Government of Canada stands on the question of shared jurisdiction over fisheries with the provinces?

Senator Flynn: How naive can you be!

Senator Murray: There is a great deal of history associated with this subject, as the honourable senator may know. Again, I tell the honourable senator that I am not about to conduct the negotiations on the floor of the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Would you discuss the matter in Committee of the Whole?

Senator Frith: Are you interested in offers?

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, the Government of Canada has just expended public moneys so that the Minister of Transport can tell the people of Newfoundland that the Government of Canada is willing to share jurisdiction over fisheries. Nevertheless, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is telling honourable senators that he is not prepared to discuss the matter in the Senate.

Senator Murray: I do not know what my friend is talking about in terms of the expenditure of public moneys.

I have now obtained a copy of the transcript of the broadcast made on February 17 by Mr. Crosbie. I think the relevant passage is as follows:

Q. Mr. Minister, one of the things that the Province of Newfoundland, I think, has always wanted, is greater control over its primary natural resource, the fishery. Is there any consideration being given at the cabinet level to a constitutional amendment giving Newfoundland that jurisdiction?

● (1420)

It went on:

Mr. Crosbie: No, there isn't, that is not under active consideration. Now the province made the point, as you know, it feels that it should have jurisdiction or part jurisdiction over the fishery. I think there's a strong argument for that, and because of the importance of the fishery, to . . . it's a resource base here in Newfoundland. But there are difficulties, you know, where are you going to draw the boundary lines? There are a lot of conflicting interests between provinces. Nova Scotia, for example, doesn't agree that say the northern cod, you know, is only for Newfoundland, they believe it's for Canadian fishermen. So you've got problems between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick and Quebec, conflicting interests in the fisheries. So, is it possible to give part jurisdiction over the fishery itself?

Then he goes on to talk about the fish swimming in the water and not staying in any particular spot. Then he states:

... So there are difficulties and we're certainly prepared to discuss them with Newfoundland around a constitutional negotiation.

As I told the Senate, he was referring to the second round of the constitutional discussions, which would take place after Quebec was on board.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be kind enough to table the document that he is reading from?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I hesitate to pursue this matter any further, but, because it is of such importance on the federal-provincial side, and because the honourable senator is responsible for that, I would like to have some clarification.

Despite what he has just read to us, the statement by Mr. Crosbie, we have, nevertheless, the premier of a province saying that he has won a major victory. Yet, from what the minister tells us, there has been no new statement.

Can we be assured that there have been no private assurances given to Premier Peckford that would allow him to say that he has won a major victory?

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senators. Well, I am not responsible for what Mr. Peckford may describe as "a major victory." The answer, which I have already given to the house, is that no new commitments have been made to Newfoundland on this matter.

Senator MacEachen: Well, that is clear.

AGRICULTURE

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO FORD MOTOR COMPANY—REQUEST FOR COMPARABLE TREATMENT FOR FARMERS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Could he inform the Senate why the Government of Canada has apparently provided a loan of $45.5 million, interest free, to the Ford Motor Company of Canada, in connection with their purchase of Versatile Corporation in Winnipeg, without having had any request—as I read the article—from the company?

As a westerner and as a Canadian, I am naturally pleased that arrangements have been made that are likely to lead to continuing production in that plant and, let us hope, increased production. But what is the reason for making this loan available so easily when it has not been requested? Could he also tell us the terms of such a loan?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I was informed just before coming into the chamber that the president of the company is putting out a statement denying that he ever said any such thing.

Senator Argue: Well, then, can the minister tell us if there has been a loan made, and, if so, what are the terms of the loan? Are those terms 10 per cent interest for a period of ten years, with the interest on the $45.5 million being forgiven, if Versatile conducts that quantity of research at the plant, or in Canada, or whatever?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have that information in front of me. I will have to obtain the information on the details and bring it into the Senate.

Senator Argue: While the minister is doing that, could he state if what has been made available, apparently, to the Ford Motor Company—namely, 10-per-cent money with certain forgiveness for research—is also available to the farmers who are expected to purchase the Versatile tractors? Is this a program that is available only for big business, needed or not needed, or is it something that is also, in general terms and in general principle, available to hard-pressed farmers who are looking for a way out for their industry, which is in the same kind of difficult circumstances for the same reason as Versatile?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is constructing a question on the basis of hypotheses that I am not in a position to comment on at the moment. I would have thought, however, that in discussing interest rates he would acknowledge the very steep decline in interest rates since this government took office.

Senator Argue: Then, I think my question is of much greater significance. Is the government prepared to take steps to see that these lower interest rates are passed on to the agricultural producers so they can enjoy the same kind of interest rates as those enjoyed by the Ford Motor Company?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator asked that kind of question yesterday in connection with the Farm Credit Corporation. I will try to obtain the information he is seeking.

Senator Argue: I believe the answer is very clear, that there is no such money available to the farmers. If you could tell me where there is 10-per-cent money available, I would be very pleased to have that information, and so would about 300,000 farmers who are in very difficult circumstances.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked a series of questions of the Leader of the Government in the Senate respecting the sale of Teleglobe Canada. I noted that he seemed to be somewhat agitated about some of my questions, so I waited until today to read very carefully not only my questions but his replies.

Having done that, unfortunately it seems apparent that there is an investigation under way by the stock exchanges both in Montreal and in Toronto and that the Minister of State for Privatization has offered full cooperation in that investigation. I understand all of that.

However, yesterday the Leader of the Government said:

I have no information to suggest that another investigation into any alleged or possible leaks from the government is taking place. Nor am I aware that one is warranted.

It seems to me that there is already a case, because both stock exchanges believed there were unusual trading patterns sufficient to warrant their launching an investigation. I tried to point out to the Leader of the Government that those stock exchanges do not have the competence to extend their investigation into a government department or into the Canada Development Investment Corporation to establish whether or not there was a leak that the recommendation was to be that the Memotec bid be accepted.

The question I tried to put to the Leader of the Government yesterday is very simple. It is: Is there an investigation going on within the government and its crown corporation, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, which held Telelobe Canada until it was offered for sale, to find out whether or not there was a leak, so that the people whom the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges are investigating might have known the situation in advance of the announcement?

If there is no investigation under way, I would put it to the minister that the department simply investigating itself is not a satisfactory situation. I want to know whether an investigation has been launched by someone who is independent of the personnel in that department to find out whether there was a leak.

● (1430)

The honourable senator yesterday referred to an RCMP investigation. Under the Canada Business Corporations Act, the director has all of the authority he needs plus an inspection staff to conduct this investigation in the federal jurisdiction, wherever it leads. I may add to that that the Minister of State, Ms. McDougall, and her officials are making available to the Ontario and Quebec Securities Commissions all of the information they have as to the process, what meetings were held, when they were held, who attended and all other relevant details. This matter is going to end up very thoroughly investigated.

Senator Olson: I gather that the Leader of the Government has changed his mind since yesterday, when he said:

I have no information to suggest that another investigation into any alleged or possible leaks from the government is taking place. Nor am I aware that one is warranted.

I take from what he just said that these other bodies are investigating the matter and that their competence will extend to the point where they can discover whether someone in the minister's department—be he bureaucrat or otherwise—or someone in the Canada Development Investment Corporation might have passed on to people who were capable of trading in the stock exchange the information that Memotec's bid was going to be accepted.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what I said yesterday was correct. We have had no indication that there was a leak, but, if there is an indication of something of that kind, it will be followed up. I can speak in particular of the director under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The director will carry on the investigation, wherever it leads.

Perhaps my friend will remember the investigations that took place at the time Petro-Canada took over Petrofina. Very exhaustive investigations into that matter took place at several levels, and this is the same kind of painstaking operation.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am satisfied if that is going on, but I did have a little difficulty with the government leader's statement to the effect that he was not aware that an investigation into the matter of trying to find a leak was warranted. Is he now saying that he believes the investigations under way—whether there be one or several—will be sufficiently extensive to ensure that the people who did this unusual trading on the stock exchange did not discover something from the Department of the Minister of State for Privatization or the Canada Development Investment Corporation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe I said—if not, I will take the occasion to do so now—that to the best of my knowledge there is no indication whatsoever that there was any such leak of the kind suggested by the honourable senator. In the course of the investigation, if the director finds any indication that there was such a leak, he will, of course, pursue it, wherever it leads. I wish that the honourable senator would be a little more careful about identifying areas where he thinks some culprits might be lying on the basis, as far as we have been told here, of no evidence whatever.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I will not pursue this further today except to say that I would like to tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that I have another responsibility, which is to cross-examine the government when there appears to be the possibility of a situation that gives someone unfair and undue advantage. I might also say that I did not appreciate his comment yesterday when he told me that I ought to keep quiet, or that my comments should be discounted 100 per cent. I remember that when he was on this side of the chamber, he pursued his public responsibility rather diligently.

Senator Flynn: And in a more effective way.

Senator Olson: No, it was not any more effective.

Senator Flynn: It was more effective and more objective.

Senator Olson: Even the former Leader of the Government in the Senate used to pursue his responsibilities.

Senator Flynn: I hope that I did not do it like you do.

Senator Frith: You did not; you were not nearly as good!

SHIPBUILDING

CLASS 8 ICEBREAKER—DESIGN—CANADIAN ICEBREAKING TECHNOLOGY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the Polar class 8 icebreaker which has been under consideration by the government of this country since at least September 10, when the commitment was made by the government to build it. In the course of long deliberations on this matter, in an announcement from the office of the Minister of Transport, it was noted that at least two of the proposals contain unique Canadian icebreaking technology developed over many years with federal government assistance. Can the minister tell us whether the government is committed to the use of that unique Canadian icebreaking technology that was developed with the government's financial assistance?

CLASS 8 ICEBREAKER—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION IN VANCOUVER SHIPYARDS

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would the government leader advise the Senate when the announcement will be made that this icebreaker will indeed be built in the Vancouver shipyards? I believe that members of his party in Vancouver promised that such an announcement would be made in early January.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: When the Leader of the Government is taking as notice my question about the Canadian technology, would he add to that another concern, which is that it appears that companies in Sweden and elsewhere, through licensing agreements, are using the Canadian technology in their advanced design before it is being used in Canada? This is my understanding of the matter. In finding out the exact yes or no answer on the use of Canadian technology, I would be grateful if the government leader could elaborate on this question of the payback, as it were, on investment in Canadian technology on icebreaking methods.

Senator Murray: I will ask for a considered reply from the responsible minister.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WEST BANK INDIAN BAND—LEGAL COSTS OF INQUIRY

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have been hoping to get some straight answers to my question from other sources, but I have not been able to do so. Since the minister will not be present in the chamber tomorrow, I would like to raise the question with him. He may know that the Government of Canada has caused an inquiry under the Inquiries Act into certain activities of the West Bank Indian band. The legal costs of the employees of the Government of Canada are being covered, and quite properly so, but the legal costs of the band council and former councillors and band members are not being covered. I think that is grossly unfair and could lead to a gross miscarriage of justice. The commissioner for the inquiry also recommended that the legal costs of band council members and former council members should be covered; but up until now that has not been done.

● (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry that I do not have any information on that; but I will accept the honourable senator's question as being a representation, and I will undertake to convey it to my colleague, Mr. McKnight.

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has washed its hands of this matter. It has said that it did not set up the inquiry, that it was a cabinet decision, quite outside the responsibility of the Department of Indian Affairs. That is the area that I have been pursuing, and I have been pursuing it through the Privy Council Office. However, I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Government could get in on the trail.

Senator Murray: I will do so.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, since 1984 I have been making inquiries of federal government spokesmen in the Senate concerning the federal government's program to help stem the relentless and increasing incidence of the disease called AIDS. In view of the fact that the incidence of the disease has risen in Canada, as in other countries, proving that the federal government's efforts so far have been ineffective, I would like to inquire of the Leader of the Government about any new measures that the federal government has taken recently, or is about to take, in order to stop the spread of this dreadful and fatal disease.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers, one of which is reasonably short and the other rather lengthy.

TRANSPORT

REGINA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—CONSTRUCTION OF HOTEL—LOCAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 4 by the Honourable Senator Argue regarding Regina International Airport—Construction of Hotel—Local Consultation. Since Senator Argue is not in the chamber, perhaps the answer can be taken as read and included in the Debates of the Senate for today.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

For the past several years a hotel has been identified at Regina in their Airport Land Use Plan and more recently in the Regina Airport Master Plan which was released for public consultation in early 1986. In the summer of 1986, the public and interested city and provincial officials were invited to review and discuss the Master Plan. Although some concern was expressed, the principle of locating a hotel at the airport was approved by the City of Regina.

Prior to this, a meeting was held in 1985 with the Regina and Saskatchewan Hotel Association, Chamber of Commerce, Tourism, Economic Development and officials from the City of Regina to discuss the prospects of an airport hotel and to enlist their support.

Another meeting was held on January 28, 1986, to discuss Transport Canada's proposal for the development of a hotel on airport property. Local hotel operators, developers and city officials attended this meeting.

From the foregoing, it can be seen that ongoing consultation has taken place.

In recent years, parties have expressed interest in developing a hotel at the airport.

[Senator Haidasz.]

On January 30, 1987, the Minister of Transport announced a simultaneous call for tenders to lease land for the construction and operation of major hotels at five airports across Canada. These five airports are Halifax, Montreal (Dorval), Ottawa, Regina, and Vancouver.

It is not Transport Canada's policy to direct the location of hotels off airport property. With respect to any proposed airport hotels on Transport Canada property, it is policy that where interest has been expressed by private entrepreneurs, the public tender process is used as the fairest and most equitable course of action. This action is in keeping with Transport Canada's commercial development plans for all airports.

The opportunity available at Regina Airport will be based on market interest and support, and the role of Transport Canada is only to accommodate such demand as this tender call will demonstrate.

GRAIN

GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—EXCLUSION OF MUSTARD SEED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 10, 1987 by Senator Olson regarding Grain—Grain Stabilization Fund—Exclusion of Mustard Seed. If Senator Olson agrees, the answer can also be taken as read and printed in Debates of the Senate for today.

Senator Olson: That is acceptable.

(The answer follows:)

The Special Canadian Grains Program was designed to assist those grain and oilseed producers who have been most directly and seriously affected by the current United States-European Community trade war.

In formulating the program, the government examined trade in a number of commodities, including special crops. However, in the case of these crops, direct relationships to American or European subsidies could not be identified. For many special crops, it appears normal supply-and-demand forces were largely responsible for price declines. For this reason, these commodities were excluded from the Program.

The Western Advisory Committee, referred to by Senator Olson, was announced on February 13th by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the steering committee has not yet determined which witnesses will be available. The committee requires time to meet. When I have concluded my comments, we may ask that Order No. 3 stand until the end of today's proceedings; and we might then seek leave to adjourn to the call of the bell—

Senator Frith: For approximately how long?

Senator Nurgitz: Senator MacEachen indicated that an hour might be more appropriate than half an hour. We would give the steering committee whatever time it required. I should point out to honourable senators that if no witness is available for tomorrow, we may be able to conclude our sittings for the week later this afternoon, and we would resume whenever witnesses were available.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed that Order No. 3 stand until later this day?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we may not need an hour. We may complete our work in less time.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, am I to gather that we will not be sitting tomorrow?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): We will be sitting tomorrow in Committee of the Whole, if witnesses are available; and in order to go into Committee of the Whole, the Senate has to sit.

Senator Everett: But if the Committee of the Whole does not sit—

Senator Nurgitz: Then indications are that the Senate will not sit tomorrow.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted, I would like to suggest that at the conclusion of today's business the Senate adjourn during pleasure and permit the Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures to finalize the list of witnesses and report to the house when we meet again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed that Order No. 3 stand until later this day, and that we proceed with the rest of the Orders of the Day, following which we will adjourn during pleasure, to the call of the bell?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

FISHERIES

INTERIM REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the Interim Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, tabled in the Senate on 2nd October, 1986.—
(Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators have had the report of the committee for some time, and it is not my intention to go through the report in detail. However, I want to thank the members of the committee for having agreed in the first instance, when the committee was established, to proceed as a first step with the study of the freshwater fishery. Admittedly, this is not the most important fishery in Canada. In terms of volume and employment, it is obviously much smaller than either the Pacific coast or the most important one of all, which has been taking up some of the Senate's time recently, namely, the east coast fishery. Nevertheless, that particular fishery in its region is of major importance, because it affects the native population in particular, and, in those areas where the freshwater fishery is carried on, it has a very important economic impact because frequently it is the only source of employment available.

Therefore I very much appreciate that the committee has proceeded with this study. Three facts arose from the study, first, that there is an immense potential in the fishing industry; second, that the markets exist; and, third, that for health reasons more people are turning toward fish rather than to other foods. Whether it be from a general health or diet standpoint, there is an immense potential. Yet frequently, as Canadians, we are not taking advantage of that potential.

Coming from a region where freshwater fishing is carried on, I find it disappointing that frequently we are unable to obtain freshwater fish in the restaurants of our region, and insufficient emphasis is placed on the proper marketing and selling of fish within Canada. I believe that we are missing golden opportunities.

As Canadians, there is much more that we can do; yet we do not seem to get around to doing it. From the standpoint of tourism, we are again missing the boat. Why is it that Canadian restaurants are not featuring Canadian fish? I can tell honourable senators that when the committee travelled, this discovery was a disappointment to us. We went right through the regions of western Canada where the fish are caught. We went to Hay River in the Northwest Territories, to Lac la Biche in Alberta, to Lac le Ronge in Saskatchewan, and to Thompson, Ashern and Winnipeg, in Manitoba. Here we were, a fisheries committee of the Senate holding a number of meetings. Obviously, we had to eat in restaurants at various times. We held some meetings where we had dinner with the local people, and would you believe that we were not served fish? We were served turkey, roast beef, sandwiches of various sorts, but not fish. It seems to me to be so frequently the case in Canada that when we should be able to capitalize on our assets, we do not do so. I find it maddening when I go to restaurants in Winnipeg and cannot find on the menus the local freshwater fish, particularly when we have the head office of the Freshwater Fish Corporation right there within the boundaries of the city of Winnipeg.

• (1450)

Senator Perrault: That is a good point.

Senator Molgat: I hope that our report will lead to some move to mobilize some of our people. It has to be a joint effort involving the departments of fisheries, tourism and the departments concerned with industry and commerce. There is a great opportunity there, if we want to capitalize on it. I hope that our report will help to move things along. I know that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has responded to the report of the committee. The minister has sent a comprehensive and prompt reply for which I thank him very much. We have that response on hand. However, it is not my intention to deal with it. I believe that the chairman of the committee will be speaking in this debate, and I shall leave that to him. Again, this report exemplifies the type of work that the Senate can do in relation to various issues in this country.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Molgat, after his speech is printed in Hansard, to send copies to the people in the press who wrote that we could not get members to sit on the committee because we were not going south, and point out to them that actually nine or ten members of the committee went to places such as Hay River, Lac La Ronge, Lac La Biche, Thomson, Ashern and Winnipeg.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no honourable senator wishes to speak now, this inquiry is considered to have been debated.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move that we now adjourn to the call of the bell, which we can expect within an hour or so.

Before doing so, might I remind honourable senators that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is meeting at 3.30 p.m., and Senator Neiman reminds members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee that that committee will commence its sitting shortly as well in order to use up the time during this brief recess.

Senator Frith: They should have leave to do so.

Senator Nurgitz: I trust that, along with this motion I am introducing now, leave will be granted for that committee to sit as well.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 3:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, your Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures has the honour to report to the Committee of the Whole.

Your Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedures, known as the steering committee, wishes to report that a number of additional witnesses, including the Premier of Newfoundland, have accepted an invitation to appear before the Committee of the Whole.

Your committee recommends that the Committee of the Whole resume its work on March 10.

We propose that the committee hear the following witnesses:

The Honourable Thomas Edward Siddon, P.C., or a ministerial colleague, accompanied by Mr. Clark and Mr. Applebaum;

The Honourable Brian Peckford, Premier of Newfoundland; Mr. Vincent MacLean, M.L.A., Leader of the Opposition in Nova Scotia;

A representative of Premier Bourassa;

Mr. J. Godin;

His Excellency Lucien Bouchard, the Canadian Ambassador to France.

Your committee is awaiting final decisions from other possible witnesses.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to agree to these suggestions?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again on March 10.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, since March 10 falls on a Tuesday, I wonder about the time at which the Committee of the Whole will sit, because there are other committees sitting that day.

Senator Frith: I imagine that the Committee of the Whole will sit whenever the Senate reaches that order on the order paper. The Senate will sit at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and will eventually come to this order, at which time it will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the France-Canada Fisheries and Territorial Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Senator Frith: At the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., that the committee have leave to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, before the motion is voted on, I should like to put a question. The problem is this: The Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries is scheduled to have meetings on March 10, 11 and 12, and those meetings will be held outside of Ottawa. Some of us are concerned about being here, but our attendance would depend, presumably, upon which witnesses were going to appear. I have heard the list of witnesses, but we cannot hear them all on the same day. Could we have some idea of who might be here on the tenth, who might be here on the eleventh and who might be here on the twelfth? If so, some of us might adjust our schedules.

Senator Bélisle: We would like to oblige the honourable senator, but it is nearly an impossibility to give him that precise information. We are still in communication with the witnesses I have mentioned. Because the negotiation of the time and the date will be done by the Clerk Assistant, I do not think that we can be more precise.

Senator Molgat: I presume that next week the Senate will not be sitting. In view of that fact, I would ask that our offices be informed as quickly as possible, once the committee has even a tentative schedule, so that we can make our plans.

Senator Bélisle: I think that is a very good suggestion. As soon as the Clerk Assistant has some confirmation of who will appear and when, we will ask him to communicate with the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 10th March, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 10, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 10, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ESTONIA

SIXTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, February 24 was Estonian Independence Day. In speaking to this matter, I believe my remarks will receive the unanimous support of the Senate, because they are made in recognition of the sixty-ninth anniversary of Estonian independence, and in gratitude to the thousands of Canadians of Estonian origin for the valuable contribution which they have made to the greater good of Canada, and in support of their continuing efforts to achieve freedom for their homeland.

As you know, Estonia is one of those Baltic nations that became a victim of the Hitler-Stalin Nazi-Communist alliance of 1939-1941. The principles of both totalitarian systems were, of course, the same; so it is no wonder that the people of Estonia are now the victims of a Soviet campaign to deprive them of their national independence through directives against the Estonian language and culture.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

UNION OR ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I give notice, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, that on Thursday next, March 12, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada; the support for such action amongst Turks and Caicos Islanders and Canadians; and whether any of the following steps might be usefully taken prior to a formal union or association:

(1) adoption of a common currency;

(2) designation of Canada's Governor General as the Queen's representative for the islands;

(3) a closer economic association between the two countries;

(4) any change in procedures to our mutual advantage, that would assist the entry of Canadians to the Islands, and of Islanders to Canada; and

(5) provision of efficient direct air service between the two countries.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Estimates for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is there some significance to be attached to the use of the words "the expenditures set out in the estimates"? Are the estimates not automatically referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance?

Senator Doody: Not to my knowledge. My recollection is that we have referred them each year since I have been here, but I am subject to correction.

Senator Frith: Well, we can be doubly sure.

Senator Doody: We can look into the matter later, but in the meantime they have been referred.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF REPLACEMENT FOR THE LATE MR. JUSTICE CHOUINARD

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether Quebec is being consulted with regard to the filling of the vacancy in the Supreme Court of Canada caused by the untimely and unfortunate death of Mr. Justice Chouinard and, if so, what form that consultation will take. If there is such consultation, will the appointment be subject to Quebec government approval?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the answer to the last part of the question is in the negative. We do not propose to attempt to change the Constitution or set a constitutional precedent on the basis of this appointment. With regard to the earlier part of the question, I can only say that I have received some representations on this matter from the Honourable Gil Remillard, the Quebec minister, and that I am confident that there will be some discussions between the appropriate ministers in Ottawa and Quebec City before any appointment is announced.

Senator Frith: That, then, takes care of the first and third parts of the question. As to the second part, do I take it that we will be advised as to the particular form these consultations will take? As I understand the answer given by the Leader of the Government, he is confident that there will be such consultations. Can he tell us in any more detail whether consultations will take place between the Prime Minister and the Premier, between the federal and provincial justice departments, or between his department and the analogous one in the province of Quebec? What form will those consultations take?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, they could take the form of one or several telephone conversations. The consultation could take place either between the Minister of Justice in Ottawa and his Quebec counterpart or the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Quebec. It could take place at either or both levels, but I am confident that there will be some discussions on this matter, if there have not been already, between the appropriate ministers here and those in Quebec.

Senator Frith: I take it from what the government leader has said that the form of communication will be by telephone.

Senator Murray: It could be by telephone or it could be in the course of a personal meeting. Not infrequently, ministers meet or are in touch with each other and First Ministers meet or are in touch with each other. Continuing consultations and discussions go on between ministers of the federal and provincial governments on a range of subjects. As I say, I am sure that there will be some discussions on this matter if, indeed, those discussions have not already taken place. I have already had that undertaking from the federal Minister of Justice, who told me some time ago that he intended to speak to Mr. Marx about the matter.

Senator Frith: But should we infer from the answers given that the form will be conversational rather than documentary? The government leader seems to be avoiding reference to documentary exchanges and speaks of telephone conversations and meetings. I have no quarrel with that. I simply want to understand whether there is some connection between that answer and the answer to the first part of the question; namely, that in the view of the government, documentary or more formal exchanges might create a constitutional precedent.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think I can cover the matter by saying that the discussions are quite informal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CLOSING OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI, FINLAND—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I refer to the plan to close the Canadian embassy in Finland. I hope that the government will review that decision and will take into account the fact that there is a significant segment of the Canadian population that has Finland as its homeland, either directly or ancestrally. Finland is also, in some respects, the most northerly country in the world, and we have much to share with the Finnish people in terms of the management of resources, technology and other matters of common concern.

I believe that the people of Finland have been hurt by the suggestion that Canada proposes to close its embassy in that country. Those honourable senators who are familiar with the history of Finland will know that for some time the Finnish language was not very widely used. Swedish was the language of business, academe and society. It was not fashionable to use Finnish. Of course, now that has changed. Because of that background, the suggestion that Finland will be served by our embassy in Stockholm indicates some insensitivity, especially in light of that linguistic conflict. That fact had something to do with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism because, of all of the bilingual countries studied, the recommendation made for Canada was closely based on the Finnish solution rather than on the Belgian or other systems. There is also the fact—which may be a minor factor—that the location of the Canadian embassy in Helsinki—the one we presently have—is particularly advantageous, and if we close it, any future government could not hope to find its equal.

There is also the fact that Helsinki, Finland, is a sort of meeting point between East and West and, I would have thought, gives particular opportunities for exchanges between the East and the West, between the Soviet Union and eastern and western Europe.

Therefore, I hope that the negative impact which the suggestion will have on Finland, the Nordic nations, and also on our allies and friends in Europe, will encourage the government to reconsider its plan to close our embassy in Finland; and I ask the Leader of the Government to make representations to that effect.

Senator Frith: But without a smile.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

JOINT COMMITTEE REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION RE RECOMMENDATIONS ON MILITARY AGREEMENTS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government. May I say at the outset that I should have given him notice, and if he wishes to take the question as notice, I will be quite happy if he can provide me with a reply perhaps by the end of this week.

My question concerns the Joint Committee on International Relations. It is now several months since the committee submitted its report, and I am curious as to what the government's response will be concerning some of the committee's findings and recommendations respecting military agreements, and so on. I believe the committee dealt with cruise missile testing and related matters. I would like to know when the government is going to respond to the committee's report.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I had thought that the government had tabled a response to the recommendations contained in the report. However, I will attempt to confirm that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate the Leader of the Government's comment. I did not expect him to do my homework for me, and if I have done it badly, then I apologize. I would like to have a copy of the report if it exists, because in the past few days I have received quite a lot of correspondence asking for the government's response. If it is already in existence, then that is great.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN STANCE ON ACID RAIN—COMMENTS BY U.S. INTERIOR SECRETARY

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I was astounded to read the following article in the Wall Street Journal of February 12. I am sorry that the question is being asked at this late date. The headline reads: "Hodel Assails Canada's Stance On Energy Issue".

● (1420)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): What was the name?

Senator Buckwold: Hodel, H-O-D-E-L. I would like to read some excerpts from this article. I think they will astound you, as they did me. They will lead to one or two questions. The article is from Washington and begins:

Interior Secretary—

Which is a senior cabinet position in the U.S. Government.

—Donald Hodel suggested that Canadians are advocating strong U.S. controls on acid rain and oppose oil development in an Alaskan refuge in order to make the U.S. more dependent on Canadian energy.

Mr. Hodel, meeting with reporters yesterday, called it 'astonishing' that Canada had opposed oil exploration and development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, adjacent to Canada on Alaska's North Slope. Canada's opposition, he said, continues a history in which 'Canadians have abused' their influence in the U.S. 'for what I think is the furtherance of their own economic activity.'

I shall read two more paragraphs out of this long article.

The secretary described Canadians' [sic] pressure for tighter U.S. acid-rain controls as 'their efforts to make it more costly and difficult to generate electricity in the U.S.' Tough restrictions on U.S. electric plants, he said, would 'have the effect, whether it was their intention or not, of increasing the potential market for excess Canadian electricity in the U.S.'

'I hope,' Mr. Hodel concluded, 'that the U.S. isn't so naive and foolish that we fall for that kind of doublespeak.'

The article also includes a comment by Jim Wright, head of the Environment Section of the Canadian Embassy:

Jim Wright . . . dismissed Secretary Hodel's comments as part of a 'conspiracy theory.' While calling the theory 'ridiculous,' he said 'it is of concern to us when we hear it from senior representatives of the U.S. government.'

That is a very important statement by a senior official of the American government. I may have missed it, but I have not read anything in the Canadian papers on this matter. I have a series of questions that I would like to ask:

First, how are such statements by an American cabinet minister consistent with the impression given by the Government of Canada that a high level of understanding and cooperation exists between our two countries?

Second, has the Canadian government made a statement, other than the mild statement I have just read, refuting these inflammatory remarks?

Third, what other action has Canada taken?

[Senator Buckwold.]

Fourth, will this matter be discussed with President Reagan when he comes to Canada on April 5? I believe that this is a very serious statement and one which completely refutes the government's position on the very great cooperation that exists between our two countries. I am very interested in the response of the leader.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend has asked four questions. I believe that the fourth question was whether or not this matter will be on the agenda for the summit between the Prime Minister and President Reagan. The answer is yes, that acid rain will be a very important item on the agenda for those discussions.

Another question was about whether a Canadian response, other than the statement attributed to one of our embassy officials, had been made. Speaking from memory, I believe that one, if not several ministers of the Crown replied publicly to the statement made by the U.S. Interior Secretary.

Finally, I simply say that President Reagan has given certain undertakings on behalf of the United States with regard to acid rain, and Canada expects that those undertakings will be honoured.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. I did not get an answer to the first question, which was probably the most important, and that was whether this statement is consistent with the impression given by the Government of Canada that a high level of understanding and cooperation exists between our two countries. That statement is still coming through as part of the government propaganda; that all is well between us and that we will solve all our problems. I have had no response to that question.

My supplementary question is: Could we get from the Leader of the Government in the Senate, if possible, a copy of the statements that he suggests have been made by Canadian ministers?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will obtain copies of any statements that have been made by Canadian ministers on this subject.

As to whether the statements by the Interior Secretary are consistent with a high level of understanding, et cetera, the government regards those statements, as well as statements made latterly by the United States senator, as aberrations.

Senator MacEachen: That is what Senator Tower found—a big aberration!

AGRICULTURE

MORATORIUM ON FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS— REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On February 17 last I raised a question as to whether or not the moratorium on debts or mortgages held by the Farm Credit Corporation would be continued. I do not know if a response has since been given to that question. In any event, at the time I asked it the minister was kind enough to say he would make all possible inquiries.

I state again that I think this matter is of great importance. I think it is urgent and important that the moratorium now exercised by the Farm Credit Corporation be continued.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my colleague, the Deputy Leader of the Government, will table later today a reply to the honourable senator's question of February 17.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, perhaps when I have heard the answer, I will make a comment if I think it is appropriate.

FARM DEBT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a further question in the same general area, and I ask it because within the last couple of weeks I have spent a great deal of time travelling from community to community within Saskatchewan and Manitoba and can say to honourable senators that there is great fear and consternation out there. There is trouble in the agricultural sector. I think it can generally be said that farmers on the prairies are disturbed that the debt review panels now being assembled have no power to write down debts, no power to reschedule the debt load and thereby give existing farmers a second chance to buy their farms.

Therefore, honourable senators, my question is: Is the government giving any consideration to the introduction of legislation at an early date that would contain within it the authority to have farm interest rates and debts reduced and rescheduled on an individual farm debt basis? In other words, is the government taking, or likely to take, any real action to protect the farmers on their own farms, a great majority of whom are young farmers and who are the best educated and most efficient farmers that have ever farmed in this country?

• (1430)

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, could I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to inform the Senate whether the government has made any progress towards keeping Mr. Mulroney's election promise to apologize to and to compensate Canadian citizens of Japanese origin for acts done by the government during and following World War II?

INTERNATIONAL FINANCE

BRAZIL—SUSPENSION OF PAYMENTS ON BANK DEBTS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to the recent decision of the Government of Brazil to suspend payments on its very large debt to various banks throughout the world?

The Minister of Finance of Brazil has visited many capitals of the world recently, and I wonder if the Leader of the Government can throw any light on the reason Mr. Funaro has not visited Ottawa, in view of Canada's considerable exposure in Brazil.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will have to make inquiries.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Government, in making his inquiries, could find out whether Mr. Funaro expressed any interest in coming to Ottawa, or whether we expressed any interest in seeing him.

Further to my first question, I ask whether the Government of Canada has expressed any views to the Government of Brazil with respect to the implications of its decision to suspend its payments on its debt.

Senator Murray: Those are very interesting questions, honourable senators, and I shall try to obtain answers to them in a short time.

Senator Frith: You never get an answer to an interesting question, just a compliment on its being interesting.

CANCELLATION OF DEBTS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether any consideration has been given to the advisability of cancelling the debts, not necessarily the debt owed by Brazil but the debts owed by nations even less able to repay, because it is difficult to grasp why each year we give more money to a country to pay interest on money it owes Canada which it may never be able to repay. We thereby increase that country's debt each year, make its recovery more difficult, and make the losses suffered by our banks even greater.

This may be some sort of accounting or banking econography, and it may be sacrilege to ask this question, but I wonder if somebody has asked why we are throwing good money after bad, when the best thing to do is cancel those debts, leave those poor countries alone, and not give them any more money.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do believe that insofar as the government is concerned, CIDA did effectively write off a number of debts which had been incurred by some of the poorer countries some time ago.

Insofar as the chartered banks are concerned, I suggest that the honourable senator take his representations to the next shareholders' meeting and make them there.

Senator Gigantès: Has the government carried out a study that would enlighten us on what the financial consequences for the banks—which are our banks; all of us have a deposit somewhere or another—would be if they followed the tack I suggested, regardless of what the shareholders might think?

I am not suggesting that that solution be imposed on the banks, but has the matter been studied and, if so, could we have some figures?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I should like to draw my honourable friend's attention to the excellent work being done by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is now studying the very problem of the international debt situation and is in the process, I believe, of drafting a report.

Hon. George van Roggen: If I may be permitted to interject; we are currently working on our report, and when it is tabled the answers to all of the difficult questions raised by Senator Gigantès will be revealed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Gigantès: Could the Senate have a promise from the Leader of the Government that when this excellent report appears it will not be stolen by the House of Commons, as was the report of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on financial institutions? It does not really matter if it is stolen, as long as they use it!

Senator Murray: I fervently hope so.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to a number of questions. I will follow the usual pattern and identify the question, and if an honourable senator wants me to read it, I will do so; otherwise, I will ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings.

INDUSTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—POSSIBLE MANUFACTURE AND EXPORT OF ARMAMENTS BY WEST GERMAN COMPANY FROM PROPOSED PLANT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on December 16, 1986, by Senator MacEachen regarding Industry—Nova Scotia—Possible Manufacture and

[Senator Gigantès.]

Export of Armaments by West German Company from Proposed Plant.

(The answer follows:)

Thyssen originally inquired about government policies and programs in the context of a possible venture in Cape Breton.

After receipt of this information, Thyssen has chosen not to further pursue the establishment of an industrial complex in Cape Breton and has not pursued its request for export permits.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FOOTWEAR—REMOVAL OF IMPORT QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on December 17, 1986 by Senator Bosa regarding International Trade—Footwear—Removal of Import Quotas—Government Action.

The government has no intention of abandoning its current policy with respect to footwear imports, which was announced by the Minister for International Trade in the House of Commons on November 20, 1985. The current policy calls for the phase-out of import quotas on women's and girls' footwear by the end of November 1988. Import quotas on all other types of footwear were removed on December 1, 1985.

The government anticipated that a surge in imports would likely take place, but that the situation in the market would stabilize. While imports increased significantly in 1986, it is impossible to give any precise analysis of the impact this has had on Canadian production and employment. Much of the increase in imports has been in those types of footwear which do not compete directly with Canadian industry. Also, layoffs in the industry cannot be exclusively attributable to increased imports. Nevertheless, the Canadian government is concerned over the sharp increase in the level of imports into the Canadian market. Steps are being taken to have further consultations with the principal suppliers of footwear to the Canadian market. These suppliers will be asked to exercise increased discipline on their shipments to Canada, to ensure that the recent surge in imports will not continue. Indeed, measures have been taken by Taiwan to reverse the recent trend in that supplier's exports of footwear to the Canadian market.

It is important to clarify a misunderstanding which may have arisen over statistical data put forward by the honourable senator. Reference is made, for example, to an increase of up to 350 per cent in the quantity of women's and girls' leather footwear imported into Canada. Women's and girls' footwear are still covered by import quotas and will remain covered until the end of November 1988. On the basis of preliminary statistical information, overall imports of footwear in 1986 were up by some 54 per cent, compared with the previous year. In the case of women's and girls' leather shoes and sandals, imports actually declined in 1986. As the honourable senator pointed out, the price of imported footwear has increased. This, however, is primarily due to a substantial increase in foreign exchange rates. The consumer price index for footwear increased by only 2 per cent in the year ending November 30, 1986.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF RURAL POST OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 3, 1987, by Senator Bonnell regarding Canada Post Corporation—Closing of Rural Post Offices—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

Yes, senators will be consulted before any post office is affected in their community. Canada Post has made a commitment to provide a 90-day period for consultation with a community before making any change to the way postal service is provided within that community.

The consultative period will be used to ensure that customers have an opportunity to suggest the type of service alternatives they would like, thereby allowing the corporation to increase the cost effectiveness of its services while responding to customer interests.

Canada Post has already indicated that no post office amalgamations are planned for the time being. The corporate plan tabled in November, 1986, indicated that Canada Post intends to work more closely with the private sector to increase the number of postal outlets in Canada, and the accessibility of these outlets.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE—RESTRICTION ON EXPORT OF CANADIAN RAW CEDAR LOGS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 4, 1987, by Senator van Roggen regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade—Restriction on Export of Canadian Raw Cedar Logs.

(The answer follows:)

Canadian exports of logs and pulpwood of all species are controlled to all destinations. With respect to red cedar logs, the government's policy has been to generally deny exports. On June 16, 1986, red cedar blocks and bolts were added to the Export Control List. Exports of red cedar logs to the United States have been prohibited since mid-June, 1986. The government has no intention of relaxing the export controls on red cedar logs at this time.

DRUG TRAFFICKING

COASTAL PROTECTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked in the Senate on February 11 last by Senator Bonnell regarding Drug Trafficking—Coastal Protection—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The Canadian Government has the situation well in control. As lead agency in drug law enforcement, the RCMP is very much aware of the drug problem on the East Coast and has taken steps to increase its effectiveness in the area. One of its innovative programs is Coastal Watch; that involves citizens along the coast reporting suspicious vessel activity to the RCMP.

The RCMP has had excellent cooperation and operational support from National Defence, the Canadian Coast Guard and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Of the 11 major RCMP drug operations which occurred between 1974 and 1986, the Canadian Coast Guard assisted once and National Defence and Fisheries and Oceans each assisted twice.

INDUSTRY

AWARDING OF CF-5 CONTRACT TO BRISTOL AEROSPACE LTD.—STATUS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked in the Senate on February 17 last by Senator Guay regarding Industry—Awarding of CF-5 Contract to Bristol Aerospace Ltd.—Status.

(The answer follows:)

The announcement made by the Government on January 21, 1987 stated the intention to establish Bristol Aerospace as the principal industrial support centre for CF-5 aircraft. The decision provided for industrial support activities to be transferred to Bristol over a three-year period and was subject to satisfactory completion of negotiations on individual contracts as they arise.

There have been meetings between officials of Bristol Aerospace, Canadair and the government. Both contractors are fully aware of what is going on and are participating in the planning phases. Individual contracts will be negotiated as they arise and the target date agreed to by Bristol for a first contract is about April 1, 1987. Any media report suggesting that nothing has been heard by the company since the initial government announcement is inaccurate.

AGRICULTURE

MORATORIUM ON FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 17, 1987, by Senator Argue regarding Agriculture—Moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation Loans.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Would you read that, please?

Senator Doody: Certainly. The answer reads as follows:

When the moratorium was announced by the Minister of Agriculture in the fall of 1985, he indicated that its lifting would be dependent on a number of factors. One of those was that the farm debt review boards had to be fully operational.

As of very recently, the boards are all established. The Minister of Agriculture will carefully assess the situation and the potential workload which could be created for the review boards before he sets a date for the lifting.

The Minister expressed the same concerns as Senator Argue with regard to the timing for the farmers who are going to be affected by this action.

This matter is receiving the careful attention of the Minister of Agriculture and he should shortly be in a position to announce his decision on this very important matter.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I listened carefully to the reply given to my question asking for assurances that the moratorium with regard to Farm Credit Corporation mortgages should be continued indefinitely. I hear from the answer that the moratorium is likely to be lifted as soon as the Minister of Agriculture believes that the debt review panels are operating.

I want to say in the strongest possible way that that is very, very bad news for farmers in western Canada with Farm Credit Corporation mortgages.

Some of those mortgages today carry an interest rate of 14 per cent against large sums of money borrowed for the purpose of buying land some three, four or five years ago.

The minister was frank in telling the house a few minutes ago that the government does not have in the works the idea or the intention to introduce at an early date legislation that would have teeth to deal with this terrible debt problem. It is hard for me to ask a supplementary question following from that kind of rather specific, but still frightening, answer. Nevertheless, my question is: Is there any committee of the cabinet that is dealing on a continuing basis with this severe debt problem? I want to tell the minister that if the government removes the moratorium, there will be large numbers of farmers who will be taking action to do all they can to make certain that new tenants, or alleged new owners, do not remove them from their tractors so that prospective new owners may have difficulty getting possession of the farm.

The sentiment is out there and it is very clear. There are farmer committees in place that are prepared, whenever farmers carrying a Farm Credit Corporation mortgage, or any other mortgage from any other financial institution, are being threatened with foreclosure to the point that they are afraid that others may move in on them and take their farm, to assist the present owners to continue their operations. I am just bringing that information to the minister—and it has been on every television station in western Canada off and on now for a number of weeks.

I would appreciate it if the minister has a response, although Question Period, I understand, has concluded. It is raised as a supplementary to the question I have already asked.

Senator Argue: I made it pretty clear: Is there any committee of the cabinet that is continuing to deal with this emergency problem that is out there, or has the cabinet come to the conclusion to—as the minister has already said—“let the debt review panels be established, forget about further legislation and see what happens”? Is that the position of the government, or is there a committee that has a finger on the question today?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, any decision on the part of the government to introduce legislation on this, or any other matter, will be announced in the usual way. I have no such announcement to make today; no such decision has been made. I have already conveyed that information to the honourable senator.

With regard to the cabinet process, he knows as well as I do that there is a Cabinet Committee on Economic and Regional Development that deals with agriculture on a continuing basis; there is a Cabinet Committee on Priorities and Planning that deals with agriculture on a continuing basis; and there are various committees of officials examining and discussing possible avenues for solutions to the short-term and longer-term problems of agriculture and of the western economies—since I know that it is the western economy that particularly interests my honourable friend. I do not think I can go beyond that.

Senator Argue: Well, then, to be a little more specific still, can the minister say whether there is any item on the agenda of the various committees that he has referred to that would likely amount or lead to a discussion on this emergency problem that exists, or is that item not on the agenda?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend knows better than to ask for information as to what may or may not be on the agenda of the cabinet and its committees.

Senator Argue: Well, with great respect, I used to bring that information into this house on a regular basis, namely, that the cabinet had under consideration various items, and that when a decision was made an announcement would be made. What the minister is saying is that there is no consideration being given.

Senator Murray: No, that is not what I said.

Senator Argue: But that is what your answer clearly means.

SHIPBUILDING

CLASS 8 ICEBREAKER—DESIGN—CANADIAN ICEBREAKER TECHNOLOGY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 18, 1987, by Senator Marsden regarding Shipbuilding—Class 8 Icebreaker—Design—Canadian Icebreaker Technology—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

The design of the Arctic Class 8 Icebreaker (Polar 8 Icebreaker Project) will be developed based on specific requirements included in the detailed Statement of Requirements for the icebreaker. It will be Canadian and state-of-the-art technology will be utilized. The designer will be required to consider technological advances made over a number of years operating experience by the Canadian Coast Guard in all areas of the Canadian archipelago including the Beaufort Sea. Also considered will be recent successful developments in icebreaker bow forms developed at Government expense such as that for the M.V. "Arctic" and a new improved icebreaker bow proposed for the "St. Laurent".

In addition, the AC/AC electrical propulsion system under consideration in the design is globally accepted as state-of-the-art for "Polar" type icebreakers as evidenced by their preferred use by USSR, Finland, Germany, Argentina, Japan, Sweden, and by the U.S. in their consideration of new Polar class icebreakers. Substantial pioneering and development was made by the Canadian Coast Guard during the nuclear icebreaker design iteration and a system was designed which was the forerunner for systems now enjoying global popularity and which have been installed in the most recent six Coast Guard icebreakers.

The operating requirements of the new Arctic Class 8 icebreaker are very demanding and will present a real challenge to the selected designer. The Government is committed to designing and building the ship in Canada. Canadian content and industrial benefits will be known in greater detail when the project definition stage is concluded.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 18, 1987 by Senator Haidasz with respect to government action regarding acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

(The answer follows:)

The Government of Canada response to the AIDS problem dates back to 1982-83 after the first Canadian case was diagnosed. At that time, five actions were undertaken:

- establishment of the National Advisory Committee on AIDS to advise the Minister of National Health and Welfare on all aspects of management, control and prevention of AIDS;

- funding arrangements for research projects through the National Health Research and Development Program and the Medical Research Council, involving special off-cycle peer review arrangements with the National Advisory Committee to ensure prompt funding;
- establishment of national surveillance systems for AIDS cases in Canada, and for health care workers accidentally exposed to contaminated blood or other substances;
- special funding amounting to $400,000 per year for the establishment of basic capability for Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) isolation and culture, and for the development and evaluation of diagnostic techniques;
- the preparation and dissemination of a public education brochure entitled "AIDS in Canada: What You Should Know", and the publication of technical and professional guidelines and information on AIDS.

In the fiscal year 1982-83 through 1985-86, these activities involved expenditures of $2.7 million. In the Laboratory Centre for Disease Control (LCDC), a small staff group was established to deal with the issue.

The long incubation period of the AIDS virus meant that the dimensions of the virus infection and its eventual consequences were only gradually understood by the scientific community. In the fall of 1985, the National Advisory Committee on AIDS recommended the development of a more comprehensive and intensive program to respond to the problem. This recommendation was given effect in the National AIDS Program implemented by the Minister on May 1, 1986.

The National AIDS Program is a five-year, $39 million undertaking that comprises the following elements:

- Research—The National Health Research and Development Program (NHRDP) provides support to extramural researchers working on AIDS. This effort is supplemented by in-house research activities in LCDC.
- Public and Professional Education—The Canadian Public Health Association is mounting a Canada-wide education and awareness program for the general public, target population groups and professionals in all personal service sectors.
- Support for Community-Based AIDS Organizations—Community organizations play a vital role in providing education and services to high risk groups and persons with AIDS. They are supported through the Health Promotion Contribution Program.
- Enhancement of Diagnostic Capability in Canada—The Department is contributing to the development of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) isolation and culture facilities and services in Canada, including the training of technological personnel. LCDC also develops and tests diagnostic tests and reagents for HIV infection.

—The National AIDS Centre—Located in LCDC, this Departmental coordination centre maintains surveillance systems on AIDS cases in Canada and accidental exposure to HIV among health care workers and others, promotes collaboration among government, non-government and private sector organizations and serves as a source of technical and scientific information on AIDS.

—The National Advisory Committee on AIDS (NAC-AIDS)—Now in its fourth year, NAC-AIDS provides expert advice and recommendations to the Minister on the whole spectrum of AIDS issues. The Chairman is Dr. Norbert Gilmore, Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal. The secretariat is provided by the National AIDS Centre.

—The Federal-Provincial-Territorial Ad Hoc Committee on AIDS—This forum provides a means of planning and coordinating the activities of both levels of government, to ensure consistency and effectiveness of response.

In May 1986, the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare of the House of Commons issued a report on AIDS in Canada, and made several recommendations for national action. The Department's response to the report was tabled in September.

Highlights of the National AIDS Program to date include:

- Arrangements for the availability in Canada of azidothymidine (AZT) for treatment of AIDS patients and related research;
- enhancement of virus laboratory facilities in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia (Ontario still under discussion), and training of laboratory personnel;
- a special solicitation of AIDS research, which resulted in 54 new research proposals submitted for review. The review is not yet complete, but 17 have so far been recommended for support;
- funding for twelve community-based AIDS organizations across Canada, and full developmental support to the Canadian AIDS Society, a new national non-government organization.

Numerous other activities and projects have been completed.

TOBIQUE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF IMPARTIAL NEGOTIATORS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on December 19, 1986, by Senator Corbin, regarding Indian Affairs—Tobique Indian Band Land Claim—Request for Appointment of Impartial negotiators.

[Translation]

(The answer follows:)

In 1892 the Tobique Indian Band ceded its rights to 12,000 acres of land to the Crown. In keeping with established procedures, any cession must be submitted to the Governor in Council for approval. However no order in council authorizing this cession has been found. It would seem that this cession was never submitted for Governor in Council approval since, allegedly, a law clerk advised the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs that no cession of rights was required because the lands involved had been sold under the terms of legislation predating Confederation.

Having considered the facts, the government has agreed to negotiate compensation for any prejudice the band might have suffered as a result of delays in the approval of the cession.

The lands in question were sold before and after Confederation, and the proceeds paid into the account of the Tobique Band. The Band now wants to be given back the lands on which part of the City of Perth, New Brunswick, is now located. Otherwise the Band requests compensation in the form of a payment based on the real value of all lands before services were installed, as well as damages for lost use of such lands since 1892 and special rights of an economic or other nature related to these lands, including riparian rights.

The Band claim covers the total area of 12,000 acres. The government maintains that, although there is reason to believe all such lands were alienated before Confederation, some doubt remains concerning the alienation of about 10,000 acres. A study of facts concerning cessions made before Confederation is almost complete. The band will be informed of the inclusions and will be able to take part in preparing questions for consideration by the Department of Justice which is to examine this issue.

The Minister is now consulting with Cabinet on the kind of compensation to be offered in cases where there is no evidence the band has suffered major losses or damages. The band had released the land for sale and received all income from rental of the land until it was sold. The band was involved in selling the land and was compensated when the land was finally sold. As soon as the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues have agreed on the type of compensation, the band will be informed of the decision.

Meanwhile, counsel for the band and the Government met in late January 1987 to discuss further the nature of the claim and the grounds on which it was based.

This is a particularly complex land claim. Although negotiations have been stopped temporarily, pending an opinion from Cabinet and the outcome of the investigation mentioned earlier, steps have been taken to stabilize progress made on other aspects of this claim.

As for the federal Government's negotiating team, all positions taken so far conform to the guidelines provided and reflect the views of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the federal Government.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND ATLANTIC ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-6, to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

He said: Honourable senators, I take some pleasure in introducing to the Senate, for second reading, Bill C-6, the Atlantic Accord Implementation Bill.

This bill establishes the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador as equal partners in the management of offshore oil and gas resources.

Bill C-6 clearly establishes Newfoundland's right to have a significant say and a degree of control over the rich oil and gas resources off its shores. The joint management of the offshore will be achieved through the creation of a joint independent Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board. Bill C-6 empowers the board to make decisions on all matters related to the management of offshore oil and gas resources within the legislative framework established by the two governments.

The creation of the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Oil and Gas Board under the accord exemplifies this principle of partnership by assigning an equal number of representatives appointed by each government, as well as a chairperson selected by mutual agreement.

Honourable senators, I have the names and a brief statement of qualifications of these board members. If senators are interested, I can read them into the record.

The Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador will jointly instruct the board on key issues such as the rate and method of exploration and production of petroleum resources.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will you read those names in at the end?

Senator Doody: Yes, or I can do it now while I think of it.

Senator Frith: Whenever you like.

Senator Doody: To revert to my comment a minute ago with regard to the names of the members of the board, in October 1985 and January 1986 the federal and provincial energy ministers announced the appointment of the full-time and part-time Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board members. The chairman is a gentleman named J.E. Baugh, President of Ted Baugh Resources Limited of Calgary. He is a former senior vice-president of Petrofina Canada Limited, a past governor of the Canadian Petroleum Association and former chairman of its board, as well as a past director of the Canadian Gas Association. He is also a past president of the Petroleum Recovery Institute and Alberta Sulphur Research Limited. He has an engineering degree from the University of Alberta and his term is for seven years.

The vice chairman is Mr. John Fitzgerald, a provincial appointee. Mr. Fitzgerald was Executive Director of the Newfoundland and Labrador Petroleum Directorate. He is a former assistant deputy minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and Energy in the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador. He is a member of the Advisory Council of the Centre for Earth Resources Research and the Institute for Social and Economic Research at Memorial University in St. John's. Mr. Fitzgerald was a member of the provincial government team which negotiated the Atlantic Accord. He is a graduate in engineering of the Nova Scotia Technical College.

Mr. Diego Henao was Director of Evaluations of leasing in offshore Newfoundland and Labrador with the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration. Previously he was employed in the petroleum industry for more than 20 years with B.C. Resources and the Colombian Petroleum Company of Bogota, Colombia, as well as other companies. Mr. Henao is a graduate in geology of the National University of Colombia and holds a master's degree in geology from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland. He was a federal government appointee.

● (1450)

Dr. Ross Peters has held various positions at Memorial University in St. John's since 1963, and became Dean of Engineering in 1982. He has served as a consultant for engineering firms and government agencies on ocean engineering and fisheries technology. He was co-chairman of the Environmental Assessment Panel on Potential Northeast Grand Banks Oil Development. He has served on many committees and advisory boards relating to arctic vessel and marine research, as well as fisheries matters. Dr. Peters is a provincial government appointee with a four-year term.

Mr. William Deyell recently retired as Executive Vice-President, Foothills Pipelines (Yukon) Ltd., a NOVA subsidiary. A civil engineer, Mr. Deyell worked for Canadian Bechtel Ltd., and has held several executive positions with NOVA. Mr. Deyell is a federal government appointee and holds a five-year term.

Mrs. Janet Gardiner, a Commerce graduate of Dalhousie University in 1954, is treasurer and director of Chester Dawe Limited and Associated Companies in St. John's. She is a director of the Audit Committee and Executive Compensation Committee of Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro and a director of Mutual Life of Canada. She also serves on the Advisory Board of the Faculty of Business at Memorial University, and is chairman of the Salvation Army's Citizens'

Advisory Board. She is a member of the Provincial Council, Duke of Edinburgh Awards and of the Consultative Committee of the Arts and Culture Centre.

The final member of the board is Mr. John Zwolinski. Mr. Zwolinski was engineering supervisor at Canadian Industries Ltd. in Edmonton from 1952 to 1960. He has held managerial positions with finance, oil and construction companies in the United States. He became projects coordinator of the World Bank Group in Washington, D.C., in 1980. Mr. Zwolinski, a Canadian citizen, planned to retire in 1986 and return to Canada. He now finds himself to be a federal government appointee on that board with a six-year term. Honourable senators, that is the membership of that very prestigious board.

This board will be instructed by both levels of government on key issues such as the rate and method of exploration and the production of petroleum resources. In this way the two levels of government will be able to ensure that the board is kept aware of the primary concerns of each. Similarly, a number of basic board decisions can be reviewed by either government.

In the same spirit of partnership, the accord assigns to the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador the power to make any decisions concerning the system of royalties and other provincial revenues, and applies provincial social legislation to the offshore.

To protect the rights of workers on floating offshore structures, federal legislation governing industrial relations will apply. This reflects the agreement with the province that the intent of the legislation is not to cause any decertification of any union when an offshore structure moves from offshore Newfoundland to offshore Nova Scotia or any other province, or vice-versa.

This management system, which is based on the responsibilities and capabilities of both parties, should serve as a model of cooperation and coordination.

The same basic concept also guides the government's economic position. The Government of Canada grants Newfoundland access to revenues deriving from the exploitation of offshore oil and gas resources. This sharing is possible because the Government of Canada considers oil and gas resources offshore Newfoundland to be the same as land resources. The province will have the right to determine and receive royalties, place taxes on corporate income, levy a provincial sales tax, and collect any other forms of revenue falling within its jurisdiction.

As a result of this bill, Newfoundland will participate in these key resource management decisions, and provincial statutes regarding resource revenues are incorporated by reference in this bill. These important measures are introduced pursuant to federal legislation in an area where the Government of Canada has jurisdiction.

The bill also provides protection for equalization payments to Newfoundland once production has reached a specified level. This protection will ensure that the province is not penalized and that it will be able to benefit from the additional revenue for a period defined in Part V of the bill.

[Senator Doody.]

Honourable senators, this legislation is also designed to improve the economic environment in which the oil industry works and invests. Naturally, there are other factors that influence a favourable investment climate, such as world oil prices, but the government's readiness to support investment projects is also a key factor. By resolving this federal-provincial dispute, eliminating a number of uncertainties, and clarifying the ground rules, the accord is re-establishing a climate of confidence that will encourage industry to pursue exploration and development.

The Government of Canada is convinced that Bill C-6 and the activity that it will generate will contribute to achieving energy self-sufficiency and security of supply in this country.

Honourable senators, another important aspect of this legislation is the establishment of the $300 million offshore development fund. This fund will be used to put in place the infrastructure necessary to ensure that Newfoundland receives the maximum benefits from future petroleum developments, as well as to support needed research and development and education and training. To date $174 million has been committed under the fund: $64 million for education and training; $16 million for research and development, and $94 million for industrial infrastructure. This is out of the $300 million fund of which $225 million is contributed by the Government of Canada and $75 million by the Government of Newfoundland.

To ensure that Newfoundland gets its fair share of economic benefits from hydrocarbon exploration projects, the bill requires each operator to submit a plan for the use of Canadian labour. Subject to specific provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Newfoundlanders will be given priority access to training and employment.

Likewise, priority will be given to Newfoundland services and to goods manufactured in Newfoundland when they are competitive in terms of price, quality and delivery conditions.

This legislation also protects the environment by containing an oil-spill compensation regime. This legislation imposes absolute liability on the oil industry in respect of oil-spill damages or debris and requires the posting of financial security to ensure compensation. Bill C-6 also establishes a committee comprising representatives from federal and provincial governments and the petroleum and fishing industries to monitor the effectiveness of the compensation regime.

The bill also provides for a research fund for environmental studies. We know that oil-related activities often run the risk of upsetting the ecological balance. Governments are determined to take every possible measure to avoid and, in the event of accidents, to repair any environmental damage caused by the offshore development of oil and gas resources.

Bill C-6 incorporates the Canada Petroleum Resources Act, which was Bill C-5 and which was passed in this place not so long ago. In doing so, it implements a new system of oil and gas management providing a consistent regulatory regime throughout Canada's frontier lands.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote the Honourable Brian Peckford—

Senator Frith: "Mr. Speaker"?

Senator Doody: I should be addressing honourable senators. I am sometimes carried back to my previous incarnation.

Senator Frith: Especially when the speech is written by someone in the House of Commons.

Senator Doody: I wish the honourable senator had not mentioned that.

Senator Frith: I was just getting even, since the honourable senator opposite used to do the same to me.

Senator Doody: I am absolutely crushed.

In any event, honourable senators and "Mr. Speaker," I would like to quote the Honourable Brian Peckford, the Premier of Newfoundland, who, on the occasion of the signing of the Atlantic Accord, said:

This whole Agreement has been accomplished recognizing our role in Confederation and our commitment to national self-sufficiency for Canada... There is no other document in existence that so clearly establishes Newfoundland's right to have a significant say and control over such a huge resource... Today marks a watershed in the development of Newfoundland. It signals a dramatic turning point in the economic history of this place.

As a fellow Newfoundlander, I fully share Mr. Peckford's enthusiasm for the Atlantic Accord. His endorsement indicates the degree to which the Government of Canada has succeeded in meeting one of its major objectives when first taking office, and in removing a major sore point in federal-provincial relations.

The government believes, and I believe, that when each province is given increased control over its own economy, the political unity and the prosperity of the entire country are strengthened. Bill C-6 is an outstanding example of this philosophy.

Honourable senators, quite a few amendments have been made to the bill since its subject matter was examined by the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Indeed, the committee had this matter before it for many meetings in its original guise of Bill C-91, and later as Bill C-6. The amendments are not substantial and mainly deal with the reconciliation of the English and French versions, although at least one amendment deals with insurance coverage for board members, covering them for damages or lawsuits flowing from their work.

If honourable senators wish to have the bill referred once again to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, I have no objection. I would ask, however, for speedy passage of this legislation, since the people in Newfoundland are most anxious to get these projects going, and they are funded through this bill. Some money has already been spent in getting these things under way, but that has been provincial government money. As one can well imagine, there is some unrest in the treasury of the province as to when it will get its money back and as to when the federal government will begin participating.

• (1500)

I spoke to the chairman of the Energy Committee a few minutes ago and asked him if he wanted to have this bill referred. At that point he asked that the matter be left open so that he and his committee members could think about it a little later.

With those comments, honourable senators, I recommend second reading of the bill.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I note the concluding comments of the Deputy Leader of the Government in which he expressed the wish that the bill be dealt with expeditiously. I must say that the energy he displays has not previously been displayed, either in the preparation of the legislation or in its passage through the House of Commons.

As senators are aware, when the Accord was put together and signed, it was agreed that the legislation would be enacted within one year. The fact is that the bill was not introduced until about a year later. It has been making its sleepy passage through the House of Commons for the past full year. Therefore, I will give to the Deputy Leader of the Government an unqualified commitment that, in comparison with the delays first imposed by the government and then encountered on its passage through the House of Commons, it will be dealt with in the Senate with the speed of light.

I will not continue my remarks today, honourable senators. I would like to adjourn the debate until Thursday, or possibly next Tuesday, but I am not about to signal any effort to equal the dilatory practices of the government. We intend to deal with the bill in an expeditious manner. I repeat that I will not be able to complete my remarks today, except to add that having read the comments made by Premier Peckford on the state of federal-provincial relations, which comments were included in the speech, I am led to believe that the speech itself must have been placed on the back burner prior to the recent discussions between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on fisheries and treaties. Surely what was said on that occasion is no longer relevant with respect to the alleged peace and harmony which Premier Peckford noted in those euphoric days in the early life of this government, when even he laboured under the delusion that only tranquillity would reign as between himself and the Government of Canada. I suggest that these speeches be examined a little more carefully, if a bill has a year-old history, to ensure that they are relevant in current political circumstances. But I am sure that that does not crush the Deputy Leader of the Government any more than did the comment previously made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Doody: I am still reeling.

Senator MacEachen: I will continue my remarks later, honourable senators, and will deal with some of the economic aspects of the bill, which the Deputy Leader of the Government did not include in the comprehensive way I had expected in his remarks.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-39, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, particularly those on the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, may remember that this new legislation emerges as Bill C-39 whereas it was previously known as C-75. Last year it was subject to a reference to and a pre-study by the committee, but was never reported. The house recessed in June and subsequently prorogued in August.

The primary purposes of the bill, honourable senators, have to do with safety at sea and the protection of the environment. The principle of the bill was supported by all members of the other place, but the legislation before us eliminates one particular area of controversy, which was the famous clause 4 having to do with cost recovery, which I will deal with in a moment. That was not the only change, but it was certainly the most controversial.

The bill, as I have said, is intended to enhance safety at sea, to enable Canada to deal more effectively with marine pollution, and to provide legislative approval for six important international marine conventions. The last major amendments to the Canada Shipping Act were made in 1971. Recent marine tragedies and continued developments in offshore exploration have emphasized the need for these proposed revisions, which were developed in close consultation with the industry. Bill C-39, therefore, is but one of a series of marine related legislative initiatives.

The bill will provide new and improved standards for the training and certification of seafarers. It will provide clear authority to establish vessel traffic service zones and procedures to be followed by ships to enter such zones. It will also provide authority for marine traffic regulators to issue directions to ships, to improve construction and equipment standards for special purpose ships such as gas and chemical carriers, and, of course, the mobile offshore drilling units.

The amendments provide for improvements in pollution control clean-up and improved compensation programs for victims of oil pollution damage. Special arrangements will be made so that small claimants such as fishermen will have direct access to pollution funds rather than having to go the other route, which costs them excessive sums in legal fees and so on.

The government will be able to prescribe interim standards for the carriage of dangerous goods in bulk in the case of new substances. The powers of pollution officers to boards ships are being modified to conform to inspection provisions of the pollution convention. These officers will also be authorized to delineate emergency zones, to regulate traffic within such zones, and, in cases where there is a likelihood of a spill, to order any ship to moor or to proceed. They will also be able to obtain as evidence a sample of the pollutant without the need to get a search warrant. There are severe financial penalties for breaches of these provisions, but I shall not go into them.

I repeat that when the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications pre-studied what was then Bill C-75, there were two areas of controversy. One involved the certification of pleasure craft operators. It appeared that members of the boating organizations were concerned that certification would be introduced for all types of pleasure craft. It should be stressed that this is not the case. In order to reassure the boating public, and in response to concerns expressed by the general public, the bill has been amended to exempt pleasure craft of less than 20 metres, or 65 feet, and those vessels, boats or craft of any length that are propelled manually. Senator MacEachen and I will remember the song we used to sing in Cape Breton. It went: "We have neither pole nor paddle, gasoline or steam to travel." I assume that if it was under 20 metres, we would be exempt.

Our intention here is to clarify the issue of operator licensing for small craft and, at the same time, to provide legislation that would allow us to respond to future requirements because of the size and power of the yacht involved.

Then, of course, the second area, which was the most controversial, dealt with clause 4 of Bill C-75, that is the clause dealing with charges relating to navigation services. The desirability of putting in place safety provisions outlined in the bill led the minister to take out clause 4, the cost recovery clause. However, I should mention that the government has not abandoned its commitment to deficit reduction, and the cost recovery provision of that bill was an integral part. You will recall that it dealt with the recovery of some $15 million to $20 million of the $800 million budget of the Coast Guard—but we could not seem to agree on exactly which services were going to be charged for.

The government still believes, apparently, that the user of those services, including the Coast Guard, should pay a fair share of the costs, but agreement could not be reached. However, that is not part of the matter now before us. What I believe is important to note is that this bill was discussed extensively during second reading in the House of Commons and in committee. Over 60 witnesses, representing 28 associations, presented briefs, and more than 20 amendments were made to the bill as originally introduced. I therefore believe the government has given us assurance and proof of its willingness to listen to representations made by the witnesses and all committee members and to react in a positive way.

The bill significantly modernizes a 50-year-old act. I urge honourable senators to consider the important features which are fundamental to the amendment of the Canada Shipping Act, and to recognize the improvements which have been made. As a result of these amendments in the interests of maritime safety, I ask that this chamber—and here I am being very careful—give not necessarily expeditious passage to the legislation but, rather, as Senator MacEachen would wish, “after prayerful reference to divine will.” The bill has been long awaited both nationally and internationally.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Stanbury, debate adjourned.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: A report will be made tomorrow.

Order stands.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

THIRTY-SECOND CONFERENCE HELD IN LONDON, ENGLAND—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie rose, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, October 29, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Thirty-second Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, held at London, England, from 23rd September to 2nd October, 1986.

He said: Honourable senators, I realize that my colleagues from all corners of this house have been wondering why I have not proceeded with this inquiry before.

An Hon. Senator: A rough few weeks.

Senator Frith: You spoiled my holiday completely.

An Hon. Senator: Why bother at all?

Senator Macquarrie: I missed that. Perhaps I will get it in Hansard. But I can now explain. I calculated that Commonwealth Day was the appropriate time for me to deliver this opus—and I may say that it was very difficult to hold it back from my colleagues. But I have a great respect for those ceremonials and celebrations, and I am only sorry that my calendar calculations were slightly off, because actually Commonwealth Day was yesterday—but I did not ask someone to summon the Senate just to make things precisely appropriate. I know honourable senators would have been delighted to come along.

I was very happy to be one of the delegates to go to the seventy-fifth general meeting of the CPA, and honoured to have as the other member of this place the distinguished parliamentarian, Senator MacEachen. It is always an honour to be associated with my fellow maritimer, fellow Scot and fellow ancient academic, if I may put it that way. I want to say with great modesty that some weeks ago I was linked with Senator MacEachen when veteran, highly respected, enormously intelligent journalist, Douglas Fisher, in a column on “The Lost Art of Oratory” wrote that there were very few silver-tongued orators on Parliament Hill. There were three or four Newfoundlanders in the House of Commons, “long-time former Grit minister, Allan MacEachen, and former Tory MP and historian, Heath Macquarrie.”

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: The Fisher award!

Senator Macquarrie: Lest honourable senators think that I am forsaking my usual modesty, and because we are enjoined not only to tell the truth but to tell the whole truth, I must read the description in the preceding sentence of the article, where that distinguished journalist described us as “a couple of relics in the Senate.” That, honourable senators, was the only flawed expression in an otherwise excellent, perceptive and informative article.

In the weeks preceding the CPA meeting I was wondering if there would be absentees, because we recall that many countries refused to send their athletes to the Commonwealth Games held in the beautiful city of Edinburgh some weeks before. I wondered whether those same countries would send their politicians to meet with a bunch of politicians including the British, for quite a while—indeed for a fortnight—in rooms which, while ample, were a good deal smaller than most of the athletic scenes of action in Edinburgh. But, happily, the boycott attitude did not find expression in the conference, and the attendance was complete and splendid.

I have always been dubious of the efficacy of boycotts and their kin, and in this instance it would appear that the groups most hurt were the young athletes of the non-participating countries. It was a gesture presumably aimed at the Thatcher government; but it also injured, perhaps rather painfully, the hospitable country of Scotland and its capital city, Edinburgh.

I was interested to note when the conference got under way that when the Secretary General, that distinguished statesman, Shridath Ramphal, made his remarks, he too deplored and regretted the boycott. But by then, of course, it was too late.

Because of the informative report I tabled a short while ago, I will confine myself to some observations and impressions that are somewhat personal. Had there been a newsman in the gallery, I would have said that it would have given him, or her, an opportunity to say again that a travelogue was coming up. They would be wrong, of course. I have to say without reservation that our host, the United Kingdom branch, did a most splendid job in the planning for and conduct of the meeting. The organization was altogether efficient and considerate. On a small personal matter, I might demonstrate how carefully they planned the operation. In the closing days of the conference, Prime Minister Thatcher and her government tendered a magnificent dinner for the delegates, other British parliamentarians, Commonwealth diplomats and others appropriate to the gathering. As I studied the seating plan before I went in, I was much touched to note that a clansman of mine, Albert Macquarrie, a member of the Aberdeen area in the British House of Commons, was seated between my wife and me. I was very touched that he had come down from Scotland to the dinner at a time of great personal grief, and I was delighted that our hosts had arranged this very agreeable seating plan so thoughtfully.

It would be an insensitive person who would not be impressed by the historic and beautiful Palace of Westminster, and particularly Westminster Hall, that magnificent place of nearly one thousand years of antiquity where the opening ceremonies were held. Now, it is said of the British that they love a parade, and they certainly know how to stage one. The opening ceremonies were glittering and colourful. In a prelude a portion of a military band rendered appropriate music, and I noted that the works of a distinguished Canadian, Robert Farnon, were included.

But few people or events are perfect, and even this most efficient pageantry had a flaw or two. The Lord Chancellor, who is, of course, one of the most important people in the precincts of Parliament, was, according to the proper procedure and processional protocol, among the last to proceed to the stage accompanied by his train bearer. This hapless individual, the train bearer, directed the Lord Chancellor to his assigned chair, but he should have taken him to a small receiving line to await the arrival of the very last group; namely, the royal party. Now, it is doubtful if Lord Hailsham was particularly pleased to have to make the move, especially since the poor man has great difficulty in walking. A few days later when the Speaker of the House of Commons was announcing an upcoming visit to the Tower of London, he told the delegates that we would probably see the Lord Chancellor's train bearer there, "because we no longer execute them for things like that, you know!" My watchful eye picked up another incident when the platoon of Beefeaters came in. This elite group reached the stage where a right about-turn was in order. One of these veteran Beefeaters did a left about instead. What the top sergeant said to him, I do not know. However, considering that these red clad yeomen reminded me of my favourite brand of gin, I thought I did well to notice that particular detail.

I was also impressed by a fascinating little exchange—and that is the right word—between the Queen and Prince Philip. Walter Bagehot used to talk about the nuances and the subtleties of the monarchy. I saw at one stage where Her Majesty opened her purse and passed over to Prince Philip a cough lozenge. No one could tell, no matter how carefully they watched, what brand it was, or it might have done that particular company a great deal of good.

I hardly need to say that one of the underlying concerns of the meetings we held with our colleagues was apartheid. There were many very good, thoughtful, sensitive speeches. There is one that I remember because it had an element of humour. An Australian senator, admitting quite frankly that his own country did not have a glorious record in its treatment of its own native people, said, "Thank God things have improved in recent years." Then he, presumably thinking to himself that he might be going too far along that line, said also, "The odd change of government every so often didn't hurt either"—that from a very ardent Labour member. A number of matters were discussed in the economic field. Senator MacEachen presided over—he did not preside over it; more than that, he was a panelist in a very important symposium on that subject. At another session I overcame my modesty and participated in a discussion given over to "The Commonwealth—Who Cares." It shows how catchy the titles are becoming in these CPA meetings.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

I was moved that this was such an important occasion. Seventy-five years ago Sir Howard d'Egville, as he later became, formed the Empire Parliamentary Association. He was so enduring that I knew Sir Howard d'Egville. When I first went to Britain after becoming a member of the Canadian House of Commons, he was my host, and a very fine host he was. I read in the anniversary publication that he was an old curmudgeon, but I did not notice that. He was very gracious to me. Perhaps he was mellowing, or perhaps I am so mellow that I would not know a curmudgeon when I saw one. In any case, he was a great host and a great man who saw that the parliamentary side in the development of the Empire into the British Commonwealth and then into the Commonwealth was, at least, paralleled in the parliamentary structure and perhaps, indeed, in terms of sensitivity, organization and consultation surpassed. To that man we owe eternal credit. I expressed to the delegates that it was an interesting coincidence that that year, 1911, was so significant for this reason, but also significant in a very Canadian way in that, surely, the great figure in moving the Empire into a Commonwealth was Robert Borden, our distinguished Prime Minister.

Senator Hicks: An Annapolis Valley man!

Senator Macquarrie: Yes. And sometimes, particularly in his early days, he voted Liberal. Now, you may say that that indicates innate greatness.

Senator MacEachen: It certainly had to be an aberration.

Senator Macquarrie: I say that it shows that even the greatest can make an odd mistake and still be great. I often think that there is some value in having an old codger around, because I reminded those present as deftly as I could that the achievements from 1911 to 1917 and 1920 were not just planned and conceived by a few Englishmen having afternoon tea in the country place, that they were fought for, sometimes with bitterness and often with aggressiveness. Sir Robert Borden had to use all his stubbornness, all his bravery and all his ingenuity to convince some of the people in Whitehall that these expatriates were something a good deal more than a bunch of mere colonials.

Senator Stewart: They never convinced Meighen.

Senator Macquarrie: The honourable senator has mentioned the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen. I thought that Meighen directed things pretty powerfully over the Anglo-Japanese alliance question. I believe that he was the leading spokesman in that endeavour. However, Robert Borden himself declared that he was still an Imperialist while at the same time being a nationalist.

I also took the chance to say that it was a Canadian Prime Minister who took a major initiative in that second stage of Commonwealth development, the first being the equality of members within the Commonwealth—in no way “subordinate one to the other,” as the declaration put it. The next stage was the equality of peoples within those equal states, and we have not quite finished with this subject yet. The role of the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker in this matter was quite significant, enormously significant. I will always recall how Mr. Diefenbaker never accepted praise for the expulsion of South Africa from the Commonwealth. He said it was not an expulsion, and he did not believe that Commonwealth states had the right to expel one another.

I have one or two more comments, honourable senators; one noted with pleasure. At my age you can understand that my pleasure is always of the appropriate parliamentary kind.

Senator Frith: Say that it isn't so!

Senator Macquarrie: We see an increasing number of women delegates. I happen to have followed a distinguished and very beautiful lady on the speakers' list. She remarked that there should be more women in the CPA. She reminded every one of us that behind every great man there stood a woman—

Senator Frith: A surprised woman!

Senator Macquarrie: Why do we have such heckling? I was building up to my point that the gracious wife of a distinguished Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, used to alter that saying and say that behind every successful man there stands a surprised woman.

Senator Frith: I'm sorry.

Senator Macquarrie: I know one gets one's best lines stolen. That has been happening to me for 40 years. However, it does not always happen at the time I am delivering them.

Senator Bosa: It is a surprised mother-in-law!

Senator Macquarrie: That is a point, but we cannot get into the whole family relationship here, because I want to terminate this speech, believe it or not.

It was shown that whether they are members of far-flung legislatures, whether they are at home or abroad, politicians of all stripes, parties and ideologies have certain similar preoccupations. If it was said once it was said 40 times in these debates that the press were not giving the conference a good deal. They were ignoring it. My observation was that, of course, if they had nothing to say about us, it is clear that it has been a pretty good conference. I tried to give solace to my colleagues by recalling the words of Adlai Stevenson, who was the most articulate American of my time. When he was the guest speaker at the American Association of Newspaper Editors, Mr. Stevenson said: “Ladies and gentlemen, I know of your great importance in this country. You are the people who have the responsibility of separating the wheat from the chaff, and then publishing the chaff.”

I had a very interesting and striking demonstration that we are sometimes in danger of over-exaggerating when we talk about the Commonwealth as being composed of intangibles. We say there is no charter; that it does not exist in tangible elements but in ideas, in concepts and in values. Honourable senators, it is much more than that. We had an evening at the Commonwealth Institute and the activities in which that institute is involved are multifarious. There are some absolutely tremendous programs, and even the exhibits depicting what is going on are tremendous. It is universal. I was enormously impressed not only because it is a place ideally suited for a party but because the Commonwealth Caribbean states—who are, incidentally, the producers of the greatest rum in the world—were very much involved. That could warm the hearts of even those who are non-enthusiasts for the Commonwealth.

In this connection, I rejoiced when I heard a few weeks ago that Robert L. Stanfield is to become the chairman of the Commonwealth Foundation, the first Canadian to be so honoured. I never met a finer, wiser or nicer man than Robert Stanfield. The Commonwealth were very wise to choose him; they are lucky to have him, and I commend him for taking on responsibilities that are enormously important.

Senator MacEachen arranged that he and I should have a little session at the House of Lords. We thought we should cross-reference with the second chamber of that country. Interesting things are happening in the House of Lords. I do not know whether Senator MacEachen intends to expatiate on certain things that he learned, but it is interesting to be in a country which televises its upper house and not its lower house. We saw some of the re-runs of preceding sessions, and I think the House of Lords is an interesting and valuable institution. My son thinks that the Senate of Canada is deficient because it does not have a hereditary principle, but I am afraid he is going to be disappointed.

We were treated by the British with every possible consideration. We had the opportunity to choose where we wanted to go, and I chose to go to Blenheim Palace where Winston Churchill was born. Blenheim is a magnificent estate and there is a great statue of Queen Anne there. That brought back memories of nearly fifty-five years ago when, in reading British history, I read this little doggerel that referred to the importance of the Duchess of Marlborough. The couplet is as follows:

Queen Anne reigns, but Queen Sarah rules.

However, “Queen Sarah” had provided a statue for the real, legal queen.

I was staying at the Intercontinental Hotel, which is very close to the home of Lord Palmerston. Lord Palmerston had a lovely place, but it struck me that the British do far better by their military heroes than they do by their political heroes.

Palmerston's house was pretty small in comparison with the great Blenheim Palace.

It was a pleasure to hear Prime Minister Thatcher give her views with her usual clarity. If I were a member of the British Conservative Party, she would call me a "wet", and that is by no means a term of approval, endearment or perhaps even of much respect. I would reciprocate the view on some of her opinions and attitudes. At the same time, however, this is a leader of enormous strength and capacity. In her very brief remarks, with clarity and her usual candour, she dealt with a matter on which almost every other member of that conference disagreed with her, and that is with reference to apartheid in South Africa. I thought she was clearer than Sir Geoffrey Howe, who is a man whom I very much admire.

The issue of apartheid in South Africa is a very difficult and troublesome one. I think that at times today we arrive at a situation where it is far too easy to say that if you do not approve of sanctions as I do, then ipso facto you must be for apartheid. That kind of dreadful dishonesty is prevalent and can be contagious, and Prime Minister Thatcher dealt with that matter clearly.

The issue of apartheid is not one which can be so easily articulated, and here I am talking about how we discuss it which, God knows, is much easier than how it is to be dealt with. However, I think it is important that we do not get fouled up in the verbal arena to begin with. I am troubled that in our zeal to see a terrible crime—and I would call it that—corrected, we so enthuse ourselves as to lose the perspective of our own values. I am a little troubled when churchmen—and I suppose I myself am something of a crumbling pillar—will endorse any kind of violence if it leads to something they desire. That attitude still brings concern to me in my view of this matter.

It is not only confined to this particular subject; there are many times when it is easy to lose the clarity of perspective, which is an essential ingredient to a solution, and that is why I think it is important that one can retain admiration for someone and respect for the views of someone with whom one would not travel in an ideological way.

I think that Prime Minister Thatcher may serve the world usefully, too, in her upcoming trip to the Soviet Union. I think she is the very person to go there at this time, and I think that this is the very time when all peace-loving people should make very sure that an opportunity is not cast aside just for the fun of using old shibboleths. I think a contribution will be made by this great lady.

I was pleased she gave leadership to the conference and that she spoke so well and clearly. I was also glad to meet, for the first time, her husband, of whom Richard Gwyn wrote on Sunday in the Toronto Star, if I may use that expression, that he was the ideal spouse. He thought that some other spouses in some other important country might well follow Denis' example.

As I said, I had not met Denis until I attended that conference. I had a good attitude toward him, however, because I read a couple of years ago that when he and the Prime Minister were going up to Edinburgh, the stewardess came along and he said, "Gin and tonic, please." She said, as many wives do, "Bit early for a gin and tonic, isn't it, Denis?", and he said, as many husbands do, "It's never too early for a gin and tonic."

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I undertook to myself and to Senator Macquarrie that I would participate in this debate because, like him, I regarded the meeting of Commonwealth Parliamentarians in London as an important event in the politics of the Commonwealth. I undertook that also because I had attended the previous meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association that had been held in London some ten years or more earlier. I thought I would make some comments and draw upon my experience.

My intention, like that of Senator Macquarrie, is to give support to the Commonwealth institution, which still has considerable vigour and, of course, to underline the importance of the parliamentary wing of the Commonwealth. I hope to do that at a later date because, unfortunately, there is a committee meeting at 4 o'clock which I would like to attend, and I am afraid my remarks would go beyond that hour. But until I return to the subject later, I should like to congratulate Senator Macquarrie on an excellent, interesting and important statement on the Commonwealth meeting.

There were some questions I had in mind as he spoke, particularly about Blenheim Palace. That is, as Senator Macquarrie pointed out, a magnificent edifice. I wondered whether he had noticed, as I did, that in that splendid palace there was not to be seen any indication of the present Royal Family. There were no photographs or portraits on display. I wondered whether he had any explanation why that should be the case.

It may be that there were various rooms that we had not visited that exhibited an evidence of the reigning monarch, but certainly in the public rooms which I visited I could not find any sign whatsoever of any member of the current Royal Family.

I do not know what that means, but it is simply a footnote to which I will not return when I complete my remarks later.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

TUESDAY, March 10, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT
(Statutory Instruments No. 37)

In accordance with its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, and Standing Order 44 of the House of Commons, your Committee reports the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Regulations (C.R.C., c. 875) to that House.

In May 1984, the Fourth Report of the Committee for the 1983-84 Session was tabled in both Houses. Your Joint Committee then reported that it had found the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Regulations to be ultra vires the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-31, and that the Department of Agriculture concurred in that opinion. In its report, the Committee drew the attention of both Houses to the continued application and enforcement of the Regulations, notwithstanding the Government's admission that they were illegal. Our predecessors wrote that "the continued application of these Regulations at the present time involves an inadmissible departure from the usages of parliamentary government and a repudiation of the concept of the Rule of Law which is at the heart of our constitutional order". The Fourth Report recommended that "immediate steps be taken to ensure that customs officers charged with their enforcement cease to apply these illegal Regulations to imports of fresh fruit and vegetables."

Subsequent to the tabling of that report, the Minister of Agriculture, in a letter dated 25 March 1985, informed the Joint Committee that "... the Department of National Revenue, in consultation with my Department, has amended their instructions to Customs officers, removing all references to the provisions of the [] Regulations. Officials of my Department have also issued a directive to enforcement staff that these Regulations are not to be applied. Both of these orders were issued last summer."

On 13 June 1985, the Chairmen of the Joint Committee informed the Minister that "In light of this development and of the fact that it is agreed by your Department that these Regulations are without legal authority, we were instructed to ask when you expect they will be formally revoked." In reply, the Minister of Agriculture indicated that on completion of a departmental review, he would be "in a better position to determine an appropriate course of action." In a further letter of 4 March 1986, the Chairmen of the Committee responded that "Committee members were singularly unimpressed by your reason for not effecting the revocation of the [] Regulations. It is agreed these Regulations are invalid and their enforcement by customs officers was consequently halted in the Summer of 1984. In the circumstances, we believe the only 'appropriate course of action' is for the Regulations to be formally revoked in the immediate future." The Minister has since reaffirmed that the Regulations "lack an adequate statutory basis", but nevertheless proposes to delay their formal revocation for reasons which the Committee finds neither relevant nor convincing.

In consequence, your Joint Committee feels it is justified to invoke the disallowance powers recently granted to the Committee by the House of Commons. Pursuant to Standing Order 44 of the House, your Committee now moves that the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Regulations (C.R.C., c. 875) be revoked.

The Joint Committee has further instructed that a copy of this report be tabled in the Senate for the information of that House.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 11, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE ESTIMATES REFERRED TO FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, yesterday I should have tabled a rather impressive number of documents, a list of which I was given as I entered the chamber. There were more than 100 documents listed, including all of the budget documents, the estimates, ways and means motions, and various corporate plans for crown corporations. So I decided that I should read the list before I tabled it.

In any event, I found that it was unnecessary, because I noticed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate that the list was printed as having been tabled. Therefore, apparently it would have been superfluous for me to table the list today.

Yesterday I referred both sets of estimates to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for study. I understand that there is an inclination on the part of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to look at the estimates for Foreign Affairs and perhaps National Defence. That has been done before—at least, the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs looked at the estimates on Veterans Affairs. I have no problem with that. Therefore, those that I referred yesterday to the National Finance Committee should stand so referred, with the exception of the estimates for External Affairs and National Defence.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the corollary to that is that the estimates for External Affairs and National Defence will now go to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator Doody: It is my understanding that that is the wish of the Foreign Affairs Committee. I suggest that a motion should be made to that effect.

Senator Frith: Should?

Senator Doody: I suspect that it should, because as of now the record shows that they have all been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. However, I will check with the Table and ascertain the procedure.

Senator Frith: Did we not except from the estimates those for Official Languages? I seem to recall that at least one set was excepted. Perhaps I should propose that we consider the two I mentioned—namely, External Affairs and National Defence—as being excepted from the package referred to the National Finance Committee and that they should go to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Senator Doody: I have no problem with that, except that there was a separate motion for the referral of the estimates dealing with Official Languages. But if this is procedurally correct, then I have no problem with it.

Senator Frith: Then I should make such a motion so that something will show on the record. I therefore ask for leave to make that motion at this stage.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

It was moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e):

That the expenditures set out in External Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, L35, L40, 45, 50 and 55 and National Defence Votes 1, 5 and 10 of the Estimates for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988, which were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, be withdrawn from the said Committee and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CLOSING OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI, FINLAND—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government relating to a question I asked yesterday, appearing at page 565 of Debates of the Senate for March 10, 1987. In my question I listed some of the reasons why I hoped the government would reconsider its decision to close our embassy in Helsinki. My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Is it correct that the only element balancing all those good reasons for not closing the embassy is the fact that its closing will effect a saving of some $1.2 million per annum?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not have in front of me the exact figure as to what the saving will be from the closing of the embassy in Helsinki. I would remind the Senate that Helsinki is one of several embassies that are being closed. The embassies in Quito and Abu Dhabi and the Consulates General in Hamburg, Marseilles, Perth and Philadelphia are being closed, and the staff is being reduced in a number of other missions. So the figure of $1.2 million my friend has cited in connection with the closing of the Helsinki embassy is part of a larger saving that we hope to achieve in order to move ahead on our program of cost reduction.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government would try to get me that figure, although I would be happier if, rather than bringing me that figure, he brought me word that the government had considered the many recommendations made against the closing of the embassy and had decided to keep it open.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ACID RAIN—AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES TO REDUCE EMISSIONS—REPUDIATION BY NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have another question on another subject for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It relates to his responsibilities as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. I understand that the Minister of the Environment is very angry with certain premiers who have reneged on an agreement on acid rain. May I ask the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations whether he is angry also?

Senator Doody: Miffed.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know that the word "angry" would be the appropriate term to describe the feelings of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. He has expressed the keen disappointment of this government that at least two provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which had given us undertakings to reduce acid rain emissions, have more recently indicated that they will be unable or unwilling to do so. We think that this would be a very important step for these provinces to take, and while at least one premier has made the point that his province is not among the worst offenders, nevertheless, the federal government states that no province has more to gain from a reduction in these emissions on the North American Continent than New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and such a reduction is what we are trying to achieve in cooperation with the provinces and with the United States.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, is it correct to say, if we cannot describe the emotions of the Leader of the Government as angry—and he should know this as a fact—that the Government of New Brunswick has indeed reneged on, welched on, or repudiated its agreement, and that Nova Scotia has also repudiated its agreement subject to receiving more money?

Senator Murray: My information is that both those provinces have now indicated that they are unwilling or unable to carry out the undertaking they gave us previously. As I say, we are clearly disappointed at this and we do not understand that conditions have changed since those undertakings were given by those governments.

Senator Frith: Is it the opinion of the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations that these two repudiations of the agreement will effectively destroy any progress that the Prime Minister might make with President Reagan at the imminent meetings between the two leaders on the subject of acid rain?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators, that is not our position at all. The United States administration has quite a lot to answer for in this regard.

Senator Frith: Will we be able to insist on their fulfilling their obligations if—and I ask whether or not this is correct—we are unable to fulfil our undertakings, or fulfil the undertakings we had hoped to be able to give, because of the fact that these two provinces will not be reducing their emissions?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think the credibility of Canada and of the federal government is in pretty good shape, indeed, when we face the United States to discuss this problem, and we have not set as a deadline the month of April to conclude these agreements with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. We are working very hard to conclude the agreements on an urgent basis, but we do not look upon the date for the summit meeting with President Reagan as being the deadline.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. The honourable leader suggested a few moments ago that the Government of Canada does not see that any conditions have changed since the agreements were signed between Canada and New Brunswick and between Canada and Nova Scotia. Is he not aware that the Government of New Brunswick contends that there has been a very substantial change in conditions in that at the time of signing the Province of New Brunswick was purchasing very large quantities of surplus power at very low rates from the Province of Quebec, and that recently the Province of Quebec served notice that these quantities of power on a non-firm basis will no longer be available at those cheap rates?

In consequence, therefore, the Government of New Brunswick will have to start again using to capacity certain of its coal-fired plants as well as its thermal oil plants. Also, although the Province of New Brunswick is currently well below the targeted figures for reduction, it will, in fact, be forced to go above the targeted figure within three years.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my experience with the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission leads me to believe that they could hardly have been taken completely by surprise by the notice they received from Quebec on that matter. In any case, our discussions were with the Government of New Brunswick and the Government of Nova Scotia, and both of those governments agreed that they were prepared to deal with their own utilities, and the federal government is going to hold them to that.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I hope that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is so familiar with the circumstances in New Brunswick, will make his colleagues in the cabinet aware that conditions in New Brunswick have indeed changed as to the source of power and the type of power.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this will be an interesting subject for debate, but my information is that the reduction targets, first of all, were not and are not in any way unusually onerous. Second, that the reduction targets were not imposed by the federal government on those provinces but that those provinces made unconditional and unilateral commitments to enter into these abatement agreements.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I must say that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has answered my question. Obviously, he is not going to make those representations to his colleagues in the cabinet.

Senator Murray: I will certainly see that my friend's representations are conveyed to my colleagues.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN—1987-88 CROP YEAR—INITIAL PRICE

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question concerning rumours, if that is the correct word, of a severe reduction in the initial prices on grain to be paid by the Canadian Wheat Board in western Canada.

Before I do that, I want to apologize and tell him that he was right yesterday on another matter. There was, in fact, a response by the government to the report of the Special Joint Committee on International Relations issued in December, and I obtained a copy yesterday.

● (1410)

My question about the rumoured 20 per cent reduction in the initial price for grain generally, but for wheat in particular, in western Canada for the 1987-88 crop year is a serious one. I do not expect the leader to have an answer today, but I want to tell him that the fact that the government has not given any indication of what it is going to do has caused some chaos amongst the financial institutions which supply credit to farmers. I say that because they are apparently unwilling to set up credit arrangements on the same basis as last year. It is not only the banks that are involved but other institutions such as the Farm Credit Corporation, various provincial credit-granting institutions, credit unions, and so forth, are involved.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government could give us an undertaking that he will try to get us a reply as to what the levels are going to be, and soon, because a number of farmers are trying to obtain credit for their spring seeding programs and they are running into a chaotic situation in that no one seems to know what the rules are going to be.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my information is that certain advice is given by the Canadian Wheat Board to the government on a confidential basis, and a decision on the initial payment is announced in mid-April. That will be the case this year.

Senator Olson: Is the Leader of the Government telling the Senate that there will be no announcement to clear up this chaotic situation until the middle of April or later?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has referred to a "chaotic situation." I presume the institutions to which he has referred are making their own assessments based on international and Canadian conditions and not on rumours that may have appeared in the media.

My information is that the usual practice will be followed and that a decision will be announced in mid-April.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.N. COMMISSION MEETING, GENEVA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Recently the United Nations Commission on Human Rights held its annual meeting in Geneva, Switzerland. The Government of Canada sent a full delegation to that meeting, composed of bureaucrats and members of the other place, but apparently there was no representative of the Senate.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us why a representative of the Senate was not asked to participate in that delegation?

In light of the fact there was no representative of the Senate, could the leader undertake to table a full and complete report, including the policies and positions taken by the Government of Canada, particularly in light of the government's response to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Foreign Relations respecting human rights?

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have six delayed answers. I shall identify the questions and, if I am not asked to read them, I will simply ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

[Senator Murray.]

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

THE NORTH—GOVERNMENT PROTEST TO U.S. GOVERNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on December 16 last by the Honourable Senator Molgat regarding Canadian Sovereignty—The North—Government Protest to U.S. Government.

(The answer follows:)

On December 9, 1986, the government delivered a strong protest in the form of a diplomatic note in Washington against the proposed sale of oil and gas leases in areas subject to Canadian jurisdiction in the Beaufort Sea and reserved all our legal rights. Diplomatic notes are, as a rule, considered privileged information and are not made public.

In response to our protest, the U.S. has indicated that the proposed lease sale will be subject to "special procedures". The highest bids for tracts in the disputed area will be placed in an escrow account. These procedures were also followed in a similar lease sale in 1984. At that time, all oil and gas lease bids in the disputed area were put in escrow and no U.S. oil and gas exploration or exploitation took place in areas claimed by Canada.

We have replied to the U.S., noting their assurances and reiterating our legal position.

We will continue to monitor developments closely and to present our views to the U.S. administration, as and when necessary, in order to protect Canada's legal position.

There are no early plans to enter into negotiations. However, the Minister has been in contact with the Yukon government leader on this matter and ongoing consultations will continue with the Yukon government.

TRANSPORT

FUNDING OF MUNICIPAL AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 4 last by the Honourable Senator Molgat regarding Transport—Funding of Municipal Airports—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

Government policy with respect to the funding of municipal airports has been, and will continue to be, the funding of net operating deficits—which requires pre-approval through negotiation of both operating and revenue budgets by the department, and the signing of a contribution agreement with Transport Canada.

As indicated by the Minister of Transport in his press release of August 14, 1986, "it is going to be a challenge to those who operate these airports to demonstrate their management skills and participate with Transport Canada to reduce the amount of funding required from the federal treasury". The Minister also said in this press release that "we will provide all the management and marketing expertise assistance we can to help airport managers cope with the problem we all face".

At the present time, municipal airports are free to set their own standards, and to pursue revenue generating opportunities not available to the government, as long as there is no impact on safety or security.

Government funding will continue for the municipal airports currently covered under the "Airports Financial Assistance Policy". However, these airports will be encouraged to become more self-sufficient through the application of business planning and more commercialized practices, such that a) the airports may better meet localized socio-economic concerns and b) that the government policy of credit reduction is pursued.

The Minister of Transport approved the 1987/88 Operating budgets of the airports covered under the Financial Assistance Policy on February 20, 1987, and these levels are currently being communicated to the respective authorities responsible for operation of the airports.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF PRIMARY RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 11, 1987, by Senator Marchand regarding Aboriginal Peoples—Native Economic Development Program—Inclusion of Primary Resource Industries—Government Action.

Hon. Len Marchand: May I have that answer read, please?

Senator Doody: Certainly. The answer reads as follows:

Mr. Valcourt, the Minister of State (Small Business) who has responsibility for the administration of the Native Economic Development Program (NEDP) has consulted with aboriginal leaders concerning administrative changes to the NEDP. He is now actively considering alternatives including the provision of primary resource industries as eligible projects under the program. Decisions on any changes to the administration of the program are expected to be taken shortly and will be announced publicly at that time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—AUTOMOTIVE TRADE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 17, 1987, by Senator Grafstein, regarding Canada-United States Relations—Bilateral Trade Negotiations—Automotive Trade.

(The answer follows:)

The government's position with regard to automotive trade in the negotiations with the U.S. is quite clear, consistent, and reasonable. The government has said repeatedly that the Auto Pact is working well, and that Canada would not be raising it at the table during the trade talks—"if it ain't broke, don't fix it".

In the meantime, the government has undertaken a "fact-finding" exercise with the U.S. on automotive issues. This was in no sense a negotiation, but an exchange of information on the situation and trends in the automotive industry.

The Auto Pact is not the only auto-related issue. Substantial and increasing portions of North American automotive trade takes place outside the Auto Pact. In 1984, this amounted to 3.3 billion Canadian dollars. The government will have to consider how this would be affected by any comprehensive agreement that might be struck with the U.S. Keeping in mind that the overall aim of these negotiations is to achieve a trading arrangement as free as possible from all impediments to trade, the government will of course want to negotiate issues such as tariffs, customs procedures, procurement, imports from third countries, duty remission programs, and subsidies on both sides of the border. These important matters could well affect trade in automotive products.

The position taken by the Government of Canada is that if the U.S. side has proposals to make which would be of benefit to Canada by enhancing Canadian employment, production and trade, we will listen with interest.

This position regarding automotive trade is well known to all provinces, which, as Senator Murray noted in his remarks on February 17, are regularly briefed on progress in the negotiations by officials of the Trade Negotiations Office.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SPONSORSHIP OF U.S. TELEVISION SERIES "AMERIKA"

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my next answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 17, 1987 by Senator Perrault, regarding Canada Post Corporation—Sponsorship of U.S. Television Series "Amerika."

(The answer follows:)

The ads to which Senator Perrault refers are for Priority Post Courier. Priority Post is a competitive product offered by Canada Post. It receives no regulatory protection and the corporation must therefore compete with other companies for its share of the market.

To make potential customers aware of the product, one of the advertising vehicles used is television advertising. The television advertising is bought and placed by a private advertising agency whose mandate it is to reach the maximum number of potential customers for the corporation's product.

[Senator Doody.]

The placement of the advertisement does not reflect, and should not be construed as, sponsorship of any particular program.

The ads in question are part of a ten-week series running from January 19 to March 29. The total number of "spots" over the ten-week period is 6,200. The ad was shown on "Amerika" on four occasions, one each on February 15, 16, 18 and 22.

The name of the advertising agency used for the campaign is Publicité Martin of Montreal.

The related cost of an advertising campaign for a competitive product is considered proprietary information.

LOSS OF DIE FOR NEW ONE-DOLLAR COIN

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This delayed answer is in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 17, 1987, by the Honourable Senator Bonnell.

(The answer follows:)

Please be advised that the lost die for the one-dollar coin was never handled by Canada Post. The Mint used the services of a private courier company to carry the die.

BANKING

MATTERS WITHIN EXCLUSIVE FEDERAL JURISDICTION— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was raised in the Senate on February 17, 1987, by the Honourable Senator Sinclair regarding Banking—Matters Within Exclusive Federal Jurisdiction—Government Action.

The honourable senator has raised a timely question regarding the securities activities of institutions within exclusive federal jurisdiction. The rapid changes in financial markets and the associated changes in their regulation are bound to raise jurisdictional concerns that must be addressed and resolved.

Federal policy regarding participation in the securities industry was made clear last December when the government announced that banks and other federally regulated financial institutions would be able to own securities subsidiaries which could engage in the full range of securities activities, including some activities that could not previously take place within the federally regulated institution itself. Several provinces have also been reviewing their own policies and regulations to enable federal financial institutions and others to become full participants in the securities business. In response to these developments, last week the federal government issued a statement clarifying its position regarding the regulation of federal financial institutions. Activities carried on within the financial institution itself will be the subject of exclusive federal regulation. I would recommend that the honourable members refer to the February 27 statement, which expresses fully the government's position on this matter.

Financial markets are undergoing rapid change in Canada and around the world. As the traditional businesses of each of the four pillars merge into the others, so that the former clean lines of demarcation become less distinct, there will be challenges to regulators to develop regulatory machinery and policy stances appropriate to the evolving situation. It is most important for federal and provincial governments to recognize the need for a cohesive regulatory framework which allows not only the promotion of solvency and liquidity, but also the effective functioning of capital markets.

The issue of jurisdictional responsibility is on the agenda at an upcoming federal-provincial meeting of ministers responsible for financial institutions to be held next month. The federal government is confident that, with co-operation and goodwill, these regulatory matters can be resolved quickly, harmoniously and in a way that respects the integrity of federal jurisdiction over the federally regulated financial institutions.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCE

BRAZIL—SUSPENSION OF PAYMENTS ON BANK DEBTS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): If I may, honourable senators, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition yesterday asked a question concerning the decision by the Government of Brazil to impose a moratorium on debt repayments to commercial lending institutions.

The Government of Canada, together with other members of the "Group of Seven," last week expressed our concern about this decision and, in particular, our concern over the fact that it seemed to have been taken without consultation with the commercial institutions concerned or with the creditor governments.

The Brazilian Minister of Finance is coming to Canada during this month. A specific date has not been set, but it is to be assumed that one of my cabinet colleagues will be receiving him on that occasion.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the delayed answer given yesterday by the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate relating to my question about the federal government's strategy on the epidemic of AIDS in Canada ends by stating:

Numerous other activities and projects have been completed.

I would like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government or the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether they would provide to us, at least in an appendix to Hansard, what these other activities and projects are, because I do not see contained in the delayed answer any stringent and tough measures against AIDS such as were adopted by the Governments of Great Britain, Bavaria and Belgium.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CORNER BROOK, NEWFOUNDLAND—RADIO-TELEVISION STATION

Question No. 4 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Senator Marshall:

16th December, 1986—Concerning the Radio/Television Station in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, (i) is it the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to close the station; (ii) if yes, what are the reasons?

Reply by the Minister of Communications:

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

No. The Corporation has announced that none of its stations will close in the 1987-88 fiscal year.

CANADIAN PRIME MINISTERS

COMMEMORATIVE STATUES

Question No. 5 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Senator Macquarrie:

3rd February, 1987—1. What, if any, measures have been taken towards the erection of a statue to the Right Honourable Richard Bedford Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada?

2. When is it expected that such a statue will be erected?

3. What federal public buildings in (a) Ottawa and (b) elsewhere have been named for former Prime Ministers of Canada?

4. At what dates were such buildings named?

Reply by the Minister of Public Works:

1. None, but the Honourable Senator's attention is drawn to the Minister's Observations in The Report from the Minister of Public Works to Parliament on Commemorative Statues to Prime Ministers and Commemoratives to Other Eminent Canadians tabled in the Senate on February 11, 1987. Item 3., unfinished business, reads:

In 1967, the government of the day commissioned four statues, yet only two were erected (Prime Ministers King and St. Laurent). Prime Minister Bennett has received nothing in the way of a commemorative statue from his country. The Meighen statue was deemed unsuitable for the Hill.

2. There are no definite expectations at the moment.

3. (i) In Ottawa:

—The Lester B. Pearson Building, 125 Sussex Drive (named in 1973)

—The Sir Charles Tupper Building, Riverside Drive (named in 1961)

(ii) Elsewhere:

—The John A. Macdonald Building, 344 Edmonton Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba (named in 1961)

—The Arthur Meighen Building, 25 St. Clair Avenue, Toronto, Ontario (named in 1961)

—The Sir John S.D. Thompson Building, 125 Barrington Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia (named in 1965)

And under the authority of the Minister of Transport —The Lester B. Pearson Airport (Formerly Toronto International—re-named in 1983)

4. Dates as indicated above.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of the Bill C-39, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Stanbury).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order stands in Senator Stanbury's name because yesterday I requested that the debate be adjourned in his name. I now ask that it stand until tomorrow in Senator Kenny's name.

Order stands in Senator Kenny's name.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-12, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise to speak on the amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

As most senators hear repeatedly and must know, Canadian farmers are hurting because of depressed prices and a depressed international grain market. This is the direct result of subsidization by the European Economic Community and, in retaliation, subsidization by the United States. This practice has had a most unsettling effect on agricultural trade, and the prices for many agricultural products, including grain, have been driven away down in the world market.

The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was first introduced in Parliament by the government of the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker in 1957.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: It was one of the first pieces of legislation to be introduced by the Diefenbaker government, and it was dealt with on a priority basis because of the concern at that time over farmers' cash income.

We are now being asked to debate and support Bill C-12 for this very same reason. Some farmers are indeed experiencing cash flow problems, and the amendments to this legislation are aimed at alleviating, in a timely and efficient manner, that serious problem.

The farmer has a daily impact on our lives, yet Canadians are becoming further and further removed from farm life. It used to be that everyone had a friend or knew someone who was associated with farming. One hundred years ago, 45 per cent of the population of Canada was involved in farming. Today that figure is less than 5 per cent, yet food and grain output in the world has continued to rise steadily, chiefly due to technological advances and changes, biological and chemical innovations which have increased productivity, and, all in all, smarter farming.

Isn't it somewhat ironic that only a decade or so ago that famous committee of Rome was frightening everyone with predictions that we would see global starvation, over-population and, indeed, the end of this world? However, today the problem appears to be one of over-supply. Surely this must make us somewhat skeptical of these social engineers and think-tank intellectuals who are polluting our social atmosphere with their utterances.

Canadians are very well served by their farmers. While the number of farmers has indeed decreased markedly, efficiency in productivity has markedly increased, and the percentage of our disposable income which we as Canadians spend on food is the second lowest in the world. In short, efficiency and hard work by Canadian farmers is reflected in our everyday lives. The milk, the butter, the cheese, the bread, the cereals, the eggs, the chickens, the beef, the pork and the lamb that you eat—that comes to your table—did not come out of the refrigerator, honourable senators; it comes from the hard and efficient efforts of our Canadian farmers.

We as Canadians spend more than $40 billion a year on food. That is a considerable amount of money. Over all, the agricultural sector is responsible for 10 per cent of the total value of goods and services produced in Canada. If input supply industries and service industries are added, this sector contributes almost 14 per cent to Canada's gross domestic product. Therefore, I say that agriculture is vital to our economy. And wheat farmers are very important to agriculture.

Wheat is Canada's predominant field crop. Ninety-seven per cent of our wheat crop is grown in the prairie provinces. However, our domestic market for wheat is small. The wheat producers must, therefore, rely on exports as an outlet for 80 to 85 per cent of their production. Our wheat producers depend on a chaotic, dog-eat-dog world market. The government has been pressing for reform of trade of agricultural products. In this area the government has achieved success in getting agricultural trade discussed in the current round of negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

This drive began when Prime Minister Mulroney successfully introduced discussion on agriculture at the Economic Summit in Tokyo last year. This marked the first time that agriculture has been an official Summit agenda item.

Since that time many members of cabinet in international forums have pressed to include agriculture in the GATT discussions. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, for example, Mr. Charles Mayer, attended a meeting of like-minded, free trading nations in Australia. He also hosted a meeting of ministers from the protagonists of five major wheat exporting nations in Whistler, B.C., last year. This year a further meeting was held in San Diego, and a third meeting will be hosted some time in the future in Australia.

The minister and this government realize that a lasting solution must be found internationally. But permanent success takes time, and that is why, here at home, the government is committed to helping our farmers through this period of low commodity prices whilst the giants of the European Economic Community and the U.S.A. exhaust themselves in trade battles.

Thanks to the Prime Minister's initiative in making the money available and to the farm leaders' ability to work together, a timely and equitable distribution of $1 billion under the special Canadian Grains Program is taking place. The government recognized that Canadian grain producers needed cash flow assistance and stepped in quickly to help.

This kind of approach characterizes the government's record when it comes to agriculture. This government has made available $3.2 billion of Canadian revenue in assistance to western grain farmers and $5.1 billion on agriculture in its first two years in office—a 62 per cent increase over that which the last government spent in its last two years in office.

Hon. H.A. Olson: That is the most misleading statement that has ever been made in this chamber.

Senator Barootes: The honourable senator will have a chance to rebut it. This year agriculture in western Canada will benefit from another 50 per cent increase in spending.

The amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act are but part of the overall approach this government has taken to assist our farmers. By its very design, the act makes available interest-free cash advances when marketing opportunities are limited. When deliveries to grain elevators are held up by low or negative quotas, these farmers are advanced immediate dollars for their grain—for wheat, oats and barley—that they are unable to deliver but have in storage. In this way, farmers are able to meet their short term monetary commitments.

The government is to be commended for trying to make this act more responsive to farmers and easing the administrative procedures. The last thing our farmers need right now is unnecessary red tape. While the act has served producers well in the past, as Senator Argue will testify, conditions change and we must change with them. The amendments to the act will enhance and improve the way the program works.

• (1430)

In the past landlords were required to co-sign the farmer tenant's application for advance payment, regardless of whether that landlord was participating in the advance. Needless time was wasted while the landlord was found and persuaded to sign. This will now be avoided by having the tenant sign an affidavit which indicates that he has clear title to the grain covered by the advance. The Advance Payments for Crops Act, which applies to those areas not covered by the Wheat Board Permit Books, works in a similar way and is working quite well.

The current calculations for advances are based on the number of tonnes of grain prescribed per quota acre. In the past, therefore, high yield producers could not benefit fully—for example, an Alberta farmer who was growing very high yields of grain on a small acreage that was irrigated. The proposed amendment changes the method of calculation of the advances on the basis of actual volume of grain in storage rather than the number of acres.

Some farmers have been hurt by the high levels of interest rates in the early 1980s. When interest rates fell, farmers were locked into those high rates. The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is no different. Interest rates on defaulted accounts were set at the beginning of the crop year and remained the same throughout the entire period until the account was paid off. These amendments would change that. To avoid that problem, the act proposes that interest rates for defaulted accounts shall be able to fluctuate in relation to current interest rates.

A small number of farmers participate in both the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Advance Payments for Crops Act. Maximum allowable levels will now cover both programs together. This is a more equitable approach, and it means that an individual farmer can receive the maximum through one or a combination of both programs, but he cannot receive the maximum from each of the two programs.

The amendments will allow more flexibility in dealing with outstanding accounts in default. The board will be granted more latitude in dealing with producers who show that extraordinary circumstances prevented them from completing their obligations under the act.

Several regulations, routine and administrative in nature, are altered by order-in-council each year that the act is in operation. The government believes that the process of order-in-council takes time and creates unnecessary paper work. It has, therefore, seen fit to delete those requirements from the act. That is streamlining.

As recommended in the bill, the application form will no longer require annual order-in-council approval. Instead, the Canadian Wheat Board will be responsible for approval of the form.

The changes proposed in the amendments would eliminate the need for orders in council to initiate emergency advance payments for purposes such as drying of grain, tough grain, and, in another category, unthreshed grain that has been left standing because of weather. That process will be sped up considerably with payment approval coming directly from the minister responsible.

The advance rate for the crop year will no longer require an order-in-council. The rate is set by the Wheat Board as a percentage of the initial payment on grain, and those initial payments are already set by order-in-council. The current process is therefore redundant and time consuming, and has been deleted.

With these amendments, the government has yet again demonstrated its commitment to reform in its responsiveness and sensitivity to the concerns of our farmers. I urge honourable senators strongly to adopt as quickly as possible the amendments outlined in Bill C-12.

Senator Olson: Would the honourable senator permit a couple of questions?

Senator Barootes: I will be delighted to provide an answer, if I can.

Senator Olson: Can the honourable senator give us a breakdown of the $5.2 billion—I believe that was the figure he mentioned—which has been distributed in the last two years? More particularly, can he tell us how much of that sum was paid out under programs that were set up by the previous government? Further, will he agree that the surplus or reserve funds were already in place, consisting of payments from the treasury and from the premiums paid by farmers themselves? In other words, the $1.4 billion under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund was there, and about $1.5 billion in the Crop Insurance Fund was there—money both from commitments of the previous government and from premiums paid by farmers? Since those comprise most of the figure mentioned, can the honourable senator give us a breakdown of that so that he does not mislead people into believing that it was new money, and that the funds provided were really payments out of programs and funds that were in place before the present government came into office?

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have no objection to Senator Barootes answering Senator Olson's questions so long as it is clear that he is not closing the debate.

Senator Flynn: He is just practising for his speech.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, Senator Olson is right and he is also wrong. He is partly right and partly wrong.

[Senator Barootes.]

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Frith: It is "new" that he would know.

Senator Barootes: I do not like to mislead people. I cannot at the present time, from among my papers, provide the figures for the $5.1 billion. But I can provide, and do have at hand, some figures which might help to answer the honourable senator's question. I know that I will not be able to satisfy his argument, but I will provide what information I have. I am speaking now about what I said was the $3.2 billion supplied to grain farmers—in other words, the Grain Farm Program—as opposed to the totality of agriculture programs. I will read them to honourable senators and they will then see that Senator Olson is partly right in that some of those dollars have come from programs introduced as far back as the Diefenbaker period. I might even go back so far as the Jimmy Gardiner agricultural period, and from there onward to the present government. In 1986-87 alone—this is for one year—the honourable senator will be surprised to learn that the figure was $3.23 billion. Indeed, some of it is made up of premiums provided by farmers self-insuring themselves with participation from the federal treasury. Others are in stabilization programs, crop insurance programs, and so on, and I make no apology for that fact. That is what these programs are for. Indeed, some of them are now in deficit, or what you business gentlemen would call in the red.

• (1440)

Here are the figures based on one year only: Western Grain Stabilization Act, $859 million; Agricultural Stabilization Act, $55.8 million; Crop Insurance Act, $320 million; Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act—and this part is only the interest on defaulted payments absorbed by the government—$24.7 million, although some $608 million was advanced.

Senator Doody: Good news!

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Barootes: I see that Senator Argue is standing, does he not want to hear the rest of this?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I think that the honourable senator has made an error, but perhaps he did not not. I think he said that the $24.7 million was money that was used in default. I believe that that amount is for the actual interest paid rather than for the default payments. I may be wrong.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I stand corrected.

Senator Hastings: You are wrong.

Senator Barootes: That is right, because the actual interest absorbed was not as high. It was only about $11 million. The honourable senator is right. To continue: Advance Payments for Crops Act, $5.6 million; fuel rebate $96 million; transportation assistance, $869 million; and after that the $1 billion which was announced on December 9. That comes to $3.23 billion.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to the comments of Senator Barootes. Senator Barootes is really an agricultural expert in many ways. He is a master of doctoring figures.

Senator Frith: Ooh!

Senator Nurgitz: Come on.

Senator Flynn: What about you?

Senator Argue: I am not a master. On that scale, I would be lucky to be a bachelor.

Senator Phillips: I bet that your wife would like you to be a bachelor, too.

Senator Argue: Senator Olson has brought up the $3.2 billion. I guess the government had to pay out the money it did through the Western Grain Stabilization Act or it would have been breaking the law. I think Senator Barootes has said that. However, it was really the farmers' money. It was from the farmers' account. The government put in part and the farmers put in part. The only difficulty with presenting large figures as the amount of money allegedly contributed by the government to the farmers is that it misleads the general taxpayer into thinking that, somehow or another, the government has put up $3.2 billion of the taxpayers' money for the farmers. That really is not the case.

Senator Olson: That is a terrible disservice.

Senator Argue: That is an interesting piece of accounting. In any event, Senator Barootes is a good supporter of the government, and he puts the best possible picture before the Senate. Really, a great deal has not been done. There was talk that $1 billion would go to western grain producers. The announcement of that program helped Premier Devine win the election. There is no doubt about that. But after the election that $1 billion shrank a good deal. A lot of it was siphoned off to eastern Canada, and it eventually became a little over $800 million for western Canada.

Senator Doody: What?

Senator Argue: Most of it has not yet been paid. The farmers are waiting for the payments. But the program of $1 billion has been announced and is out there. Almost every person in the city thinks, "You got a billion dollars. What are you bitching about?" In fact, the average cheque to the average farmer amounted to $1,800. I suppose that the average farmer would currently owe $18,000. So the average farmer would take his $1,800 cheque, go around town—it would take him an hour because he would have coffee everywhere he went—he wanted to make it last as long as possible—and leave $600 with three people where he had accounts. Those people would give him only a half grin because he only paid part of the account. Those who hold the balance of the $18,000 debt are really angry and upset.

The farmers out there get more telephone calls now than they have ever received. The creditors have heard that $1 billion is coming. The banks phone twice a day. This is true. The banks phone and say, "John, have you received your cheque? Don't forget the bank. You know, you owe $250,000, so bring us the $1,800." In other words, "the government has sent out $1 billion, so take your $1,800 and bring it in to us." It does not go very far. I realize that there is more money coming, a little more than twice as much. Twice as much as $1,800 is $3,600, so they might get about $4,000.

Senator Barootes: Nine thousand dollars.

Senator Argue: If on the average Senator Barootes takes 140,000 permit bookholders and divides that into the amount of money available, he will come up with the same figure.

Senator Barootes: The money is for farms or people, not permit books.

Senator Argue: You have to be a person to have a permit book, you know. They do not just pass them around. Some of them may be held by incorporated companies, but most of them are attached to persons. The amount I used, I think, is generally accurate. If you want to argue about whether it is $1,850 or $1,750, I will not oppose you.

The farmers have a crop to put in, and the $3,600 may come to them in May, depending on how good the bureaucracy is at writing the cheques and getting them out. So, for many, the money will come after seeding. In this way, the farmers will not have enough money to buy the gasoline required to do the seeding, so maybe they will not create problems by putting in such large crops. There is a lot of severe hurt out there. Last weekend I had the privilege of speaking to a health conference in Winnipeg. I had people who deal in the fields of psychology and psychiatry say to me that they have had adult farmers come to them seeking help because of their emotional distress. Farmers of 30 and 40 years of age have broken down and wept because they were losing their farms. The suicide rate for farmers today is more than twice the national average. The suicide rate for farmers today has tripled since 1981.

I know that you are not supposed to talk about caucus meetings, but I am about to describe a different style of caucus. A group from southern Alberta, which will be meeting with all the caucus members, composed of farmers, the Mayor of Lethbridge, reeves and business people met with our caucus—and they are meeting with the caucuses of the other political parties as well—and told of us of the foreclosures that are going forward in that part of the country. They told us of the problems with stores. I think they said that seven major businesses in Vulcan, Alberta, have closed in the last few months. Many of the farms out there, like many of the farms in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, will be lost to their present owners unless action is taken. That is the underlying situation. There is nothing in particular wrong with the bill before us.

Senator Doody: Good!

Senator Argue: It tidies up a few things. It says to a farmer who is in arrears and paying 15 per cent interest that it will take action to reduce the rate a little bit. It says to a farmer who is a tenant and who wants a cash advance that he does not necessarily have to wait until the landlord signs the application. So, it contains some tidying-up provisions. There is nothing wrong with those tidying-up provisions. The fact of the matter is that the farmers of western Canada will very likely be receiving less under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act next year than they are getting this year, because, as Senator Barootes accurately pointed out, the cash advance is tied to the initial price for grain, and Senator Murray made it perfectly clear in the chamber today that the initial price for wheat will be going down because this government will not support it at its present level. Therefore, as the initial price of wheat goes down—

• (1450)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I said that the decision would be announced in mid-April; that is what I said.

Senator Argue: Exactly, and the decision will be to put the price down; that is perfectly clear—

Senator Murray: That is my honourable friend's statement; it is not mine.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, we will see. After the middle of April, we will have that debate that you are always inviting us to partake in, and I would be very happy to say I was wrong, that the government held the price; that the government risked $500 million to support the price of prairie grain at current initial prices, but I am afraid I will not be—

Senator Olson: Those prices are too low already.

Senator Argue: Of course. The bankers say—

Senator Murray: Are the two honourable senators making a recommendation in this regard?

Senator Argue: A recommendation that it be held?

Senator Murray: Senator Argue and Senator Olson are recommending that it be increased, as I understand it.

Senator Argue: Absolutely. The Americans get $6 a bushel; the farmers in Canada get $3 per bushel on high-grade wheat. The American farmer gets $6 per bushel on average wheat at his farm gate. The farmer in western Canada gets $3 per bushel for high-grade wheat. But now a lot of the crop is low-grade wheat, and for that he gets $2 per bushel. Then the debt review boards come along. One member of the debt review board, in my hearing, said: "It is a joke. The only good thing about the debt review board is that they made me a member and I get $150 per day."

Senator Murray: Who said that?

Senator Argue: I am not naming any names, but I heard it and others heard it, so you can just accept it. I tell you it is accurate. He further said: "It is just a kind of social gathering. It would be more pleasant if it were a tea party." He went on to say: "We hear the stories—"

Senator Barootes: Who was this person?

Senator Argue: I know you would like to cut me off, but this was said by a member of one of your boards. This was a member of your debt review board who is paid. He said: "The board is a joke; it has no power." I am sure we will hear many of them say it, because it is all true. They have absolutely no power; they have no teeth. What these appointees of the government will be doing is coaxing farmers to sign off, instead of providing a means whereby they can stay on their farms.

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Frith: Is that $6 U.S.?

Senator Argue: No, that is $6 Canadian. Thank you, senator, for keeping me accurate. The American gets roughly $6 Canadian. Our farmer gets $3, and the senators on the other side of this house are ready to knock that down. I do not know whether they want to knock it down 10 per cent, or whatever, but that is the way in which they are going, or at least that is where I think they are going.

A year ago there was a rumour around here that in January the government was going to bring in debt legislation with some teeth in it. However, the Royal Bank decided that there would not be any teeth in it, so it started a lobby campaign. The Royal Bank won and the farmers lost, and there are no teeth in the debt legislation.

The bill that is before us today tidies up in some important ways an act that has been on the statute books for a long time. The cash advance legislation has been good legislation. It is interest-free. The difficulty is that if this legislation is being introduced as a major program to help solve the farm situation out there, then it is not at all effective. Any effect this bill will have will be marginal, and we will be looking to the government for real action in the very near future because, unless there is action forthcoming, there will be a tremendous exodus of farmers from the land. There will be many heartbroken people out there and, because everyone's equity is going down, agriculture is being virtually destroyed.

Therefore, the challenge to members on the government side of the house is to bring in legislation that will have real meaning and will go a long way in being effective in meeting what is a very urgent crisis in agriculture, a crisis that is adversely affecting many communities in Canada.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to adjourn the debate until tomorrow, because I want to see Senator Barootes' speech in print before I deal with it. I am sure he does not want to leave it in its present form.

On motion of Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

MARRIAGE (PROHIBITED DEGREES) BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill S-5, An Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons.

He said: Honourable senators, very briefly, Bill S-5 is a very simple bill. In fact, it might almost be described as "housekeeping". It is a bill to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons. This bill clarifies the public general law in Canada prohibiting marriage between related persons by enacting what we think is a complete code. In the case of persons related by blood, it reaffirms the law that persons may not marry if they are related lineally or if they are brothers and sisters, but it otherwise relaxes the law to allow marriage between persons who are related as uncle and niece or as aunt and nephew.

In the case of persons related by marriage, it clarifies the law by providing that a person whose marriage has been dissolved by divorce may marry the brother or sister, nephew or niece, uncle or aunt of the divorced spouse. The bill would also allow a person to marry the uncle or aunt of a deceased spouse, something that is not now permitted under the law.

Finally, in the case of persons related by adoption, it generally confirms that a relationship by adoption is no prohibition to marriage. However, in the case of a lineal adoptive relationship, the bill creates a new prohibition. Thus, for example, a man may not marry his adopted daughter or granddaughter.

Honourable senators, there are two brief matters I would like to point out. First, so much of the work that was done in covering this matter on at least two previous occasions under Bill S-2 and Bill S-13, several Parliaments ago, was done by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, under the able chairmanship of Senator Neiman. In fact, in this chamber on December 18, 1985, Senator Neiman, in addressing Bill S-2, covered the long history that this matter has had.

To my recollection, it was through the initiative of Senator Flynn, Senator Asselin and others that we found that every couple of years we were dealing with a series of bills asking for an exemption from the general law. Those senators stood at that time and said the general law needed so many exceptions that it was obvious something was wrong with the general law.

● (1500)

We then proceeded, as I recall, with Bill S-13 during 1983-84, and in 1985 with Bill S-2, both of which died on the order paper. Bill S-2 was at that time before the House of Commons, but when the session was prorogued last October, that ended the life of that bill.

I am sure all honourable senators are familiar with the provisions of section 91 and section 92 of the British North America Act of 1867, and in particular with subsection 26 of section 91, which says that the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction to legislate with respect to marriage and, more specifically, with respect to the capacity to marry. Section 92 provides that the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the solemnization of marriages.

With one minor exception, the federal government has not legislated in this field; it has merely adopted the law on capacity to marry which was in force at the time of Confederation, and those laws were also in place in the various provinces that formed Canada in 1867. I might say that Quebec was governed by the Civil Code. The Civil Code at that time was, in substance, the same as what was in existence in Upper Canada at that time.

The committee, in its very lengthy deliberations, heard from numerous authorities touching on both the religious and civil aspects of capacity to marry. As Senator Neiman pointed out in her excellent presentation on December 18, 1985, the practice of barring marriages between persons having certain relationships, whether by blood or otherwise, is part of the old Judaic religious law, and Christians, in turn, adopted and adapted similar prohibitions.

Over the centuries, the list of prohibitions was extended and contracted from time to time. Some time after King Henry VIII separated himself and his country from the Holy Roman Church, he asked for some codification, I assume because of some of his own problems—

Senator Flynn: Or solutions to his problems.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, as Senator Flynn has said, or solutions to his own problems. The Ecclesiastical Court of that day then actually pronounced certain laws which ultimately found their way into the Anglican Book of Common Prayer and became the foundation on which the common law that Canada acquired at Confederation was based. For those honourable senators who may have studied the topic of domestic relations at law school, that is how we were taught that subject: The laws dealing with the prohibitions of consanguinity and affinity as were contained in the Anglican Book of Common Prayer.

Senator Frith: A very good book, indeed!

Senator Nurgitz: To each his own.

Senator Frith: Have you read it?

Senator Nurgitz: Not completely.

The law at the time of Henry VIII was, and now is, that no person may marry another person of the opposite sex who is within three degrees of blood relationship or affinity. That means it extends literally to grandparents and grandchildren. It does not include great grandparents and great grandchildren. It also extends to aunts and uncles, as well as to siblings.

As Senator Neiman pointed out, there is one other common law prohibition, and that is between step-parents and step-children. However, there is no prohibition against siblings of such step-parents marrying one another.

Confusion further enters the picture when one considers, or attempts to consider, the effect of legal adoption. I am sure it is familiar to most senators that adoption was for many, many years a practice and not a legal matter. If one looks at most child welfare legislation, one will see that adoption did not come into force in some provinces until the 1920s and 1930s. So, formal adoption is basically a 20th century concept. The adopted child has the same status as a natural-born child.

While some statutes dealt with adoption before the turn of this century, as I have said, most of those came about somewhat later.

It is interesting to note that in 1978, before my time in the Senate, an application was made for an exemption from the general law by a brother and sister by adoption. I see Senator Flynn nodding; he was on the committee at that time. The opinion of the committee was that those people did not need a parliamentary bill, because there was no act of Parliament prohibiting adopted brothers and sisters from marrying. So their application was not dealt with.

Senator Frith: Would that be prohibited by this bill?

Senator Nurgitz: No. I might say that Bill S-2 would have prohibited that.

Senator Hicks: That is right.

Senator Nurgitz: Bill S-5, once more, is not different from the current law.

Senator Flynn: We amended that.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes. I apologize to Senator Flynn; we did amend Bill S-2 to remove the adoption prohibition, the theory being that the committee wanted to remove prohibitions and not add them.

The advice given to the committee by experts such as Professor Hubbard, of the University of Ottawa, recommended that the scope of the present prohibitions be narrowed to exclude prohibitions against the marriage, and his view was that eugenic and social justifications by retaining prohibitions are no longer persuasive or appropriate by today's medical or ethical standards.

Professor Hubbard brought to the attention of the committee the Australian experience, which was to remove prohibitions generally, not unlike what we have done, although, in fairness, I should point out that the Australian legislation does prohibit adopted brothers and sisters from marrying.

Especially for honourable senators who may not have been familiar with the work done by the committee dealing with the previous legislation, the committee did hear from leading medical geneticist, Dr. Abby Lippman, of McGill University. In dealing with the aunt-nephew, uncle-niece matings, she indicated that genetic disorder, or rather the possibility of genetic disorder, hardly increased among such related persons as opposed to non-related persons, which would justify the removal of prohibitions in those particular areas.

The chance of a problem birth among non-related persons is a certain percentage, and it increases by something of the order of less than 1 per cent when there is an aunt-nephew, uncle-niece relationship. There is a small increase in the risk.

Senator Frith: In that case attributable to that fact?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

Senator Flynn: And they are not even sure of that.

Senator Frith: That is a possible statistical average?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

I also want to point out that the committee heard from 13 religious groups—that is, it heard from every single religious group that had a membership in excess of 100,000 persons. Every provincial Attorney General was also consulted, as were the chief law enforcement officers of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

While I do not propose to go into any great detail in terms of what the proposals of the various religious groups were, I do recommend that honourable senators read the comments of Senator Neiman on those matters. Suffice it to say that the view of the committee was that inasmuch as the religious groups could still maintain prohibitions for marriages within their own churches—they could still have their rules—the general law of the land ought to treat the matter in a less parochial manner.

• (1510)

As Senator Neiman said—and I am quoting from page 1747 of Debates of the Senate:

In a pluralistic society like Canada the general law should not be constrained by any particular religious views.

Let me conclude by saying that I am informed by the Parliamentary Counsel that there are another 22 applications ready to be heard, if we wish to hear them. That would amount to 22 bills that would come before Parliament from persons wishing to be married and who seek an exemption from the general law because they require one—applications that would not need to be made in the event that Bill S-5 became the law of the land.

Honourable senators, I urge upon you the passage of this bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that Senator Neiman will adjourn the debate. I do not want to enter into the debate, but I would like to ask Senator Nurgitz if he would underline one thing that he has said and add something. Could he tell us the qualifications of Professor Hubbard, what his discipline is or what his disciplines are, and then reread that sentence where he said, “no longer justified by—.” It seems to me that this is important for our consideration.

Senator Nurgitz has told us that the essence of the legislation before us now is an attempt to solve the problem that I thought he put very succinctly, namely, that if the present law needs that many exemptions, then why not change the general law? That is an appealing and persuasive argument. The only reservation that some of us might have is that if there is sufficient evidence before us concerning the genealogical and ethical foundation, whatever it is, for those laws, then that reason is no longer sustainable. So, could you give us the qualification and reread that sentence?

Senator Nurgitz: Professor Hubbard, at the time that he appeared before us, was acting Dean of the Law School at the University of Ottawa. Indeed, he was also Professor of Family Law at the University of Ottawa. He was the only person that I can recall, as we looked for information, who has written on this subject, and he had written one excellent article on this very subject. The article was published in the McGill Law Journal, and was entitled “Marriage Prohibitions, Adoption and Private Acts of Parliament: The Need for Reform.” He has made a study of this matter. We found him to be excellent.

Senator Frith: Not just the legal side but the genealogical side?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, he dealt basically with the legal side. He made a compelling point, that is that we have no laws prohibiting sexual relations between these people.

If your fear is that you are running around creating less than perfect people, sort of genetically damaged people, then what you need is a law prohibiting relations between related persons. We have never seen fit to have that. Why would we, in fact, bar marriages?

My recollection—and Senator Flynn can correct me—is that in the earlier hearings, about three or four years ago, when we did eight bills at once, one of the things that we looked for was to be certain that the people were past the age of child bearing. We had, for example, a 90-year-old man and a 70-year-old woman. It was often included in the material that was sent to us that they were beyond child-bearing years.

In any event, the most telling point of Professor Hubbard was that we have no law prohibiting relations; that would be more important than having a law prohibiting marriage.

Then, finally, this may well be a quote, but Professor Hubbard does not know it.

Senator Frith: No, your quote is fine.

Senator Nurgitz: He recommended that the scope of the present prohibitions be narrowed to exclude prohibitions against marriage. His view was that eugenic and social justifications for retaining prohibitions are no longer persuasive or appropriate by today's medical and ethical standards.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, may I ask a question along the same lines? While Professor Hubbard may have expressed this view, did he approve of the retention in the legislation of the prohibition against marriage for persons who are lineally related by adoption? It seems to me that there are no genetic reasons why marriage should be prohibited between a man and a woman who had been adopted by him. Did Professor Hubbard have a view on that?

Senator Nurgitz: I apologize to Senator Hicks. I do not recall. We have not heard from Professor Hubbard in about two years, and my recollection is that he had none.

I recall the 1978 case of two people who had been adopted shortly after birth, were raised as brother and sister, and were separated for a number of years. Each had lost their spouse through a death. Both had even moved to the U.S., and had suddenly come back, for some reason, to retire in Saskatchewan. These two people found each other. They had many things in common and wished to be married. Now, I believe that is the story of the 1978 case, the name of which I do not recall.

Senator Hicks: Well, their marriage would not be prohibited under this legislation.

Senator Nurgitz: That is correct.

Senator Hicks: But the father-adoptive daughter, or the mother-adoptive son marriage would be prohibited.

Senator Nurgitz: That is correct.

Senator Hicks: Yes. Well, I want to say something about this, but I shall wait until a later time. Thank you.

On motion of Senator Neiman, debate adjourned.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Lapointe, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill S-4, An Act to amend the Hazardous Products Act (tobacco and tobacco products).—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I rise to support Bill S-4, introduced a considerable time ago by Senator Haidasz.

I think it is an important bill. The purpose of the bill is to ban the advertising of tobacco and tobacco products.

As with any other subject, when you move in one direction, you may appear to be causing hardship by such a move. Of course, there is a tobacco industry; there are tobacco farmers, and to the extent that peoples' habits are changing, the demand for tobacco smoking is going down, and that industry faces difficulty. However, while the two questions are related, both need to be addressed, namely, if farmers who have had a substantial income from the production of tobacco do, in fact, get into trouble economically, then action by the government to assist them in production of other products, and to assist them in whatever financial difficulty they may be in, might well be taken, while at the same time generally understanding the great hazard that tobacco constitutes for the health of Canadians.

Dr. Haidasz made a most comprehensive and very effective speech. Nothing that I can say can add very much to the statement he has made. However, from time to time I think it is proper and desirable to let a senator who is putting forward a bill know that there is support for that bill, and that his colleagues think it is an important initiative which should have general support, go on and be dealt with in committee, should come back to the Senate and, we hope, receive Senate approval. It should then go on to the House of Commons where, it is to be hoped, it will be dealt with in a supportive manner.

It has been pointed out that 30 per cent of cancer deaths may be caused by smoking, and that 32,000 Canadians died as a result of tobacco-related diseases in a given year. Those kinds of figures indicate the major hazard that smoking constitutes in terms of the health of the Canadian nation.

In dealing with this major question, one does realize that the position of the tobacco industry is influential and that there is definitely pressure from it to oppose any banning of the advertising of tobacco. Nonetheless, I think it should be the role of parliamentarians to proceed and to take the necessary action to sustain and protect the health of Canadians generally.

There are a lot of vested interests, of course, in the tobacco industry. It is a major industry and, as has been pointed out in an article in the Toronto Star, pharmacists are encouraged by tobacco companies, through the offering of free cigarettes or by the payment of actual cash, to display tobacco products in a prominent position. It is pointed out that a big chain store in a shopping centre could receive between $4,000 and $6,000 annually for a variety of displays, and that six years ago it was not unusual for a big store to receive between $12,000 and $15,000 annually in such incentives.

There is a demand that not only advertising as such be prohibited but that tobacco companies should disclose all of the additives in cigarettes, because, I think it is fair to say, there are some 400 additives available for use in connection with smoking and that are added to cigarettes that are placed on the market. Some of the additives which have been found would frighten almost anyone. They range from turpentine, shellac, butane, ammonia, volcanic ash and a long list of others.

This measure is important. Other things should, perhaps, be done in parallel with the same objective in mind.

The cost to Canadians flowing from the use of tobacco, impaired health and the loss of time at the workplace is of astronomical proportions. It is estimated that the total cost runs into many billions of dollars. The sum of $4.5 billion dollars is lost in income; $1.5 billion dollars is lost due to hospitalization costs; $860 million is lost due to disability payments; and so on.

Other countries have banned tobacco advertising. In Norway, it is stated, before the banning of tobacco advertising, 41 per cent of women between the ages of 16 and 20 smoked. In 1984 only 22 per cent smoked. There was a major reduction. In Canada in 1983, 40 per cent of women between the ages of 20 and 24 smoked. In 1985 this had increased to 51 per cent. While there is some change in the habits of Canadians generally in relation to smoking, the statistics indicate that young women, in particular, have increased their incidence of smoking.

I wish Senator Haidasz every good fortune in gaining the unanimous support of the Senate in the initiative he has taken. I think that if we pass this bill, and if it should result in a change in the law, we all shall have made an important contribution towards improving the general health of Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the only intervention I make on this order is to suggest that there seems to be a consensus that this is an appropriate subject for the Senate to deal with, that is, that it is appropriate for us to consider launching some legislation on this question of smoking and the hazards attendant on smoking to the smoker and to non-smokers who are exposed to side-stream smoke.

If there is some problem in terms of modalities, it seems to me that the study of those modalities—that is whether the correct way to proceed is by a change to the Hazardous Products Act—is eminently appropriate to be considered by a Senate committee.

Unless someone else wishes to speak to this matter, perhaps Senator Haidasz should close the debate on second reading and, with his agreement, we should refer the bill to committee for study and report before third reading.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Haidasz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Haidasz:—in thanking Senators Argue and Frith for their participation in this debate on second reading of Bill C-4 to amend the Hazardous Products Act, I should like to mention that there have been several reports, not only epidemiological reports but also reports from anti-smoking advocacy groups, about the dangers not only of direct smoke but also of second-hand smoke, specifically the ill-effect on health in an environment where smoking is taking place. I believe that one of the most flagrant actions of the tobacco industry was the recent promotion of an ad giving three, four or five cigarettes per package free to entice more sales of cigarettes. There has also been put on the market a 15 cigarette package of tobacco products directed especially towards those who feel that the price of 25 cigarettes is too high. I believe that this is a temptation, especially to the youth of Canada, to begin smoking.

● (1530)

Without any further remarks at this time, honourable senators, I move second reading of Bill S-4.

The Hon. the Speaker: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Lapointe, P.C., that this bill be read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: I do not think Senator Lapointe can second the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must say that I have researched this matter, and Senator Lapointe was here to second the motion when it was first moved.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Speaker, you said that it is moved now.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry, I said that it was moved. Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Haidasz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn rose, pursuant to notice of Friday, December 19, 1986:

That she will call the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.

She said: Honourable senators, one of the fundamental freedoms in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms is that of thought, belief, opinion and expression. One of the fundamental rights in that Charter is the right of equal benefit under the law, without discrimination based on race, nationality or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, mental or physical disability. For one in five Canadians, honourable senators, those words have no meaning. They offer no sense of security and no promise of opportunity. Those Canadians are the victims of what I believe to be our country's hidden shame. They are illiterate.

I have introduced this inquiry for debate because we have a profound problem in our country and we have to do something about it. More than four million adult Canadians cannot read or write well enough to function adequately in our society, and one million more cannot read or write at all. They cannot read the Charter of Rights; they cannot communicate with their government; they cannot do a great many of the ordinary things that all of us take for granted.

Honourable senators, 70 per cent of the illiterate population in Canada was born right here in this country and lives in our cities. Approximately 40 per cent of those people are under the age of 45, one of the most productive periods in a working lifetime. These are accepted statistics and, if anything, they are probably underestimated in Canada.

Who are these citizens who remain in private isolation—frustrated, afraid and angry—in a world in which success and fulfilment depend so heavily on communication at every level of our society? Some 60 per cent of the Canadian illiterate population are unemployed, and they are not looking for a job. They cannot find a job and they cannot hold a job. They cannot read the classified ads; they cannot read the telephone book; and they cannot fill out applications. To them a visit to a Manpower office is a numbing experience because they cannot read the rules. Therefore, they miss the opportunity. Because of their disability, they cannot benefit from government training programs, not merely because they are illiterate but also because they have not accumulated enough years in the school system to qualify for that training.

The illiterate are mothers running dreadful risks in their homes because they cannot read the labels on dangerous substances or the instructions to deal with accidents to themselves or to their children.

The illiterate are workers in our plants and construction sites, who are constantly vulnerable to accidents and mistakes because they cannot read.

The illiterate are farmers, failing themselves, their families and their land because they cannot keep up in an increasingly complex and technical industry where, to keep abreast of change, you must read and understand.

The illiterate are prisoners, men, women and young people in our jails and penitentiaries, whose lives are ruined because of their own inability to understand and function by society's rules.

The illiteracy average for federal penitentiaries is said to be something in the area of 50 per cent, but in some institutions, we are told, it could be as high as 80 per cent.

The illiterate are students going through the system without learning the basic communication skills and dropping out of school. Thirty per cent of our teen-agers are drop-outs, or are students who have managed to get through the system as far as university without developing an adequate capacity or capability to read and write. Literacy scores among first-year students at some of our major universities and community colleges in Canada have shown an appalling failure rate in recent years. It was with great regret that I read just last weekend that more than 40 per cent of the students who took writing competence exams at the University of Alberta in Edmonton have failed since last November. Two years ago the number was 40 per cent, and nothing has changed. Forty per cent of the students tested at the University of Alberta—and that university is not alone.

The illiterate are also senior citizens who are in frightening isolation as their inability to communicate compounds the natural difficulties of the aging process.

The illiterate are Canadians with mental disabilities, who are not even given the opportunity to learn.

The illiterate are men and women of all ages across Canada, who learn to travel in a city by counting the bus stops and subway stops because they cannot read the signs; who shop at a corner store or supermarket by memorizing the colour, shape, sizes and positions of goods on shelves.

Saddest of all, it often starts with the little children who are questioning and interested, and whose first efforts at learning are obstructed by the barrier of illiterate parents; and the cycle begins again on another generation.

• (1540)

The illiteracy picture I have just described is grim enough, but we must add to that the separate but related issue of learning disability, which also affects some 20 per cent of Canadians and, if undetected in young people, can brand them as mentally retarded, slow, spoiled, or just plain bad.

I do not like the label of "learning disability", because those Canadians are really not disabled. They are different, and they learn in a way that is different from the way in which you and I learn; but if we cannot provide them with the alternative teaching techniques, they do not learn at all.

All of these manifestations highlight the fact that illiteracy is truly a national disease and a national crisis. It spreads across all groups in our society, regardless of age, economics or region. It cripples individual Canadians for a lifetime—in a way sometimes just as deadly as a physical disability—and, in doing so, it also cripples the social development and economic productivity of our country.

Because we cannot actually see illiteracy, we, as a nation, have not yet been shamed into dealing with it in the way that we have dealt with more visible disabilities. Traditional education methods have failed this group and they are now alienated from the system. This applies not just to young people but to people of all ages.

However, unlike other grave national problems which seem to defy solution, illiteracy is one which can be solved, if we want to take the trouble to try. It is not a partisan issue. It affects us all and we do not think about it, we do not know about it, and I suspect that too often we may not want to know about it.

The key to achieving success in fighting illiteracy is public awareness, and that is why I am raising the subject here today. I profoundly hope that I will not be the only senator to speak on this issue, that discussion will continue in the coming days and weeks and, let us hope, that it will receive some attention beyond this chamber.

There may be a number of reasons why Canada trails significantly other western countries such as the United States and, most particularly, Britain in recognizing and dealing with this problem. Perhaps we have too few people in too vast a country to be able to focus our attention easily on the issue. Perhaps we have tended for too long to think of illiteracy in terms of underdeveloped countries of the Third World, or, here at home, in terms of poverty, mental and physical disability, racial origins and lack of opportunity for education.

Perhaps the illiterate have become statistics in increasingly large numbers over recent decades because we no longer have a labour-intensive economy, providing the kind of jobs where the illiterate can hide. Perhaps our relative good fortune as a nation has made us complacent. The truly substantial benefits of the television age have, at the same time, turned our children and young people into viewers rather than readers. Perhaps the changes in our family life, with the growing number of single parents struggling to maintain a living for their families, have hampered the early development of reading skills in our children.

Whatever the reasons, we must face the reality that one fifth of our citizens in this rich country are overwhelmed by this problem, and another generation is already at risk in following the same pattern.

Like many Canadians, I have been aware of the problem of illiteracy in North America, but it was an abstract awareness until I travelled across this country with some of my colleagues in the Senate on the Special Senate Committee on Youth. Again and again we heard from young people, from educators, social workers and parents about illiteracy and learning disability, and the emotional and functional crises caused by the simple inability to read and write. As this house knows, our committee strongly recommended that the government launch a national campaign against illiteracy.

Again, last spring, with colleagues from the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I witnessed some of the truly tragic results of this disability while visiting prisons in western Canada and in the Kingston area. Last October, for the first time in history, illiteracy was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne as an issue requiring action, and late last year the Solicitor General, the Honourable James

[Senator Fairbairn.]

Kelleher, indicated that he would declare war on illiteracy in Canada's prisons. That is a very worthwhile idea, but I have to ask, "Why just the prisons? Why not all of the other Canadians who may be headed for trouble, and, indeed, some of them for prison, if they are not helped now?"

Early in January I wrote to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State, the Honourable David Crombie, outlining my concerns, indicating that this debate would take place, and encouraging them to truly take an initiative with regard to this nationwide problem. The minister, Mr. Crombie, responded in a letter which indicated that he was consulting with experts on this question and that he would then begin discussions with the provinces to consider a plan of action. At this point I wish to say that the provinces are involved in this field. As the Ontario government clearly indicated last night, it has committed millions of dollars toward dealing with this problem. But I strongly and firmly urge Mr. Crombie not to believe that this is just a provincial problem. Indeed, it is, but overhanging that is the fact that it is a national problem, from coast to coast and through our northern territories.

In my effort to learn more—and I regret very sincerely that I have relied all my life upon reading and writing, particularly in my profession—it has only been in the past two years that I have become involved in and educated on this issue. In an effort to learn, I have been helped by individuals who have focused their professional lives and their personal abilities on seeking help and understanding for these problems, people like Jack Pearpoint, President of Frontier College in Toronto; June Bourgeau, Executive Director of the Learning Disability Association of Canada which has headquarters here in Ottawa; Ruth Baldwin, President of World Literacy of Canada. And a constant source of encouragement and support to me has been Linda Hays of Calgary, who is the partner of my friend and colleague, Senator Hays. She has been tireless in her work with the Foothills Academy on behalf of the learning disabled in my province.

These people have impressed on me the need for all of us in public life to educate ourselves on the depth of illiteracy and learning disabilities in Canada, and then to use our positions to help spread awareness in every community across this country. That is a first step.

The second step is to understand that this is one disease that can be cured, and that we have in our country people with dedication and worldwide reputations for excellence in the field.

● (1550)

I mentioned Frontier College. This institution has reached out to teach reading and writing since 1899. I would like to speak of the college for a moment, because it offers a clear example of what it is possible to do. It is not a giant institution devoted to formal classroom instruction but an institution that has developed teaching methods, manuals and videos which can be transmitted to groups and individuals for use in communities across the country, as well as for one-on-one instruction at the college itself. It has founded and supported a variety of programs to tackle illiteracy, training everyone from students to prison inmates to teach others how to read. Methods range, as I said, from one-on-one tutoring to actual work in the streets with those who have turned off and dropped out of our society.

This particular program, called "Beat the Street", has received wide publicity. It is an amazing success story of a former long-term prison inmate who broke his pattern of crime, having learned to read and write for the first time at the age of 32. With another former offender, he initiated a program to go directly into the community which they knew best—the street people of Toronto—to pass on what they had learned through Frontier College. This program works. It is successful. It is recognized and supported by the Ministry of Community and Social Services in Ontario and the Toronto Board of Education.

Senator Gigantès: How long does the training to teach people to teach literacy take?

Senator Fairbairn: In the "Beat the Street" program?

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

Senator Fairbairn: I would say that the training is open-ended. There is no specific beginning or end to this kind of instruction. It is because of the lack of instruction that many of these people have dropped out of the system. This program literally takes place in the streets, by using such things as street signs or licence plates to learn how to read and add.

Senator Gigantès: How long does it take to train a tutor?

Senator Fairbairn: I cannot answer that question. Frontier College also has programs upgrading adult learning. It assists in native education in urban areas. It trains students to tutor their peers in high schools. It provides a voluntary tutoring program for federal inmates in the Kingston area and also a job placement program for those who have finished their term in the penal institutions. The training manuals of Frontier College are aimed at teaching volunteers and community organizations anywhere in the country how to begin the tutoring process with illiterate youths and adults.

Senator Gigantès, you and I and all those in this chamber could become tutors to an illiterate person. This is one of the handbooks available. I think the question as to how long it would take to master the technique would depend upon individual considerations, but each of us could do it. Another such organization is Laubach Literacy of Canada, which recruits and trains volunteer tutors to work with adults in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario. Like Frontier College, they produce their own materials, and the two regularly exchange and share information.

I have mentioned World Literacy of Canada whose focus and network links awareness and initiatives in Canada with other nations in the world. There is the Learning Disability Association of Canada, which works here in Ottawa constantly to enhance government recognition of the special difficulties of the learning disabled. And in Calgary there is the Foothills Academy, a provincially approved school dedicated to providing a direct community service for identifying learning disabled children. It also provides an outreach program throughout western Canada for educators and parents.

These are some of the organizations which have developed a public image, and they have been very helpful in helping me to understand. But they are no more important than the countless community groups and volunteers in the provinces and territories who provide the front-line action of persuading those with difficulties to come forward and then offering the help they need.

A great deal of activity in the private sector has been generated in recent years by everything from the chartered banks to mining companies, oil companies, publishing houses, magazines, transport companies, television networks and national hockey, football and baseball associations. Well-known Canadians from all sectors are beginning to speak out as volunteers, and the public is becoming aware of projects like the "Right to Read" and fund raising drives such as the Gift of Literacy Campaign which some of you may have seen in the book stores, which is conducted by the Book and Periodical Development Council to support literacy groups.

Honourable senators may have noticed that I have not yet indulged in that favourite Canadian pastime of saying that the government must solve the problem, that it is completely up to the government. The reason is that this is one area where the government simply cannot do it all. It is not equipped to do it all, and it does not have the expertise or the essential contacts to do it all. As Mr. Pearpoint told the House of Commons Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration last fall:

If the government tries to deliver literacy programs directly, you will write-off an enormous number of resources that are available in this country. That is precisely because this is a community issue—a public issue affecting every Canadian. The resources required to deal with illiteracy are Canadians.

● (1600)

He went on to say that if the government were to respond to the problem by simply creating a ministry of literacy, it could be a very costly investment in failure. Canadians would conclude that it is solely a government problem and would sit back and wait for the government to find a solution, and that is not the way to go.

Having said that, I must very quickly add that such comments do not let the government off the hook—not by a long shot. Federal government leadership—and that means everyone from the Prime Minister down—is critical to this issue, because the government has something that no other group or individual in Canada has: It has a national presence; it has a national responsibility and it has national facilities to use.

The federal government is uniquely poised to tell Canadians that this problem is a top-priority problem in every corner of this country; to explain the problem and how it cripples its victims, and to counsel tolerance to all of us in dealing with an issue that causes such deprivation and humiliation to those who suffer from it. The federal government must tell Canadians that the problem can be solved and that they are crucial to that solution. The federal government must provide core funding to help all the groups develop a nation-wide network to transmit the skills, the methods and the techniques to those who must learn to teach at the local level.

Honourable senators, the government must communicate, motivate, encourage and support financially a national war against illiteracy. It must work with the provinces, but the federal government must take the lead. To begin with, it could launch an awareness campaign very quickly by inserting graphic pamphlets on illiteracy and learning disabilities in every cheque the government issues—not just the pension or Family Allowance cheques but with every cheque. It can be done, it should be done, and those groups who have expertise in this area are eager to assist in any way they can.

Next, the government could develop a national advertising campaign on illiteracy and learning disabilities on television, radio, in newspapers and magazines, and on highway billboards. Terrific work has been done in terms of public education on the dangers of smoking, on mental health, on drinking and driving, and even now we are witnessing the beginning of a televised campaign against AIDS. Honourable senators, illiteracy touches probably more than 20 per cent of our population—a staggering figure—and it cries out for similar exposure. This public awareness must be accompanied by core funding, and I am not talking about multi-billions of dollars but, in part, re-directing and prioritizing money that is already available in the system and adding to it.

It is interesting to note that out of the multi-billion-dollar budget for education and re-training each year in Canada, the amount committed to combatting illiteracy is 0.001 per cent. In other words, virtually nothing. For a start, we are talking about only $12 million to $15 million to enable community literacy programs to function and create new initiatives. Without this funding support community groups will not be able to deliver the assistance to illiterate Canadians who may be encouraged to seek help because of the public awareness programs.

For some time now, Frontier College has been working with governments across the country. However, that college is now in the process of dismantling nationally and internationally recognized programs because of lack of funds. It needs $1 million to expand its training capacity to work with the private and public sectors and the volunteer agencies in this country.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration used to direct about $1 million to illiteracy core funds—a very small amount. However, that contribution lapsed and is now only partially restored. It must be renewed and increased and, in the process, the government could dramatically emphasize its own commitment by facilitating programs to assist its own employees who have literacy problems.

I might add, honourable senators, we would do well to ensure that similar opportunities were also available within the Senate working environment, and I will let you think about that one!

The government must take a serious leadership role with the provinces to build a network of help for the learning disabled, separate from other literacy programs. No longer should the children in Newfoundland with learning disabilities go through life illiterate because there is no opportunity for the kind of identification, assessment and teaching which exists in downtown Toronto or Calgary.

Senator Hicks: And it exists in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, too.

Senator Fairbairn: It does, indeed, senator.

While the assessment process is expanded across the country, teachers must be trained not just to detect children who may be learning-disabled but also to respond to their need for special learning techniques. No province or federal government can turn away from this disability which affects 20 per cent of all Canadians.

All of these suggestions are feasible and possible. They will not drain the federal treasury. What is needed is the will to get going. I submit that must begin with the political will of the federal government. It should have happened a long time ago. Illiteracy is a national issue so severe that we must not permit it to continue to fall between constitutional jurisdictions, or continue to be compounded by our own ignorance and neglect. We have the financial capacity; we have the human resources; and we have the materials and the skills to launch a national campaign and to make it succeed. I suspect for everyone in this chamber the ability to read and write has opened the way for our involvement in public life. I cannot imagine my existence without that ability. We are failing in our duty, honourable senators, if we let one fifth of Canada's human resources remain without access to that same opportunity.

Parliament Hill is the place where the nation-wide battle against illiteracy must begin, and I ask all of you to join in that battle, in your regions, in your provinces, in your cities and towns. This chamber was created in part to protect those who exist outside the power of the majority. I suggest now is the time to fulfil that mandate for the silent minority of illiterate Canadians.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Fairbairn on her excellent speech and ask her to tell us the name of the book that she is recommending from which we can glean some helpful information on this subject.

● (1610)

Senator Fairbairn: I could list a number of books that have been written on this subject. The one I have with me today is entitled "The Right to Read—Tutor's Handbook". That was published by Frontier College. That is the handbook they use to teach students in high schools how to teach their peers.

There are other books on this subject, but, as I said, each one of us is perfectly capable of teaching an illiterate Canadian.

On motion of Senator Marsden, debate adjourned.
The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

HEALTH CARE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, March 17, 1987, I will move:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.

THE ESTIMATES, 1986-87

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-244).

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 17th March, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate respecting the crisis in farm credit. I have tried to ask a couple of questions about this on a number of occasions. Today, however, the situation has become so serious that a number of organizations are getting together. For example, there is the Agricultural Stability Action Committee of southern Alberta—which is made up of the municipalities, the city councils of Lethbridge and other towns, farm organizations, chambers of commerce, and so on—which is meeting because farmers in western Canada, particularly in southern Alberta, are moving into that time of year when they have to make some arrangements for seeding. They have to obtain the supplies they need while there is still uncertainty, as I mentioned yesterday, as to the initial prices.

I am going to give a speech in a little while, so I will not go into the details now, but I can tell the Leader of the Government that the situation is so serious that a lot of people who used to be good, stable farmers are unable to obtain credit for seeding their crops from the financial institutions where they usually get it—banks, credit unions, and so on—because of that uncertainty.

Is any action being contemplated or under consideration now that will enable an announcement in time so that these farmers can obtain the credit they need to seed their crops and to buy the supplies that are necessary for that purpose?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have nothing to add today to what I said yesterday about the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board to the government on the initial price and the date of the announcement to be made by the government in that regard. I look forward to hearing the honourable senator elaborate later on his policy that the government must take a political decision to increase the price over what it is at present.

The honourable senator will be aware that the Minister of Agriculture and others have been meeting with representatives of farm groups on a continuing basis, and that consideration is being given to the kind of assistance that could be provided by the federal government.

The honourable senator will also be aware of the statements made yesterday by representatives of the federal government that any assistance that we might provide should be product-and-market neutral. Therefore, his questions about the timing of any announcement are answered by that.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, I have a supplementary question, if I may.

I wish that it were true that whatever my policies may be might have some effect. The fact is that we are not in office at the moment. The Progressive Conservative Party is in office at the moment, and it is what they are going to do that matters to the farmers, not whether or not I have suggestions that are different. That is why I want to know what the government will do.

I ask the Leader of the Government very sincerely: What are you and your government going to do? Do you have any programs now under consideration that have reached a stage where they can be useful to farmers who need to know the basis on which they can obtain credit, starting now? It is not something that can be arranged later. I think he said yesterday that the prices may be announced in the middle of April, which he implied was the usual date. I would like him to know that that is wrong. That is not the date on which it was usually announced, it was announced earlier than that. That may have been the date since this government came into office, but it was not the middle of April in the past. It was announced in time so that farmers could take that into account in their seeding plans, which are made earlier than the middle of April.

The situation is quite desperate now. Can he give us some assurance that this government has some sympathy for farmers who are going to the banks that they have gone to for years and who are being told, "I am sorry, it looks as though even the initial price is going to be cut by 20 per cent. We are unable to give you any credit on the basis of that, except at a lower level than we did last year."? As I said a while ago, even last year it was too low.

Can we give any comfort to farmers who are trying to make plans to seed their crops?

Senator Murray: We are not operating in a policy vacuum. The honourable senator knows that farm incomes in the aggregate improved in 1986, but he is referring, of course, to grain and oilseed producers who have certainly not shared in this recovery.

The government has already announced the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program for 1987. This is in addition to other assistance which is available to grain producers, including payouts under the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The honourable senator knows, because we discussed it yesterday, that third-party reviews are available through the farm debt review boards for farmers who are in financial difficulty. He also knows that there are Farm Credit Corporation commodity-based and shared-risk mortgages; FCC interest rate write-downs; small business bonds; crop insurance and income stabilization and subsidy programs. We are not operating in a vacuum. All the programs that are available are being brought to bear to assist grain and oilseed producers as much as can be done.

If it is possible to bring additional assistance to them, we will do so. Discussions are taking place in that regard between the government, representatives of farm organizations and the provinces.

The honourable senator is well aware that there is a limit to what we can do.

Senator Olson: I should like to ask a supplementary question. I am aware of all of those things, and I am also aware of one other thing which is even more important than all of those put together, and that is that a 20 per cent reduction in the gross revenue—that is the price of the grain—amounts to more money than all those programs the honourable gentleman mentioned put together. I am talking of 20 per cent of the gross receipts, if the price is cut by the amount rumoured. When I say "rumoured," I use that term rather loosely, because apparently the Canadian Wheat Board has made that recommendation to the government. I do not know whether the government will accept it or not, but I do know that when a farmer goes to a banker and asks for credit which he needs to seed his crop, the bank will tell him, "It looks like your gross revenue is going to be cut by 20 per cent." The initial price is all that is going to be paid. There will be no surplus to make a final payment. In fact, the pool for 1986-87 is in deficit to the tune of $200 million already—at least that is what we hear.

All of those things mentioned by the Leader of the Government do not add up to the amount that is being lost because of the rumoured cut of 20 per cent. That is what the public and what the bankers know. Can the government not come clean with a program to help farmers who are in this desperate situation, where the banks have cut them off because they believe that their gross revenue receipts will be cut by 20 per cent?

• (1410)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the farmers will be assisted a good deal more by the actions of this government than they will by the rumourmongering of honourable senators opposite.

Senator Olson: If it is rumourmongering, will the government come clean and tell us what the facts are? How much is it going to be?

Senator Murray: I told the honourable senator that the government receives confidential advice on the matter from the Canadian Wheat Board. It also obtains advice from other sources, as he is aware, and it will make an announcement by mid-April, as I indicated yesterday.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I wonder if the minister is aware of the Agricultural Stability Action Committee in southern Alberta? It is really an all-party committee that got together and worked out a common approach to the government. I ask the minister whether that committee has met with any cabinet ministers. Did that committee meet with the Conservative caucus? Did that all-party committee, which represents in a very real way all of the 150,000 producers in southern Alberta, make the same statement to his caucus as it has made in other places; namely, that what the government is doing today reflects only about 20 per cent of what the farmers need? That is a statement I heard the committee make.

Despite the minister's story about all of these programs, I can tell him what he is able to do and what the government is able to do. You are able to convince the urban people of this country that the producers are being looked after, but the farmers know that that is not the case. I have other questions on this point, but I wish to ask whether that committee has stated to you that what you are providing is 20 per cent of what you need to provide.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, unlike my friend, it is not my habit to discuss what goes on in the party caucus.

Senator Argue: I did not hear that statement in the party caucus.

Senator Olson: Did they meet with cabinet?

Senator Murray: All I can tell the honourable senators for certain is that this committee did not meet with me. Whether it met with any of my colleagues, I am not sure, but I shall find out.

Senator Argue: The minister said that the government is not operating in a vacuum. I think that the government is a vacuum. The trouble with a vacuum is that it does not produce anything. From my limited study of science, I know that everything is absent in a vacuum, and I think that is the way the government's policies are today. They are not effective at all.

Can the minister say whether the Farm Credit Corporation, as an arm of the government, is considering any alternative programs, apart from this 6 per cent, which is smoke and mirrors, has a lot of things wrong with it and does not deal with the problem? We need other ways to reduce the onerous interest rates that the Farm Credit Corporation is charging farmers today—interest rates of as high as 14 per cent—against young farmers like a neighbour of mine, Randy Verhagee, who is a good farmer, a very intelligent person, an excellent mechanic, a good producer and a hard worker. He bought not the most expensive land in the world, land selling for $300 per acre, but at 14 per cent interest he cannot make a go of it. Is there any other program under consideration that might reduce this onerous interest rate of 14 per cent?

I think it is usury if the taxpayers of Canada, through the Farm Credit Corporation, want to extract 14 per cent interest from young farmers.

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot discuss the affairs of individual borrowers, as my honourable friend seems to be in a position to do. I can say that the FCC interest rates have not changed since 1986. When commercial lending rates increased last summer and fall, the FCC did not increase its rates. Thus, its rates are currently still at or below commercial lending rates. The honourable senator says that the 6 per cent rate is smoke and mirrors.

Senator Argue: It is; that is right.

Senator Murray: I do not know what he means by that. This is a commodity-based loan program which provides loans at 6 per cent for ten years, albeit with payments linked to changes in commodity prices. If the honourable senator is seeking to debate FCC interest rates and the efficacy of FCC programs, he will have to find another time to do it, because this is the oral Question Period. In any case, I think that he and I would need more information.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I asked the Leader of the Government a very specific question: Is any additional consideration—put it in any way you like—now being given by the Farm Credit Corporation, or the government, to a reduction of the 14 per cent interest rate, or the type of interest rates I have talked about, apart from and in addition to the 6 per cent—which I could go on to explain, but it is pretty much a hoax? It is a hoax. It does not mean anything. It does not do anything. Anyway, the specific question is—and surely the minister can answer it: Is the government giving any consideration to any additional action by the Farm Credit Corporation to reduce the onerous interest rates, apart from the 6 per cent? That is a pretty fair question. I cannot see anything wrong with it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if there is a change in the policy of the government, or an announcement to be made by the FCC, that will be done in the usual way. I have no announcement in that regard to make to the Senate today.

Senator Argue: I guess from what the Leader of the Government has said there is no consideration at all being given for anything more—and that's terrible.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT PROPOSAL ON RATIFICATION FORMULA

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the reports of the failure of last night's federal-provincial consultative meeting on Canada-U.S. free trade to reach a consensus on a ratification formula, would the Leader of the Government inform the Senate as to what was the federal government's specific proposal for ratifying an agreement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the question of approval and implementation of an agreement was not even on the agenda last night. The First Ministers had agreed some time before, and I take it there was agreement last night, that the question of approval and implementation of a treaty, in practical terms, could only be discussed once we knew the shape of an agreement between Canada and the United States. So, that matter will not be addressed in any organized fashion before June or perhaps even September.

Senator Haidasz: Would the Leader of the Government at least tell us whether Quebec will be allowed to ratify any agreement between Canada and the U.S. on free trade before it becomes a signatory to the new Canadian Constitution?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not believe it is useful to mix the two issues. It is not at all clear, as I have said several times during the past week or ten days, that a ratification formula will be needed.

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—NATURE OF RATIFICATION INSTRUMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, does that mean that the government is not seeking a treaty with the United States on trade? Or is it seeking an executive agreement, which will not be a treaty?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we are seeking a treaty with the United States on trade. But it is our position, as I believe it is his, that the federal government has the authority to conclude such a treaty and that the conclusion of such a treaty by the Canadian government is not subject to provincial veto.

Senator Frith: That is on the American side.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, on that point of the congressional view, is it the expectation of the government that whatever results come about in the negotiations will be reflected at the October deadline in the form of a treaty between Canada and the United States?

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hesitate to enter into a detailed discussion of what may be the precise meaning of various legal terms. The fast-track procedure in the United States provides that Congress will have voted on this agreement very early in 1988. We have always spoken of what we propose as a treaty, a treaty to secure our access to that market well into the twenty-first century. If the honourable senator is making a distinction between an agreement and a treaty between the two governments, I would have to take counsel on the meaning of the various terms. We have always spoken of a treaty, and a treaty is what we are attempting to negotiate.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I find those comments reassuring, because it has been at least mentioned—I do not say by the government—that the results might be reflected in an executive agreement between Canada and the United States. I understand, with my very sparse knowledge of constitutional or international law, that an executive agreement would have a legal status different from that of a treaty.

That is why I asked the question about whether the conclusions would be reflected in what is described as an executive agreement, which in American law would lack the status of a treaty.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, our objective is a treaty to secure our access to that market and to put our bilateral trading arrangements on a secure basis into the next century.

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that a majority of the provinces have asked the federal government for a role in ratifying a Canada-United States trade agreement, I would like to know what the federal government's policy is on giving the provinces such a role.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know on what basis the honourable senator says that a majority of the provinces have asked for a role in ratifying a treaty. All provinces sought and have received assurances of full participation in the process. As I explained the other day, the First Ministers meet quarterly to receive a report from our chief negotiator and to renew his mandate. The trade ministers meet quarterly, or as often as they need to, to go into more detail. The continuing committee of trade officials from the federal government and the provinces hold two-hour conference calls after negotiating sessions to discuss what is going on at the negotiating table. There has never been an international negotiation in which the provinces have been more fully consulted or involved.

The question is: Will the cooperation of the provinces be required to implement a treaty? The answer is: Yes, to the extent that it engages their jurisdiction. Do the provinces have a veto over such a treaty? Our reply to that question is in the negative.

Senator Frith: No constitutional veto. But they can have an effective veto if provincial legislation is needed for implementation.

AGRICULTURE

VIABILITY OF SECTOR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I would like to return to the topic of the farm crisis in western Canada. It is a deep and threatening crisis to the farmers in western Canada, as it should be to non-farm Canadians all over the country. The Leader of the Government in the Senate talked about net farm income. We are told that the estimated loss in 1987 in Alberta for net farm income will be 27 per cent. I am not going to ask the Leader of the Government about specific programs but about something I and all farmers would like to hear this government tell us. Will this government tell Canadians and the international community that we are prepared to support the viability of our agricultural sector?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I remind the Senate that it was the present Prime Minister who, recognizing that the origin of many of the problems lies in international conditions, and specifically in the insane subsidy war taking place between the United States and the European Economic Community, succeeded in placing agriculture on the agenda for the Economic Summit. He did so after close consultation with farm organizations in this country, and we will continue to use that forum to try to obtain the concerted international action that is required on these problems.

At the preliminary GATT discussions in Punta del Este, Canada was successful in having agricultural subsidies, for the first time since World War II, made subject to discussions in some multilateral forum leading, we hope, to the acceptance of some international disciplines in this regard.

From the action we have taken, I think it is obvious that we are prepared to support the viability of our farm sector. The honourable senator knows as well as I do—and perhaps better than I—that Canada, as well as a number of other countries of our size and importance in this business, cannot compete in the subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community. That is why we are attempting to address these matters in international forums in an effort to bring about some concerted international action on the problems.

Senator Fairbairn: I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I accept the advances that our government and other western governments have made in bringing the question of agriculture and subsidies before international fora.

However, the farmers of Canada are not convinced that the government is now—not three years from now—prepared to do what it must to support that sector in terms of farmers who, at this moment, do not know whether they can seed a crop; farmers who, we are told, are selling their combines to buy seed and hoping that luck and the Lord will help them if their crop grows. We are talking about farmers who are described as being under chronic and dangerous stress. As my friend Senator Argue said yesterday, the suicide rate among farmers has tripled since 1981.

Yesterday I was asked a question by one of the delegates from the Agricultural Stability Action Committee, and I would like to pass that question on to the Leader of the Government and, through him, to the cabinet. That question is: If this government is not prepared to make commitments now that will ensure the survival of our farmers in the next year, what are the contingency plans to deal with the inevitable depression that will follow in the agricultural sector?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can only take the statements of the honourable senator, which concluded with a hypothetical question, and convey them to my colleagues in the cabinet.

JUSTICE

CANADA COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ON WAR CRIMINALS— IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, the federal government has spent $4 million on the Canada Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals which, in turn, has spent two years investigating the problem and has come out with a 966-page report.

● (1430)

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the federal government has the political will to implement the recommendations contained in the Deschênes commission report, and, if so, what funds for the fiscal year commencing April, 1987, it has allocated for the implementation of those recommendations?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as to whether the federal government has the political will to implement the recommendations contained in the Deschênes commission report, I can tell the honourable senator that in a statement made by my colleague, the Minister of Justice, this morning, the government's intention to act on a number of important recommendations contained in that report was stated in quite a forthright manner, and the government's decision not to act on, or to reject several of the recommendations, was also stated.

Insofar as resources are concerned, the government has made it clear that it is prepared to do whatever is necessary through the Department of Justice and the RCMP to provide whatever resources, financial or human, are needed to bring about the apprehension and prosecution of any war criminals who may still be in Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is it the intention of the government to amend any existing laws or to create new laws to deal with the matter of war criminals?

Senator Murray: The answer to that question is in the affirmative. In particular, recommendations were made by the Honourable Mr. Justice Deschênes for various amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada, and various changes to the Citizenship Act or the Immigration Act and regulations. The government has undertaken to proceed with some of these changes.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

NEGOTIATION OF COALMINERS' CONTRACT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, two or three weeks ago the federal government made moneys available to the Sydney Steel Corporation for the modernization and rejuvenation of its plant. Mr. Callaghan, President of Sydney Steelworkers' Union 1064, met the Prime Minister, along with a great many other steelworkers, at the Sydney airport to express his personal gratitude and the gratitude of the steelworkers. I should also like to express my gratitude to the Prime Minister for that.

That leads up to the following question: Workers of the Cape Breton Development Corporation do not have a contract at the moment. The last proposed contract was rejected. There have been some discussions with the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, Mr. Derek Rance. Has Mr. Rance now decided that he is going to meet with the coalminers and start bargaining?

I am pleased to know that the steelworkers have had their dispute settled; now I would like something done for the coalminers. Will Mr. Rance meet with the United Mine Workers Union, its president, Mr. Joe Burke, and his executive and get back to the table and get these negotiations started, as the minister, Mr. Côté, has suggested, or is Mr. Rance going to continue saying: "Well, I shall continue to deal with six or seven other unions before I get back to you people."?

Is the leader in a position to tell us whether this will be expedited so that this problem is settled and another contract is signed, thus enabling that segment of the workers on Cape Breton Island to have peace of mind?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am aware of the problem. My honourable colleague helpfully arranged for me to see representatives of the United Mine Workers Union, District 26, when I was in Cape Breton for the opening of the Canada Winter Games.

I am also aware that the Department of Labour has done some mediation in this dispute.

I do not know whether a date has been set for returning to the negotiating table, but I shall undertake to determine that from Mr. Côté.

Senator Muir: I have a supplementary question. I appreciate what the leader has said, and I thank him for that, but would he, no later than today, have someone get in touch with Mr. Côté so that someone can then get in touch with Mr. Derek Rance and ask him to get busy down there so that the coalminers will know that they have someone they can work with in an effort to get a contract and get this settled?

Senator Murray: I will certainly convey the honourable senator's representations to my colleague as soon as I get out of here.

THE CABINET

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST INQUIRIES—ASSUMPTION OF MINISTERS' LEGAL COSTS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senator, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Yesterday the President of the Treasury Board tabled supplementary estimates (C) for the financial year ending March 31, 1987. Those supplementary estimates contained a second tranche for payment for the Sinclair Stevens inquiry, a very large tranche.

My question is not a new one; it is this: Does the government have a settled policy with regard to the payment of counsel for ministers who, one way or another, become involved in similar inquiries as a result of an alleged breach of conflict-of-interest guidelines, and, if there are not now rules with regard to the compensation of counsel, are such rules being developed, and, if so, when will they be made public?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will inquire as to whether there is a settled policy or whether there are guidelines on the matter. There are precedents—and the problem with precedents of this kind is that no two cases are exactly alike—but there are precedents for the government to pay counsel.

Senator Stewart: Perhaps when the Leader of the Government in the Senate is giving his response, he will let us know the precedents which exist where the Crown has paid the expenses of a minister involved in an alleged breach of conflict-of-interest guidelines situation such as that which prevails here.

THE JUDICIARY

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON JUDGES' SALARIES AND BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, while I am on my feet, may I ask if the government has yet formulated its response to the report and recommendations of the 1986 Commission on Judges' Salaries and Benefits?

It is contended that judges need an ample increase in salaries, because without such an increase it will be difficult for the government to attract to the bench suitable lawyers, because they already make such fabulously large salaries in private practice—presumably as a result of acting as counsel on inquiries and other such activities.

• (1440)

What does the government propose to do with regard to implementing the recommendations of the 1986 commission?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am sure Mr. Guthrie's report will be taken under advisement by the government, and a decision will be announced in due course.

[Later]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

OFFICE OF PRESIDENT—STATUS OF INCUMBENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I follow up on a question with respect to Devco asked by Senator Muir?

I noted several days ago that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, Mr. Côté, said that he was reviewing the performance of Devco, including the management. I also noted that the United Mine Workers, in a meeting with the minister, are reported to have requested a new president at Devco.

My question is: What are the plans of the government for the presidency of Devco? Is it intended to continue with Mr. Rance, or is there a change to be made?

NATIONAL STATISTICS COUNCIL

MEMBERSHIP—REGIONAL REPRESENTATION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

On the calling of Delayed Answers:

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, at this stage of the order paper, could I draw to the attention of the Deputy Leader of the Government that on October 9 last I drew to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate that the minister responsible for Statistics Canada had just formed a National Statistics Council which would advise the Chief Statistician of Canada? I also drew to your attention that there were some shortcomings in the regional and provincial representation. Then, on October 28, the Deputy Leader of the Government filed a reply which stated that:

The concerns raised by the senator have been brought to the attention of the minister responsible for Statistics Canada. The minister is looking into ways to rectify the situation.

Could the Leader of the Government perhaps make a further inquiry—almost five months have passed now—to see whether any steps have been taken to correct the regional representation on this board?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, subject to correction, I thought I heard the other day that some further appointments to that council are imminent.

Senator McElman: I shall check it. I hope you will, too.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS— QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I would like to raise a question of privilege before we go to Orders of the Day. I think I could do this under rule 33—but I am not terribly sure about that.

There is a considerable delay, as you know, between the holding of our committee meetings and the publishing of the proceedings. I realize that a committee is looking into this question, but it does hamper our ability to operate in an efficient way in carrying out the work that we are trying to do.

[Senator MacEachen.]

I would like to give as an example, because it is a current one, the situation concerning our Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. I received today my first copy of the proceedings resulting from the hearings held on the subject matter of Bill C-37, the Softwood Lumber Export Charge Act. The meeting took place on February 11, 1987, if I remember correctly, and it is only today, over a month later, that I received the printed proceedings. It is absolutely useless to receive it at this time. If we had been studying an actual bill rather than the subject matter, it would have been through all its stages by now.

I also have in my hand today, for the first time, the second proceedings of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee's study of the subject matter. Those meetings were held on Wednesday, February 18, and Thursday, February 19; so that is only a delay of three weeks.

I know that this has been a problem for years and years. So I decided to see what they were doing in the other place. I sent for the reports of whatever the relevant committee is in the House of Commons. I received those reports and they are on my desk here. But if they had to be sent to Vancouver Island, British Columbia, by Canada Post as first class mail, forget it! As it is, copies were sent to me there a week ago Tuesday; they still had not arrived when I left on Monday morning, although I received Monday's mail before I left.

Now, if you take into account the postal service—and don't forget that we were adjourned for two weeks—as well as the unacceptable delay between our hearings and the production of the committee proceedings, how on earth can we keep up with the work that we are expected to do here, and how can we expect to have available the information that is so necessary for committee members?

I will not make a motion under rule 33, but is there any way that we can improve efficiency, even if it means increases in staff and equipment? Perhaps such an increase would expedite the production of the printed proceedings. I think it is awfully important.

The Hon. the Speaker: If I may respond to the honourable senator as chairman of the Internal Economy Committee, I shall provide a report some time next week which will address the concerns of the senator.

Senator Bell: Thank you, Your Honour.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Barootes, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle, for the second reading of the Bill C-12, An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.—(Honourable Senator Olson P.C.)

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I moved the adjournment of this debate yesterday because there are a number of things that I want to draw to the attention of the Senate, and particularly to the attention of the sponsor of this bill and the Leader of the Government in the Senate, respecting the crisis in agriculture that is, apparently, unknown to honourable senators opposite. If it is unknown to them, I think we have an obligation to draw it to their attention in the most forceful way that we can.

I also wanted to say a few words on this bill because of the introductory remarks of Senator Barootes when he moved second reading. I know Senator Barootes well. I know that he is sincere and does not intend to mislead this house, or to make statements that are in any way deceptive. I am not blaming him for some of the figures that he quoted in his speech, because I have seen them before. As a matter of fact, some of the figures that he used, namely, that this government has passed out $5.1 billion in the last two years to agriculture all over Canada and that $3.2 billion of that has been made available to western agriculture, I have seen before, because the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, sent a letter to the Calgary Herald containing all of those figures, and they devoted a whole page to them. What annoys me more than anything else is that the figures, as they are presented, do not represent the truth. I think that Senator Barootes understands that, and yet it was put forward that these programs were introduced by this Conservative government since they took office.

• (1450)

Senator Barootes: I never said that.

Senator Olson: I will tell the honourable senator what he did say. He can find this at page 589 of Debates of the Senate. He said:

This kind of approach characterizes the government's record when it comes to agriculture. This government has made available $3.2 billion of Canadian revenue in assistance to western grain farmers and $5.1 billion on agriculture in its first two years in office . . .

What does "Canadian revenue" mean in that context? If it means that that much money was taken out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and passed out in several programs to western Canadian agriculture, that is simply not true. The government did not take that much money out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund; rather, for example, it took $1.4 billion that was in reserves in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund.

Yesterday I asked the honourable senator how this was made up and he replied:

Here are the figures based on one year only: Western Grain Stabilization Act, $859 million; . . .

I agree that that is correct. The $1.4 billion for the two years is what was in the reserve fund that had been built up by the previous government and by farmers' payments into that fund. He went on to say:

. . . Agricultural Stabilization Act, $55.8 million; . . .

I agree that that was a transfer out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for that year. He then went on to say:

. . . Crop Insurance Act, $320 million; . . .

That is just not true. Farmers pay into that fund.

Senator Barootes: But the figure is correct.

Senator Olson: I do not know whether the figure is correct or not, and neither, apparently, does he. I can tell him that the reason I cannot get the exact figure is because the Crop Insurance Fund is not paid out of the federal treasury at all; it is paid by the provinces' crop insurance administration. The federal government pays 50 per cent of the premium and the farmers pay the other 50 per cent. It is then paid over to the crop insurance administration in each of the provinces and then the claims by the farmers or the producers are made to those administrations. The amount of money that was paid to the farmers may be $320 million or it may be some other figure, but I also know that there was a very large reserve in the crop insurance funds in many of the provinces, which reserve was contributed to by farmers and by the federal government in previous years.

What we have, honourable senators, is government by deception.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Argue: It is a hoax.

Senator Olson: Senator Argue is right, what you are trying to say to the Canadian people about what you are doing for Canadian agriculture is a hoax. If it were not doing a lot of damage to the agriculture sector, I would probably let it pass, but it is. A few minutes ago Senator Argue mentioned that you can talk urban people and those outside the area of agriculture into believing that you are paying all this money to agriculture out of taxpayers' money or out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but you do a terrible disservice to farmers and to agriculture when you make that kind of a pretence.

Agriculture needs and deserves some consideration in terms of the amount of money you claim you have taken out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but it is not getting it. As I mentioned a few minutes ago during Question Period, organizations are springing up because the credit crisis of farmers is so serious now that even long-term farmers who had been stable over many years are now being affected by what this government is doing and has done to them. I am referring to what they have done by both commission and omission; and omission is the more serious.

I can tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that there is nothing new about this. Farmers are starting to realize that every time the Tories are in office for a little while their whole economy collapses. In 1930, when R.B. Bennett was elected, we went into the worst depression. And, of course, it is always somebody else's fault! However, I can tell you that the distress that occurred in Canada was worse in the prairies than in any other part of the country. The next Conservative government that came into office, "Diefenbaker and Company", found exactly the same kind of results two or three years after they had been in office. I remember 1961 and 1962 as being one of the most difficult periods farmers have experienced over the past 30 years.

Now we have the same situation again. When Conservatives have been in office for a couple of years, you find that the depression that overtakes the agricultural community reaches desperation point.

I know that a lot of criticism was levelled at the previous government, but you cannot find any farmer in western Canada today who would not trade what he had under the previous government for what he has today.

Senator Murray: I will get you some quotations on exactly that point.

Senator Olson: We would like to have some, and we would also like to have some action.

Senator Argue: You will need all you can get.

Senator Barootes: The farmers did not vote for your party in the last two provincial elections.

Senator Olson: You are absolutely right. I know that every generation seems to have to learn the same lesson about the consequences of the election of a Conservative government, and, believe me, they are learning it now in spades.

The other day I asked the Leader of the Government when the government will make an announcement so that farmers can have some idea of what the initial payment for grain is going to be. He said that it would probably be done by the middle of April. For my own benefit, I checked the practice of the past, because I seem to recall that years ago the announcement was made just before the new crop year, which begins on August 1. There was a change in policy about 18 years or so ago. We were going to move the date of the announcement back so that it would be made early enough in the year so that farmers would know in advance what the possible Canadian Wheat Board price for any particular grain, whether it be wheat, oats, barley or whatever, might be.

As a matter of fact, it was also determined at that time that the initial price would be the floor price. In other words, if a deficit showed up in those pools, it would be paid by the federal treasury rather than by going to the farmers and asking them to repay some money. That happened this year. I think it is about $200 million in deficit from the initial payments that were made for this crop year.

Moving the announcement to a date earlier in the year was done to give farmers and their banks, credit unions, and so on, some indication so that they could make arrangements for the credit they needed to seed the crops. Why was it put off to the middle of April, which is far too late for any part of the southern prairies? One of the reasons for my concern is that the Leader of the Government apparently does not understand that the farmers have to know in March whether they will get enough credit to purchase the seed, chemicals to treat the seed, herbicides and all of the other necessary supplies. In case he does not know, spring arrives in the southern prairies around the first part of April. Farmers need to make those arrangements a little earlier than that. I hope that some action will be taken in this regard.

[Senator Olson.]

• (1500)

This year it is highly likely that the amount of initial payment is going to be all the farmers will get for their crops. I know there is some risk involved in that. But when the price has already declined by approximately 35 to 40 per cent since this government took office, surely it can screw up enough courage to do something to assist these farmers.

Senator Frith: They screw up everything else, so why not?

Senator Olson: That's right, they screw up everything else.

Senator Argue: Be careful now—or don't be careful!

Senator Olson: I hope that the Leader of the Government understands the gravity of the situation and that he will inform his colleagues of it so that something can be done. There is nothing hypothetical or probable about it—it is a fact that the farmers are going to their bankers now and are being turned away because they are unable to give the banks and credit unions any solid evidence of what their income may be. We do not know what the price is going to be. The government will have to decide. The projected revenue is the basis upon which farmers can get credit for operating expenses, so the amount of the initial payment is critical for all of the grain producers. I want to repeat that the release of this information in the middle of April is not satisfactory. It is too late then.

I want to make one other point regarding Senator Barootes' claim that this government has made available $3.2 billion of Canadian revenue in assistance to western grain farmers. I presume that that amount includes the billion dollars in the Special Canadian Grains Program. We have only just received Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year 1987-88 for $700 million of that program. Those estimates were studied in the National Finance Committee this morning. That money has not been paid out yet, because the government does not yet have authority to pay it out. There is some deception in this. Why was that amount not put in the main estimates? I do not understand why not. We knew weeks ago that it was to be $700 million, or at least the government claimed to have known it because it announced that there would be $1 billion paid out, about 30 per cent in the first tranche and 70 per cent later on. The $700 million in Supplementary Estimates (A) is the second tranche, and the authority will be given to pay it out some time in May.

It is this sort of deception that is going on. Anyone who is familiar with how these estimates are put together can understand why it is being done this way—it is so that the Main Estimates that were presented in the other place by the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. de Cotret, could be $700 million less. If the government knew what the amount was going to be, it should have put it into the Main Estimates. Who are you trying to fool? This is going to catch up to you. It does constitute government by deception, trying to make things appear to be something other than what they really are.

Senator Barootes: Does the senator believe that this money will not be paid?

Senator Olson: I believe it will be paid, there is no question about that, but why come along with provision for it in Supplementary Estimates (A) when the Main Estimates were tabled only a few days ago? I think the government is trying to deceive people with this sort of tactic. If the $700 million had been included in the Main Estimates, it would have increased government spending over the magic $30 billion deficit figure. That is probably the reason for this amount appearing in the supplementary estimates, because there is no other explanation for it. Some argument has been advanced that the government wanted twelve twelfths of it rather than three twelfths, which would be the interim supply between now and when the Main Estimates are passed in June. But any amount of that can always be reserved, so the debate could go on.

At any rate, I think this demonstrates the point I was trying to make with the sponsor of this bill, that to adopt the legislation with these figures and say that $3.2 billion of Canadian revenue has been paid out in assistance to farmers constitutes government by deception. That statement is simply not true. I realize that these figures were provided to the honourable senator and that all of the background detail was provided with them, and I am not blaming him for this. I am, however, blaming the government for trying to pull the wool over our eyes with that sort of statement. More important, I hope that the government will take seriously how desperate the situation is so that it will allow farmers to get on with what they have to do to survive. I hope that we will not have any more of this kind of garbage peddled around western Canada and in this chamber. I hope that the government will stick to the facts and come up with some programs that are useful and of assistance to the farmers so that they can obtain the credit they need to survive.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I must advise honourable senators that if Senator Barootes speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I am pleased that such eminent and experienced senators from the other side of the house have undertaken to speak on this debate yesterday and today. Senator Argue is the former Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board. Senator Olson, of course, is a past Minister of Agriculture of the federal government and has had numerous posts of that nature.

Senator Doody: An economic czar!

Senator Barootes: I am particularly pleased that Senator Argue gave his unqualified blessing to the amendments in this bill.

Senator Frith: Did he give unqualified approval?

Senator Barootes: Indeed, he did. The amendments, of course, are housekeeping—they are not major changes. They will make it easier to remove some red tape and administrative entanglements so as to allow hard pressed farmers to gain access—temporarily, if you will—to cash for their stored grain on the prairies. It is going to match the provisions of the Advance Payment for Crops Act which is working so successfully in other parts of the country.

• (1510)

However, I must take umbrage. In the figures that I supplied yesterday in answer to Senator Olson's questions for the dollar amounts that were being made available—I think the term I used was "being made available"—at no time when using the term "Canadian revenue" did I use the words "Consolidated Revenue Fund", which have been placed in my mouth by the honourable senator on the other side of the house. He should get a dictionary and find out the definition of "revenue". Webster's dictionary does not refer to "Consolidated Revenue Fund". The word "revenue" means sums of money coming into an organization. And at no time did I claim that it was anything but the people's money. That admission was made. Those dollars are contributed in some part by farmers and in a large part by Canadian governments—and when I said "Canadian governments," I also corrected that to say that it goes back to the time of Jimmy Gardiner, George Diefenbaker and, for that matter, Alvin Hamilton when we are speaking of the sums that are being made available to the hard-pressed farmers.

I take umbrage when someone suggests that I doctor figures. That is a little embarrassing. I find it a little damaging to my reputation to suggest that I would try to deceive anyone with the use of figures. I am hurt that the honourable senator on the opposite side refers to such statements as being misleading. I do not cherish his remarks that I am doctoring figures. As a matter of fact, I am grateful that no one in this house should ever accuse me of being a Doctor of Agitation.

As much as others in this chamber, I too enjoy good theatre; but I have no intention of trying to match the emotional, spectacular and regular performances of some of my senator friends on the opposite side of the house.

Senator Argue: I think it would be much better.

Senator Barootes: I find it preferable to try to deal, as I do in a modest way, in logical, reasoned statistical facts and to bring them to your attention for discussion. There is one other misconception that must be cleared up. I was hurt when I heard someone on the other side of the house say that they must educate us, on this side of the house, in the dire straits being suffered by the farmers of western Canada. Indeed, we suffer as much as anyone. No one in this house with eyes, ears, or the ability to listen, should ever make the mistake to think that the farm community of western Canada is doing well. Indeed, we are doing very poorly. And federal, provincial and other governments are doing whatever their purse will allow to assist in what is, indeed, a most dangerous and difficult time—and whether it comes in the time of a Conservative government—

An Hon. Senator: It always does.

Senator Barootes: —or a Liberal government—

Senator Frith: It never does.

Senator Barootes: —or anyone else, it doesn't matter. Recalling my life on the prairies, I think that about the worst time was the period between 1935 and 1939, 1937 being a particularly destructive year. I do not identify who was in power at the time, except to say that drought, grasshoppers, infestation and blowing winds gave us a very bad time.

I can give the honourable senator another figure to think about, if anyone believes that we do not recognize the sufferings of our farmers. Suffer with them? We die with them. When I was in practice, most of my patients were farmers—and most of them were older farmers who had gone through the depression. If the honourable senator takes the cost of living index as it was originally established, from 1932 to 1935, and updates it to the different changes that were made when we went back to 100, started over again, and then again brought it back to 100—two or three times—and if he considers the lowest price that was paid for wheat in Canada, which I believe would be about 1932 or 1933—the extrapolation of such figures might be a little managed, or not be fully comparable, because other things have been put into the cost of living index—I would suggest that the price of wheat this last year was at least as low as it was in that worst period of time. That is why I say that honourable senators opposite have no exclusive monopoly on identifying with the suffering of the farm people of western Canada. We also suffer with them.

Therefore, I take umbrage at the idea that we have to be preached and lectured to about what farmers are going through in western Canada.

Senator Olson: You are in office. You can do something about it.

Senator Barootes: The honourable senator spoke about the new Grains Assistance Act. We are all aware of the figures. We are all aware of the 30 per cent and 70 per cent, and that money will be paid out; but there are certain calculations and administrative matters to be taken care of first. By March 31 each farmer, acting on his own behalf as a recipient of this benefit, must make an application providing certain information from his own books—grain stored and sold, and so on—and it is on that basis that the administration can then undertake to make payments.

I hope, as I have some experience in the west, that we do not do seeding on April 1 in too many areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta. As honourable senators know, much of it is done in May, and even right into June.

Senator Olson brought up the matter of crop insurance. I am well aware of where the money for crop insurance comes from. Some is contributed by the farmers on a per bushel basis and the rest is contributed by the federal government, and it is paid out by the provincial governments on the basis that it is easier to administer it at the provincial level. The provincial governments absorb only the administration costs of doing that work. That is why it is left at the provincial level.

But surely the honourable senator would not in one instance accuse the federal government of using farmers' money and pretending it is their own, and on that basis try to tell me that it is provincial money that is being paid out from crop insurance simply because it comes out of an administrative office in Regina, Calgary or Edmonton. Obviously, the money represents crop insurance contributed to by both parties.

So I bring to honourable senators my hurt feelings about this. I do not think it helps to bring forward dire and gloomy circumstances, predictions, and almost making the wish the father to the thought, that things in western Canada are going to be that bad. I am afraid they will be, but we are not helping ourselves by doing that. I will leave the honourable senator with one challenge. If he looks at these 52 pages, he will see, leading up to July 22, 1986, the amount of dollars, $5.18 billion, which has been made available and provided to the Canadian agriculture industry through the Canadian government. And when I say the Canadian government, I do not mean the Progressive Conservative government, because it has indeed been built up through all administrations. But I will say this as a challenge to you, and I would be willing to take my chances on it: That in the 120 years of Confederation, which is what we are at today, no other Government of Canada has given more attention, more care, or more sensitivity to the needs of the agricultural sector of our economy and of the grain farmers of western Canada.

• (1520)

Senator Olson: They have never been worse off, either.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, speaking to the motion, are we not going to send the bill to committee?

Senator Argue: No.

Senator Olson: I do not think it is necessary.

Senator Frith: I knew that if I asked the question I would get an immediate answer from my colleagues.

Senator Doody: What a warm feeling!

On motion of Senator Barootes, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, for the second reading of the Bill C-39, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Kenny).

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, my concern with the proposed amendments to the Canada Shipping Act relates to the legal requirement to have masters present on offshore drilling rigs when they are drilling. The previous act and the earlier proposed Bill C-75 specifically excluded offshore drilling rigs from the requirement of having masters on board and in charge. The situation at present is unsatisfactory inasmuch as offshore drilling rigs are required by law to have masters on board only when in transit to and from the drilling site and not when they are operating. In light of the "Ocean Ranger" disaster, this would appear to be a significant oversight. However, after making inquiries with the industry, I gather that there are informal guidelines in place, without the force of law, which require masters to be on board and in charge at all times, and that this has become standard industry practice. Further inquiries with COGLA and with the Ministry of Transport have reassured me that the current guidelines will be incorporated into regulations under the proposed act once it is passed. If this is the case, I would be in favour of the proposed legislation being referred to committee as soon as it is convenient.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in the absence of Senator Finlay MacDonald, I would like to say that the points raised by Senator Kenny are worthy of consideration. I agree that it might be appropriate to refer the bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

With that understanding, on behalf of Senator MacDonald, I move second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

UNION OR ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hazen Argue rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 10, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada; the support for such action among Turks and Caicos Islanders and Canadians; and whether any of the following steps might be usefully taken prior to a formal union or association:—

- (1) adoption of a common currency;
- (2) designation of Canada's Governor General as the Queen's representative for the Islands;

- (3) a closer economic association between the two countries;

- (4) any change in procedures to our mutual advantage that would assist the entry of Canadians to the Islands, and of Islanders to Canada; and

- (5) provision of efficient direct air service between the two countries.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak to this inquiry that stands in my name. I think it is important. I think it is far reaching. I think it is constructive, and I think it holds great promise for an initiative that would be to the advantage of some 8,000 or so citizens of the Turks and Caicos Islands and to some 26 million Canadians. I was honoured to receive an indication from Senator Macquarrie that he is prepared to second this motion, if I may put it that way, and to support the inquiry. When the appropriate time comes, I expect that a motion will be made referring this matter to committee, presumably the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Senator Doody: Let's do it by a Committee of the Whole, and we can all go down there!

Senator Argue: I think we will get general support whether it is done by one method or another. I guess Committee of the Whole would be fine. We could bring in all kinds of witnesses. It might have the greatest amount of support in the Committee of the Whole that we have ever seen, because sometimes in the Committee of the Whole there is not exactly complete agreement on both sides.

• (1530)

I put this inquiry forward believing that it is an important question that goes far beyond partisan politics. Gaining the support of Senator Macquarrie—and he has been a veteran in supporting this question—indicates to me that in the Senate it will have support—and I hope unanimous support—from members of both parties in the Senate, Conservative and Liberal, and also from those who list themselves as independent. Also, the history of the discussion of this idea suggests that the New Democratic Party is likely to give it support, and, therefore, I think it bodes well if the whole issue is handled carefully and with great sensitivity, and that the interests, above all, of the Turks and Caicos Islanders are given the first and most important consideration.

This initiative on my part in dealing with this subject is not new. I became interested in this question approximately 14 years ago, and I think the same can be said for Senator Macquarrie. Senator Macquarrie brings to this subject experience in international questions and international affairs. He also brings to bear on this subject an inquiring and academic mind. Over the years Senator Macquarrie has built for himself an extensive reputation as a Canadian who can look at international questions in an objective and constructive manner and come forward with ideas and proposals that are helpful to the international community. Therefore, I anticipate with pleasure the remarks that Senator Macquarrie will make on this subject, whenever he feels that he can participate in this debate.

My wife and I have had the pleasure of visiting the Turks and Caicos Islands on two separate occasions. We went there on our own initiative. I was not able to attach myself to a parliamentary committee! However, the important thing from my point of view was that I was able to go to the islands and become acquainted with the situation there. When representatives from the Turks and Caicos Islands came to Canada, I was greatly honoured to meet with them in the company of Senator George McIlraith. I think all of us who have had the privilege of knowing Senator McIlraith over the years will agree with me that he is a man with a very practical and constructive outlook. When Senator McIlraith supported an association between Canada and the Turks and Caicos Islands, that suggested to me that, then as now, I was travelling in very good company.

I had the privilege to visit the islands in 1978. At that time Liam Maguire, who may be known to some of you, was a minister in the islands. He was also a pilot and he had a little plane and invited me to go along on a flight. We touched down at all of the airports—approximately six of them—on the various islands, and in a very short time I was able to get a pretty good idea of the population and the economic situation on the various islands.

This is an area of the world with a long history. The people in the Turks and Caicos Islands think there is good reason to believe that Columbus touched there for the initial discovery. In any event, the Spanish explorer, Ponce de Leon, came to those islands in 1512. He was, of course, the explorer who discovered Florida.

This is a wonderful place in many ways. The Turks and Caicos Islands cover only a small area amounting to some 166 square miles. The climate is as near perfect as one could order, because, as far as I could tell, every single day of the year was a really good day, certainly as far as temperature was concerned. We stayed at the main hotel on Grand Turk Island. They probably have air conditioning now in the majority of the rooms, but when we were there there was no air conditioning and no artificial heat. Our room had doors on both sides. There were a couple of little fans in the room, and the room was very comfortable both day and night. The temperature varies between 70 degrees and 90 degrees fahrenheit consistently, both winter and summer. I remember talking to a citizen of the islands and asking him if he had ever experienced any cold weather, and this is what he said: "Yes, I have been here when it has been really cold. I remember a time when the temperature went down to 60 degrees." So, compared to Canada, or even Florida, I suppose that would really be a paradise, weather-wise, because the temperatures are excellent.

In recent years there has been a major improvement in airport facilities. The islands now have three airports that can accommodate Boeing 737 jet aircraft. I am informed that the L1011 can also land at these airports. In earlier times when I was there, only turbo-prop planes landed on the islands, so that has been a major step forward.

[Senator Argue.]

The Turks and Caicos Islands are small. The population is nearly all black. They are a very pleasant and hospitable people. On Grand Turk Island, which has the largest population of any of the islands, the children go to school clean and attractively dressed, and it is heartwarming to see the Canadian flag flying, just put up there in an informal way by some of the school children or some of the townspeople. The people in those islands think Canada is really something special, and there is a great deal of goodwill towards our country.

The industries, of course, are limited. There is a lobster industry, and the production and sale of conch is important. A standard soup on the island, which is really delicious, is conch chowder. There are no forests.

● (1540)

There is a little, but not a great deal of, agricultural production. The main industry, if one can call it that, is the tourist industry. That has been increasing. There have been reports of up to 20,000 visitors annually in recent years. It seems to me that it is an area one could look to for great and important developments in the future.

The Senate, in a limited way, has had some dealings with people from the Turks and Caicos Islands. On February 16, 1978, Senator Perrault stated:

Honourable senators, I know you will wish to join me in extending a warm Canadian welcome to two distinguished visitors in our gallery today. I should like to introduce the Honourable C.W. Maguire, Minister of Tourism and Development of Industries and Resources, Turks and Caicos Islands, and his colleague, Mr. Herbert Been, Vice-Chairman of the People's Democratic Movement, Turks and Caicos Islands. These gentlemen are on an informal visit to our capital. We are delighted to have them with us.

I added a few words in welcoming them and in recalling that I had been to the Turks and Caicos Islands and had had an opportunity to enjoy the hospitality of those islands.

Mr. Liam Maguire, who was a leading member of the Turks and Caicos Islands administration at that time, came to our home in Ottawa one evening to show us a film he had of the Turks and Caicos Islands. Max Saltzman, M.P., who had a bill in this regard before the House of Commons, was invited. We had a rather pleasant evening with Mr. Maguire and his colleague, Mr. Been.

On March 15, 1973, the State Council of the Turks and Caicos Islands passed a lengthy motion pointing out the advantages they saw from a close association with Canada. If honourable senators agree, I ask that that motion be printed in Hansard at this point. I think honourable senators will find that motion interesting. It is too long for me to impose a word-by-word reading of it on honourable senators at this time. If honourable senators agree, I would ask that that be done.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Argue: It reads as follows:

"BE IT RESOLVED AND MADE KNOWN THAT:

The State Council of the Turks and Caicos Islands desires to thank formally the Canadian People and their Government for the considerable help and advice received by these Islands from them in recent years.

This State Council, recognising the urgent need for both long and short term solutions to our present constitutional, financial and economic problems, further resolves that it would welcome additional professional and technical advice from both governmental and non-governmental organisations so that we may benefit from your long and loyal membership of the British Commonwealth.

In particular, this State Council would welcome far greater official contact between our two governments and herewith cordially invite a Canadian Parliamentary Delegation to visit these Islands and advise us during these days of decision."

And to the fact that, from time to time, both before and after the passage of this Resolution, there have been discussions between a number of Senators, Members of the House of Commons and representatives of the State Council of the Turks and Caicos Islands, and that members of that Council have expressed the following:

"(a) The need for a new Constitution caused by the independence of the Bahamas and the desire for greater internal self-government.

(b) The need to establish a new relationship with Britain and the Commonwealth now that Britain has entered the European Community.

(c) The need to work out a practical relationship with the United States Government over such matters as immigration, bases agreement, use of Grand Turk airstrip and currency restrictions.

(d) The need for a long-term (30-year) plan for the economic development of these Islands so that the short "Three Year Plans" can fit into a meaningful pattern and so that they can establish a sensible order of priorities.

(e) The need to find many more job opportunities for the rapidly increasing work force which is leaving school or returning from the Bahamas—and who are finding it very difficult to migrate or to find suitable jobs at home.

(f) The need for the Islands to develop new and reliable markets and industries to supplement the present dangerous dependence on fishing and ephemeral tourism.

(g) The need to find additional sources of finance, capital funding and expertise so that the basic infrastructural requirements can be met more quickly and more efficiently than at present."

And that members of the Council have stated that by becoming closely associated with Canada the Islands would obtain the following advantages:

"(1) much greater internal self government at a "Provincial" or "Territorial" level, but within the framework of Canadian federal laws and regulations. They would become an integral part of a major world political unit.

The Canadian Governor General and the Federal Courts of Appeal would be shared with the Islands.

(2) The Islands would utilise the Canadian dollar.

(3) As Canadian citizens, the Islands would acquire a completely different relationship with other members of the Commonwealth and the world. They would have the benefit of the Canadian diplomatic services which are well established in the neighbouring countries and they would cease to be unwanted British Colonials and a burden on the British taxpayer. At present, the British passports give them no right to migrate or to work in Britain.

(4) The Islands would benefit from the very close relationship that Canada has with the United States.

(5) The economic future of these Islands would be rapidly integrated into that of Canada. Canada has no warm southern states and suffers some of the worst winters in the world. These Islands would naturally attract the Canadian winter vacationist and the retirement couples who wish to invest their savings, earned elsewhere, in seasonal homes. The geographical position of these Islands will probably be developed by those Canadian manufacturers who need a Caribbean showcase and entrepot facilities. Canadian airlines could become "domestic" airlines with the ability to quote preferential tariffs.

(6) The educational system would become Canadian and it should then be far easier to obtain places in Canadian universities and trade and professional institutions. Employment opportunities and the spectrum of jobs would increase far beyond those of these small Islands with their small population.

(7) As a Canadian tropical Province or Territory, the Islands would be able to tap a "domestic" tourist market.

(8) The Canadian Government has a long tradition of helping underdeveloped countries and communities. They have well established governmental agencies, development funds and professional consultancy firms who have worked throughout the world."

And that in considering this association the following steps should be taken:

"(1) Visits by parliamentary and governmental delegations.

(2) Acceptance of Canadian dollar as basis for currency.

(3) Appointment of Governor General of Canada as Governor of Turks and Caicos Islands.

(4) Establishment of Canadian banks and financial institutions.

(5) Encouragement of Canadian investment in tourist facilities and industry.

As it is stated in that motion:

(3) As Canadian citizens, the Islands would acquire a completely different relationship with other members of the Commonwealth and the world. They would have the benefit of the Canadian diplomatic services which are well established in the neighbouring countries and they would cease to be unwanted British Colonials and a burden on the British taxpayer.

The motion further states:

These Islands would naturally attract the Canadian winter vacationist and the retirement couples who wish to invest their savings, earned elsewhere, in seasonal homes.

It further states:

The educational system would become Canadian and it should then be far easier to obtain places in Canadian universities and trade and professional institutions.

I think that situation continues today. The motion goes on to state:

Employment opportunities and the spectrum of jobs would increase far beyond those of these small Islands with their small population.

Education in the high schools on those islands today, I understand, goes to grade 11.

They would like to have the Governor General of Canada as the Governor of the Turks and Caicos Islands.

When those representatives came to Ottawa, they said that they wanted to accept the Canadian dollar as their currency. In the meantime, since they were using their native currency, they had hoped the Royal Canadian Mint would produce their currency.

So they are affable people. They are friendly and would like to work with us. I think the possibility that they might, step by step, become part of this nation is very exciting.

One can always raise impediments, objections and problems, but my view of life is that the impediments, the objections and the problems, no matter what they may be, do not constitute sufficient reason to say it cannot be done. Whatever the arguments, objections or problems that may be raised, those can be dealt with and resolved. I believe we can achieve a much higher and more important objective if we overcome those impediments, objections and problems.

This, I think, is a rare opportunity for Canada. The population of the Islands is approximately 8,000 people. In relation to Canada, the cost would not be great. They are still part of the Commonwealth. They are still under the United Kingdom as far as administration is concerned. Their annual grant from the United Kingdom, I am informed, is some $2 million. Canada's annual budget is approximately $122 billion, so that $2 million is not a large sum of money, relatively speaking.

[Senator Argue.]

In recent years there have been additional economic grants from the United Kingdom, one in the amount of $6 million, to help with infrastructure and to help improve the islands' airport facilities.

When one considers that Canadians spend some $2 billion annually on tourist travel outside of Canada, it is easy to see that Canadians would bring large sums of money to the Turks and Caicos Islands. This would offer all Canadians an opportunity, if this develops, to enjoy a tropical climate that is part of Canada. We would give those people an opportunity to produce in an economic and constructive way, and the opportunity to enjoy a standard of living a great deal higher than that which they now have.

Others have taken initiatives in this field from time to time. Dan McKenzie, a Conservative Member of Parliament from Manitoba, has shown a great deal of interest in this subject recently. I believe he has recently been to the Turks and Caicos Islands. I have talked with Mr. McKenzie, and he has informed me—and he can speak for himself, of course—that he has a proposal in this regard before the Conservative caucus and before the Prime Minister. He told me that he hoped that a study of perhaps some three months' duration might be made by a caucus committee. He has told me that he hopes the report will be favourable.

I hope, as does Mr. McKenzie and others, that the study that is likely to be made brings forward a positive conclusion and positive recommendations.

● (1550)

I think that we can reach an agreement with the people of the Turks and Caicos Islands. I would think that we can arrive, step by step and by mutual agreement, at an economic and political union that would result, at some point in the future, in the Turks and Caicos Islands and the islanders becoming an integral part of Canada. I see it not only as an economic opportunity for all concerned, but also as a social opportunity in the sense that we would be associating with new people and could work out approaches to our problems that would help both countries.

It has been said in the past that there are dangers, as far as foreign policy is concerned, for Canada to have a presence in that part of the world. I suppose that it would carry with it certain problems and challenges, but it would seem to me that Canada—which has an international view and a record that recommends itself in the international economic field and in the international diplomatic and political field and commends itself and appeals to many countries, many governments and many peoples—would be a stabilizing influence in the international field by its presence in the Caribbean. We would have a presence and a responsibility much further south than our current nation. It seems to me that as you go south in this hemisphere, political problems are more difficult, but perhaps here would be a chance for Canada to have a presence in the Caribbean which would exercise a stabilizing influence in a much larger area, a positive influence for goodwill, good human relations, and the establishment of a stronger peace initiative and accomplishment.

I hope that when senators and members in the House of Commons are discussing this opportunity in the days ahead, they will look at each and every step in a positive, friendly, constructive way, thinking more of the opportunities, desires and needs of the citizens of the Turks and Caicos Islands than of our own position, because we are so much larger and stronger. If we give this careful attention and meet these people with goodwill on both sides, perhaps we can work out a new system that will be a model to other countries who want to bring nations together and reverse some trends that we have seen, where nations become more and more divided.

I am honoured to have been able to deal with representatives of people from the Turks and Caicos Islands from time to time over a long period of years and to have been associated in discussing this question with members of Parliament and senators in other political parties. I hope that together we can work towards an arrangement that will be helpful to Canada and the Turks and Caicos Islanders and will provide all of us with an exciting vision of the opportunity that we have to go forward in an economic and political association that will have tremendous possibilities for the future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 10, 1987, moved:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee; and

That the Committee report to the Senate no later than 15 December, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, if I may say just a few words, the proposed committee will be called upon to consider matters relating to national defence and to place the problems of national defence before the people of Canada.

As honourable senators are aware, I have been an advocate for a number of years of there being a standing committee of the Senate on national defence.

Senator Bell: Hear, hear!

Senator Lafond: However, the Senate has not judged it appropriate to create such a committee up to this time and until further notice.

In the interim, I have been urged, not to say pressed—and I must say that I have not resisted that pressure—to invite the Senate to reconstitute this special committee so that it will be in existence when the white paper comes down—I am still optimistic—and also to complete our studies on Canada's Armed Forces, by looking into Mobile Command and our land forces generally.

These pressures have come from a majority of the senators who were members of the previous committee, as well as from military associations, for instance, the National Chairman of the Federation of Military and United Services Institutes of Canada, who writes:

This letter is a word of encouragement, if that is necessary, to continue the fine efforts of the past. I hope that your Committee will again become very active, particularly with the White Paper about to appear.

The Royal Canadian Artillery Association adopted the resolution in February, 1986. It states the following:

Recognizing the outstanding contributions to the analysis of the defence and security issues made by the excellent reports of the Senate Special Committee on Defence.

Wishing to see the Senate Special Committee continue its highly useful and closely reasoned analysis of Defence issues.

Concerned that insufficient attention has been given to the issues of force structure, mobilization, and sustainment of the army.

Recommends to the Chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Defence that the Special Committee continue its investigation of Defence issues with a study of the Force Structure of the Army.

As well, I have had many verbal presentations from members of the Armed Forces who feel that, after the in depth and extensive studies we have made of Maritime Command and of Air Command, they deserve and need the same treatment from the Senate.

Of course, getting into a study of our land forces involves looking into a variety of commands such as Mobile Command itself; Canadian Forces Europe; Training Command; Communications Command and Northern Command. This may become extensive in terms of time.

If and when the committee is formed, the committee itself will decide how it will proceed and how much time it can afford to spend on these matters. For the time being, the motion suggests that the Special Committee of the Senate report by December 15, but it appears to me quite probable that by December 15 an extension will be requested for an ultimate report.

Honourable senators, I encourage the Senate to adopt this motion.

On motion of Senator Phillips, for Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 17, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 17, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, surely there is no need to remind this company of the day it is. It is one of the great gifts of my ancestors that the seventeenth is kept as it is, a joyous celebration of the goodness—not just the goodness of a saint, but the goodness of the people he served and of the gladness they gave and continue to give all the world over.

They are not all of the ould sod. Oh no, there are far many more of them abroad than have ever seen that green and smiling place. They are to be found in great numbers in many lands, certainly in Canada, where their achievements are many, their deeds are famous and their heritage is held dearly, even where only two of three of them may meet over a cup or a glass on the seventeenth. They are, you know, to be found even in the Langevin Block, or in high office in the Senate.

This city is especially blessed. In its pioneer days, it welcomed many of the Irish coming from the tribulations of the old land to find new hopes and dreams in Canada. My grandmother Doyle was born at Billings Bridge, where her father and mother had farmed before her. As we would say today, she had assimilated very well, thank you.

I remember her saying to me once of a new neighbour just over from Cork, "Oh, but she's a fair one. But you know, she's still got the brogue and she still has the blarney."

Senator Grattan O'Leary, one of the Irish of Gaspé, once wrote:

For the English I hold no animosity. They have been my friends, and true friends in every clime. The worst that can be said of them is that they are prisoners of their history and their pride. Once removed from Irish soil (which I, incidentally, have visited 24 times), an Irishman should leave ancient hatreds where they can do no harm, in the coffers of eternity. No more bitter alchemy in my years than the spectacle of Irishmen, hatred in their hearts, cruelly murdering and destroying other Irish over the dismal chimera of religious difference.

My father, like the senator, bore no grudge against the ancient enemy, but even in the dark days of the war, the best thing he could say of Sir Winston Churchill was: "Ah, he does sometimes listen to Mr. Roosevelt."

But this is not a day for quibbling—although we may hear of a fight or two before sundown.

I thank honourable senators for hearing me out in the forbearing spirit of St. Patrick's Day.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, there are none more charming than the Irish. I have not enjoyed myself more in any other land. I hope, now that Senator Patrick Doyle has joined the Tory Party, that he will do what St. Patrick did and lead the snakes out of it.

Senator Frith: I don't detect any movement over there!

PARLIAMENT

THE ESTIMATES, 1986-87—PARLIAMENT VOTE 10C—REFERRAL
TO COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

HOUSE OF COMMONS
CANADA

Wednesday, March 11, 1987

ORDERED—That Parliament Vote 10C, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Parliament; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

ATTEST

Michael B. Kirby, for The Clerk of the House of Commons

[English]

RADIO ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-3, to amend the Radio Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, March 19, 1987.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1986-87 (No. 2)FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-40, to provide borrowing authority.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have discussed this matter with the Deputy Leader of the Government. Can I assume that he will be proceeding with his intervention at second reading debate today?

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: Then he understands that we will be adjourning the debate at that point. On that basis, I believe we should grant leave to permit him to do so today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Then, is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRSFIRST REPORT OF FRENCH CONSTITUTIONAL DRAFTING COMMITTEE—SENATE COMMITTEE STUDY—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That for the purpose of its examination of and report upon the First Report of the French Constitutional Drafting Committee (Sessional Paper No. 332-159), the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be increased to fifteen members, and that Rule 67(1)(k) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Neiman has explained the reason for this motion to me, and I, personally, support it. However, she was unable to give my colleagues and me an opportunity to consider it earlier today.

For that reason, I believe that she and the deputy chairman, Senator Nurgitz, would be content if this matter were put over until next Tuesday. By that time both caucuses will have had an opportunity to consider it. I suspect they will support it, but we should give them an opportunity to look at it. Perhaps we can consider this as a notice of motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FOREIGN AFFAIRSCOMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, if I may digress for one second, having heard from the distinguished citizen from Greece on St. Patrick's Day, as a Dutchman I would like to be permitted to say that my dedication to this chamber is evidenced today by the fact that, while I am here, my wife is in Vancouver celebrating our third wedding anniversary.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator van Roggen: Obviously, I was married on St. Patrick's Day so I would not forget that date!

In the spirit of that dedication, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACTAGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-43

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized to examine the subject matter of the Bill C-43, an Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

If necessary, I would be pleased to give a brief explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, this particular piece of legislation deals with the transfer of forestry control authority from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Government of the Northwest Territories. I am told that negotiations were going on until as late as last week. Real estate settlements are involved and I assume they deal with cutting rights, timber rights and so on. There are also personnel and regulation involvements.

The legislation should be passed by March 31. Otherwise, it will carry over into another fiscal year and will lead to a lot of confusion for industry, the public and so on. So, with a view to trying to move the legislation ahead, I have asked the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to have the committee pre-study the subject matter of the bill, and he has agreed. With the agreement of the Senate, I suggest that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the committee.

● (1410)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, can the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us, since this is a House of Commons bill and not a Senate bill, whether his information encourages him to believe that we will get the bill before March 31 and, in fact, that we will get it in time to give it some study and debate in the Senate after the committee reports?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, my information is that we should get the bill fairly soon from the House of Commons. I am not in a position to give a date, but I am told that the urgency of the bill has been conveyed to the various house leaders in the other place, and I understand that they are in the process of coming to an accommodation.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Notices of Motions:

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Doody, is there another motion?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am going to ask that the other motion be deferred until we have had an opportunity to look at it more closely. It is the same sort of bill, except that it deals with the disposal of certain assets held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission in the Yukon Territory. I am told that there is a great deal of urgency attached to this bill as well, but I would like to make some inquiries in order to be in a position to answer questions that may be raised about it. I may ask for a pre-study of this bill tomorrow or whenever we get the necessary assurances.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we should have on the record that the bill the honourable senator is referring to is Bill C-45.

Senator Doody: Yes, it is Bill C-45, the Yukon Power Act.

THE CONSTITUTION

NEGOTIATIONS TO INCLUDE QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the government in the Senate. We know the government has the praiseworthy intention of "bringing Quebec into the Constitution". We hope it also has the desire to do so, which would bring it one step closer to the decisive act.

My question is: Why is the government still involved in so-called preliminary and informal meetings like the one announced for April 30, to which all provincial premiers will be invited?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it would be a disaster if a new initiative by the federal government and the provinces were to founder. That is why we have made every possible effort to finish the preliminary work completely before starting formal negotiations.

I may add that all provinces and the federal government agree the time is not yet ripe for formal negotiations.

That is why the Prime Minister has invited the ten provincial premiers to Meech Lake on April 30, to take stock of the situation and decide what the next steps will be.

Senator Le Moynes: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate firm up the specifics of the rather woolly announcement made this morning?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is asking me to be firm and specific. All I can say is that the Prime Minister issued a press release in which he announced that the provincial and federal first ministers have had four meetings on the trade talks with the United States, that the first ministers will meet at the end of March to discuss constitutional questions affecting aboriginal peoples, and that the time has come for the first ministers to meet and take stock of the situation with respect to Quebec and decide what the subsequent steps will be.

As the minister responsible for Federal-Provincial Relations, I have met with my counterparts across the country, and our officials have met on several occasions. The Prime Minister feels that both ministers and officials have done a good job, that they have done as much as they could for the time being, and it is now up to the first ministers to take stock of the situation.

Senator Le Moynes: If I understand correctly, the minister feels that it is too early, that it is premature to demand specific details of the proposals the government intends to make and the government's intentions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we have not tabled any concrete proposals on this matter, for the simple reason that the other parties have not asked us to do so.

We are all agreed that for the time being we should have the requisite latitude to discuss the five proposals made by Quebec as well as all the implications thereof, without putting any formal documents on the table.

The federal government will be ready to table concrete proposals at the appropriate time. I do not mean tomorrow, and I do not mean at the first ministers' meeting at Meech Lake at the end of April. At that meeting, the first ministers are to take stock of the situation and decide whether the time is ripe for initiating formal negotiations.

BILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY—CONSEQUENCES OF FAILURE TO REACH AGREEMENT—EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON EMPLOYMENT AND AUTO PACT

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Did I understand correctly that the Prime Minister, during yesterday's debate in the House of Commons on free trade said that if we could not reach an accord with the United States we would be in a terrible situation?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Hansard of the House of Commons is available to my honourable friend, as it is to me.

Senator Gigantès: Does the Leader of the Government think that it is a good negotiating tactic to say to your opposite number across the table that if an agreement is not reached you are "cooked"?

Senator Murray: I am sorry, but I did not hear the last word.

Senator Gigantès: Does the Leader of the Government think that it is a good negotiating tactic, when sitting across the table from someone, to say to that someone, "If we cannot reach an agreement our goose is cooked"?

Senator Murray: Again, honourable senators, I would appreciate it if my honourable friend were to point out the passage in Hansard that would confirm that any such statement was made by the Prime Minister or by any spokesman for the government.

What the government has said is that an unemployment rate amounting to over a million people in this country is disastrous. What the government has said is that to create jobs for the tens of thousands of young people and others who will be entering the labour force over the next few years a new impetus to economic growth is needed. We say that that new impetus, the impetus that is needed, can come only—I repeat only—from increased trade. It therefore makes sense to us to work at lowering trade barriers on a multilateral basis, and it makes eminent sense, in our view, to secure our access to our biggest market and closest neighbour, which accounts for 70 per cent of our trade.

[Senator Murray.]

• (1420)

Senator Gigantès: So, if we do not succeed in striking a deal with our closest neighbour, then all sorts of dire consequences will flow. Is that what I am to understand?

Senator Murray: If we do not succeed in striking a trade deal with our closest neighbour and in obtaining secure access to that large market, we will have missed a tremendous opportunity for the future economic and social well-being of this country.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Gigantès: Does the Leader of the Government not believe that we should also be able to say, and also say it, that "Yes, we would like a deal. We do think that a deal that is to the advantage of both sides would be a good thing. But if we do not succeed in striking a deal that we consider fair, then we have a fall-back position. We are not utterly prisoners of what the Americans will agree to."?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I invite my friend to read the statement that was made by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister on September 26, 1985, and all of his subsequent statements on that subject since. The Prime Minister has stated very firmly that any trade arrangements that we strike will be in the best interests of Canada, and all of Canada, or no such deal will be signed.

Senator Gigantès: I am afraid the Leader of the Government is evading the question, which is: If we do not strike such a deal because we cannot get a good deal, why are we saying to the Americans that striking a deal is so very important to us that we are practically ruined if we do not strike it? Why, in other words, are we confessing to a weakness which I do not believe we have?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is no secret that there are over one million unemployed in this country, and that there are tens of thousands of Canadians coming into the labour force in the next few years. It is no secret that on the basis of current projections the economy will not grow fast enough to absorb those people. We need a major new impetus to economic growth, and it is hardly a secret to the Americans or anyone else that that impetus must come from trade, and principally from increased trade with our American neighbours.

It is no secret to anyone in Canada that there are protectionist forces at work in the United States that endanger our present access to that large market. We therefore seek a trade treaty with the United States that will secure our access to that market into the twenty-first century. It is hardly revealing any secrets to admit that much to the United States. They know all of those things. The problem is that some of our friends opposite do not seem to be alive to or aware of those factors.

Senator MacEachen: You sound like Sir Wilfrid.

Senator Gigantès: Is the Leader of the Government aware of the fact that since the mid-1970s every country in the OECD, including Canada, increased its exports, but also had to increase its imports? Is the Leader of the Government not aware of special studies by the Canadian government—one of which I would be delighted to send him; I have it in my office—which show that every job that we gained exporting, we forcibly had to lose importing? So the argument that exports will improve our position in terms of jobs is not backed up by the facts not only in this country but in every other industrialized country around the world.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would very much like to see that study, if it says what my honourable friend reports that it says. I can tell him that all of the studies that I have seen or heard about, whether they were undertaken by the Macdonald Royal Commission, the C. D. Howe Institute, or various other academic and research organizations in this country, indicate that there will be a net gain of as high as three-quarters of a million jobs from a comprehensive free trade arrangement between Canada and the United States.

Senator Gigantès: The Economic Council of Canada produced the latest of these studies in which it said that between now and 1995, if there were a free trade agreement, there would be an increase in jobs of some 370,000, which represents a yearly increase in employment of three-tenths of 1 per cent, compounded. However, I will be delighted to send you this study, Senator Murray. You may see in that study some of the figures that were obliterated from the studies which your government released about the effectiveness and the cost benefits of such a free trade agreement.

However, I have some other questions to ask that were not answered yesterday either by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister or by the honourable minister responsible for the trade negotiations. My question is: If tariffs are abolished, what happens to the Auto Pact, which operates on the basis of tariffs?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is asking some questions that were asked yesterday and answered by ministers. If he now intends to enter into a detailed series of questions on the trade negotiations, I suggest that this is really not the time for it. Perhaps he should have the matter referred again to a committee where he could invite the ministers responsible, or perhaps the negotiators, to discuss these matters.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, before the Prime Minister's speech yesterday, we were told that we would be given information. In my opinion, this is vital information. I am asking these questions because they were asked yesterday and were not answered. That is why I am asking them.

There are other aspects. The Europeans examined this issue of free trade and decided that if they have free trade, which includes the free movement of investments, there might be some investments that would move from one country to another and there might be factories or whole industries that would be moved from one country to another. The Europeans decided that the way to compensate for that danger would be to allow the people to move also.

Therefore, if a Canadian manufacturer decides to build a new plant to serve his new American market, which is ten times larger than his Canadian market, it makes sense to put that plant near his big market, which might be somewhere between Boston and Baltimore. He might then decide to shut down his Canadian plant and his Canadian workers would find themselves without jobs because they cannot follow their jobs down south. I wonder if that aspect has been considered.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs my friend will find a very concise and excellent description of the various forms of trade agreements ranging from customs unions to common markets to the kind of comprehensive free trade arrangement that we are talking about with the United States. I commend that part of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs—indeed I commend all three volumes of that report to my friend's attention.

The Europeans have a common market; that is not what we are negotiating with the United States.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, might we not be better off negotiating a common market with the United States? Of course, we would be swallowed politically, but in that way we would ensure that our people would not lose jobs that move to Georgia where the friendly sheriff does not allow unions and where employers do not have to make contributions to health services and where the UI payments are minimal.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is now suggesting that it might be preferable to negotiate a common market with the United States. If he really hurries, he may be able to get that suggestion included in the Turner amendment, which will be voted upon in the other place at six o'clock tonight. Everything else is in there.

Senator Gigantès: I notice that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is still not answering any questions. He is still asking us to buy a pig in a poke. I would like to relate to him the information that the Honourable Senator Frith gave to me. I thought that a pig in a poke was a pig in a pocket, or poche. It is not. Apparently, a poke is something that is put on a pig so that if it pushes against a fence, the poke pokes the pig and he or she desists.

● (1430)

I suggest that perhaps our negotiators or the government should wear such an intellectual poke when considering what may be extremely damaging to Canada. Instead of giving us waves of rhetoric, could they not give us some details about what the government is trying to do?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I assure my friend that the interests of the hog farmers will also be protected.

Senator Gigantès: There we go again! We are being treated in this house the same way as the opposition was treated in the other place. We are asking legitimate questions which have to do with the welfare of the country—questions which have to do with regions of Canada and Canadian industries that might or might not be drastically affected. We would like to know more and we are given no answers at all.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there has been on our order paper since November 27 an inquiry in the name of Senator Everett, that he will call the attention of the Senate to the free trade negotiations with the United States. It may be well to get on with that debate.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I know that I am a neophyte, but, unless I am mistaken, there is nothing about the fact that there is an inquiry on the books to prevent any senator from asking questions of the government on the same issue.

Senator MacEachen: Dead on.!

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

NEGOTIATION OF COALMINERS' CONTRACT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I do not want to talk about pigs or pokes or snakes or anything of that nature. Last Thursday I asked the government leader a question with regard to possible negotiations between the coalminers of Cape Breton Island and representatives of the the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Up to that time we had heard nothing other than reports of the apparently defiant attitude of the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Leader of the Government said that he would check into the matter and get back to me as soon as possible.

After the Question Period, honourable senators, I received from him a message indicating that negotiations had begun while we were discussing the subject in this chamber. Is he in a position to provide a progress report as to what may be happening? Is there any indication of an agreement between the management of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and the union, in light of the cooperative attitude expressed by the president of district 26 and the executive of the United Mine Workers Union?

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—REDUCTION OF REGIONAL DISPARITIES

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. What I am interested in personally is the reduction of regional disparities.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister announced that in the event of a free trade agreement with the United States, one of the benefits of such an agreement would be the reduction of regional disparities in Canada.

My question for the Leader of the Government is about this reduction of disparities. Would it be due to a general improvement in the Canadian economy or to the Canadian government's continued flexibility in modulating measures to fit the needs of disadvantaged areas? And in the event of an agreement with the United States, would the Canadian government not be as free to develop special programs for this country's disadvantaged areas?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the federal government's ability to provide assistance to disadvantaged areas in this country is not negotiable.

As for a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, I can only quote the report of the Royal Commission on Economic Union which felt that all regions in Canada would benefit under such an agreement, and especially our disadvantaged regions.

Senator De Bané: I am most grateful to the Leader of the Government for stating in no uncertain terms that the Canadian government's latitude for helping our disadvantaged areas is non-negotiable. I had the impression that all departments, to the extent that it is not incompatible with their mandate, have an obligation to reduce disparities in Canada, and I hope they will continue to do so.

I would also like to know whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate has any studies on the impact of the Common Market's Treaty of Rome on Europe's various disadvantaged areas.

Some economists claim that on the whole, the Common Market has helped Western Europe enormously, but that the impact was felt particularly in the prosperous regions of each country. I would appreciate it if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would let me know whether he has any studies on the impact of the Treaty of Rome on Europe's disadvantaged areas.

Senator Murray: I certainly will, honourable senators. However, since it is St. Patrick's Day, I would like to take this opportunity to say that I have the impression the Republic of Ireland has benefitted enormously from its membership in the European Economic Community.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Did the Leader of the Government by any chance read a recent article in The Times which said that the Irish economy was in such bad shape that not only had the government been defeated but the percentage of Irish emigrants had increased tremendously?

While he is looking into what is happening in various European countries that have prosperous areas, perhaps he could also look at what has happened in what is called the "Northern Tier", in other words, the group of American states just south of our borders which are in full decline, despite free access to markets in the United States. They are in full decline because new factories and new investment are going further south where it is warmer, where there are fewer social restrictions and where there is no public health insurance, for instance in states like Georgia, the Carolinas, etc.

Could this happen to us, and if not, why not?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I doubt very much whether the current state of the Irish economy is due to that country's joining the European Economic Community.

As for the rest of Senator Gigantès' question, may I suggest that he make those points during the debate to be held on the inquiry by the Honourable Senator Everett?

Senator Gigantès: I never suggested that Ireland's misfortunes were due to the fact the country joined the Common Market. I was merely reminding the Leader of the Government in the Senate that he was mistaken when he said that all was well in Ireland. In fact, all is far from well. Senator De Bané made the point that despite their membership in the Common Market, disadvantaged regions have remained so, some examples being Scotland, Wales, Northern England and even areas in Belgium. And what about southern Italy, which is still economically depressed although Italy has been a member of the Common Market for quite some time. In Milan and Turin, the economy is in good shape, but in southern Italy that is not the case. Considering these precedents, how can the government claim that a free trade agreement with the United States will help our disadvantaged areas when this is not happening anywhere else?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ALBERTA HEALTH INSURANCE LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Recently the Alberta government introduced Bill No. 14, the Alberta Health Insurance Act. This apparently will provide for commercial insurance companies to issue policies for both medicare and non-medicare services. It seems to me that this is a contradiction of the Canada Health Act.

I would like to know whether the minister has undertaken, in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, any discussions with the Alberta government. If not, does he propose to do so?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we have not received a written statement from Alberta. Our information is based on media reports and on some brief discussions with Alberta officials. However, on the basis of these reports and discussions, it appears to us that the proposed legislation in Alberta does not violate the Canada Health Act.

Senator Molgat: Under the provisions of the Canada Health Act, medicare services presently under that act—if I understand that act properly—are to be comprehensive and administered by a public body. Is there not a conflict in what Alberta is proposing?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator will be aware that to meet the comprehensiveness requirement of the Canada Health Act, provinces must ensure all medically necessary services. The present Alberta provincial plan meets this requirement. There is no prohibition in the act against private insurance of medical services.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is monitoring the situation closely and, of course, we would be concerned, as a federal government, if medically necessary services were de-insured.

Senator Molgat: It will be in order, then, for other provinces to proceed with similar legislation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Canada Health Act does not prohibit private insurers. In fact, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland provincial legislation is similar to the Alberta proposal, or so I am informed.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—CLOSING OF RURAL POST OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. On March 9 of this year, according to the Charlottetown Guardian—which covers the island like the dew—of March 10, it says that the Canadian Postmasters and Assistants' Association released a list of post offices to be closed in Prince Edward Island. One of those to be closed is one which is close to the home of my friend, Senator Macquarrie, at Borden. It will be closed in 1989. The post office in my home town, Murray River, will be closed in 1988, as will those at Belle River, Elmira and Freetown. The post offices located at Morell and Victoria will close in 1989.

Senator Macquarrie: Shame!

Senator Bonnell: That is my friend's home town.

It looks to me, honourable senators, as if we might only have one or two post offices left in Prince Edward Island.

Some years ago, when we had a strong Liberal government in Prince Edward Island—in fact we had Liberal governments federally and provincially—we used to have the mail sorted right on the trains and passed off at the station. Now they are closing out our little post offices. Next I guess we will get super mail boxes, or we will go back to ponies!

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate stand up and tell us in this house that the Canadian Postmasters' Association is wrong and that these post offices will not be closed; that Senator Macquarrie will get his mail at the post office; and that I will get my mail at the post office for years to come in Murray River and in Victoria—not in Charlottetown?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my information is that there is no policy to close rural post offices. Canada Post Corporation does not have any plans to effect widespread closures of rural post offices.

Some communities may experience future changes from the current methods or locations of postal service. However, any changes will result only through natural opportunities such as the resignation, retirement, or promotion of the postmaster, loss of the post office site, or on the initiative of the community itself.

These cases allow the corporation to review its services as part of its ongoing business management.

Senator Frith: Now try reading that again without smiling.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, there is no doubt that all postmasters will retire some day. Even senators will retire when they reach age 75.

Senator Molgat: They may even die one day!

Senator Bonnell: Some of our postmasters have been giving us good service for many years. We do not expect them to go on forever; they do not have that dispensation from above. Therefore, this government is insinuating that they are liable to put it out on contract to somebody to run a second-class Post Office and to give some of our citizens second-class service, while others get first-class service.

If you happen to live in Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal, or perhaps Ottawa, you will get first-class service. But if you live in Victoria, Alberton, or Murray River, you will get the kind of service we are getting now in Atlantic Canada: Not good enough, Mr. Leader of the Government in the Senate. Use the strength which you have; use that strength on St. Patrick's Day—and I want to wish you a happy St. Patrick's Day—to go and tell your Prime Minister that he will never make it again if he does not do something for our rural people.

Senator Frith: Well, then, don't tell him! We don't want him to make it again.

Senator Bonnell: Tell him that he will never make it again if he does not do something for the poorer regions of this country. And tell him, for God's sake, not to interfere with the mails—it is bad enough now!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am glad to have the honourable senator acknowledge that some Canadians are receiving first-class service from the Post Office. That is an improvement over what it was under his regime.

Let me say that at least 90 days' notice of any change will be provided to allow those affected to make representations. Members of Parliament will be the first to be notified by Canada Post and provided with as much information as possible to ensure the best possible communication with their constituents.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, 90 days' notice of the closing of a post office? Just enough time to get a horse to go farther!

Are senators members of Parliament? Will we be notified, as senators, or will just members of the House of Commons be notified? Advance notification that a post office will be closed in 90 days is not much good. Will they let the representatives of the people speak and will they listen to them, or will they pay no attention? That was the case with the CNR in relation to Prince Edward Island. They notified us, they listened to us, but they removed our passenger trains. That was some years ago and, I must admit, your party was not in power.

● (1450)

Senator Murray: There will be consultation.

Senator Bonnell: Will you put the railroad back? I understand the intention is to take the railways off ferries and that we will have a causeway with no rails.

There is no sense in notifying us if you are not going to listen to us and heed what we are saying.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is attempting to conduct a debate on the basis of hearsay and rumour. I have just told him what the policy of the Canada Post Corporation is. I would have hoped he would have welcomed that policy and that he would have particularly welcomed the fact that no change is even being considered except in the circumstances that I mentioned. If any change is contemplated there will be 90 days' notice in order that everyone may make representations. "Everyone" emphatically includes my honourable friend and other interested senators.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, we are told that there will be no change apart from certain exceptions. Those exceptions may include places like Borden, Crapaud, Victoria and Murray River where those involved are close to retirement age, that is, 65 years of age. The honourable gentleman said that retired persons would be excluded, yet the changes will be made in those areas I have just mentioned.

If I were being told that a new, young postmaster was to be appointed in order to keep the post office operating, then I would happily sit down.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I have said, the Post Office management will review its services in the event of retirement, promotion and these other hypotheses that I have put forward. It will review its services as part of its responsibility to manage the operation.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

MICMAC TREATY—MEETING WITH GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government a matter that is causing me some concern. I shall say to him, as I said to the Leader of the Government when I sat on the other side of this chamber, that I do not expect him to carry this information around in his head but I would ask him to take the question as notice.

Recently, the Supreme Court of Canada held in the Queen vs. Simon case that the Treaty of Halifax (1752) is still existing and in force. This was a treaty between the Micmacs and the government of the day. This treaty secured the alliance between "Mikmakik" and the Crown, guaranteed the safety of British settlements already established on Micmac territory and, likewise, guaranteed their rights to hunt, fish and trade throughout the province of Nova Scotia as it was then. It ceded no land. The Micmac word for this treaty is "Elekawaki" or, to translate, a "room in the King's house."

The Union of Nova Scotia Indians has written to the Prime Minister with reference to the possibility of meeting with him and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to discuss this subject. As far as I know, no date for that meeting has yet been set.

Would the Leader of the Government check into this matter and find out if a meeting is to be held and when. Since I am a senator from the region concerned, and an honorary Grand Chief of the Micmacs—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Muir:—may I say that I feel it is my duty—and I felt this long before I became honorary Grand Chief—to bring to the attention of the House of Commons and this chamber any problems affecting the Micmacs.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will make inquiries.

Meanwhile, I can tell my friend that some of my Micmac friends are coming to see me in Antigonish on Thursday morning to discuss this very matter of the court decision and related matters.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, someone must be psychic because I have never previously discussed this matter with the Leader of the Government.

I am happy to hear what he has said. I hope he will be able to tell the representatives from the Micmacs—whom he will meet when he is in that area representing the Prime Minister at the installation of our new bishop in the diocese of Antigonish—that he will be able to give them a date as to when a meeting will be held.

Senator Murray: I do not know if I can do that, but I am certainly going there to listen carefully to what the Micmac representatives have to say.

I will make inquiries as to when a meeting might be possible between the Prime Minister and those people, and I will let the honourable senator know what the situation is.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL INVESTIGATION OF TOBACCO AS HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY MINISTER

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, as one who gave up smoking some 20 years ago, not because I was afraid of contracting lung cancer but because I was smoking 50 cigarettes a day and I was running out of cigarettes all the time, I would like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate as to whether he is aware of any reasons why the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs interfered with an investigation in his department as to whether tobacco should be declared a hazardous product, considering that it has been established that some 30,000 Canadians die every year as a result of smoking.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am somewhat astonished that the honourable senator would take an accusation contained in a media report and make it his own.

If I understand correctly, a legal suit has been launched against the minister on the basis of that accusation or those accusations. That being the case, it would not be proper for me to comment.

Senator Bosa: Would the honourable gentleman look into the matter of whether there is any substance to this report?

Senator Murray: Not so long as the matter is before the courts, honourable senators.

REFUGEES

REPLACEMENT OF EXISTING REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, last year, in fact only a few months ago, Canadians had a great sense of pride and gratification as a result of having been honoured with an international award for humanity towards political refugees.

Today, many Canadians, among whom are representative groups such as the Canadian Jewish Congress; the Canadian Council of Churches; the Canadian Labour Congress; Amnesty International; the Canadian Ethnocultural Council are not only saddened but also shocked. All of those are, today, asking whether the federal government intends to replace its unfair and restrictive new regulations governing refugees to Canada with regulations that are fair and compassionate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, many Canadians and, indeed, the Government of Canada were saddened and shocked by the abuse of a refugee process by people who did not qualify as refugees and who were attempting to jump the queue of those who were seeking to be considered as immigrants. I can show the honourable senator the statistics on that in due course.

The honourable senator alleges that the changes in the regulations are unfair and restrictive. I should like him to demonstrate which of those regulations is unfair and restrictive.

Meanwhile, I can tell him that, before long, amendments to the act will be introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

● (1500)

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, in the preamble to my question I stated that spokesmen for many Canadians from such groups as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other organizations have condemned these recently imposed regulations concerning refugees as unfair, restrictive and inhumane. In view of what the minister said a few moments ago in answer to my question, does it mean that what was said in the feature article in Sunday's Toronto Star by Olivia Ward to the effect that there exists a federal cabinet document showing that these regulations and others tougher than those already in force are being considered by the government, is true?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators. The Minister of State for Immigration has already commented on the article to which my honourable friend has referred. I do say, however, that amendments to the act will be forthcoming shortly.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has still not stated whether the proposed amendments to the Immigration Act will be humane or, at least, fairer than those that have been imposed by the federal government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the amendments to the Immigration Act will be, to use the honourable senator's word, humane. They are intended to maintain in reality the reputation of Canada as a haven for true refugees. We have a good reputation in that regard, and we intend to maintain it. What we intend to close off are the avenues of abuse which have been used all too frequently in the last little while.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, does that mean that the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Canadian Ethnocultural Council are unfair in their criticisms of the federal government's recently imposed regulations vis-à-vis refugees?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if as the honourable senator suggests, they have described the new regulations as unfair and restrictive, yes, the groups to which my honourable friend has referred are wrong.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES— PROVINCIAL ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on February 11, 1987 by Senator Bonnell regarding Federal-Provincial Relations—Equalization Payments to Atlantic Provinces—Provincial Action. In the absence of the honourable senator, I ask that the answer be taken as having been read.

(The answer follows:)

Under section 36(2) of the Constitution Act, the principles behind the equalization program are enshrined in the Constitution:

Parliament and the Government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

At the present time, the federal government continues to meet its obligations under the equalization program consistent with section 36(2) and no province has yet undertaken a suit against the federal government citing this reference to the equalization program in the Act.

In the case of the Atlantic provinces, the honourable senator may want to note that the four Atlantic provinces receive, per capita, higher payments than other recipient provinces and that the federal payments represent a higher proportion of provincial revenues in the Atlantic provinces than in other recipient provinces.

THE SENATE

DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS— QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—SPEAKER'S STATEMENT

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before coming to Orders of the Day I would like to make a brief statement on a question of privilege raised by Senator Bell on Thursday last concerning a delay in the printing of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee proceedings.

It appears that there was a misunderstanding and that Senator Bell's name was not on the distribution list to receive copies of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee proceedings. I am also informed that the proceedings of February 11 were delivered to senators' offices on February 25, and that the proceedings of February 18 and 19 were delivered on February 27.

THE LATE HONOURABLE DOUGLAS CHARLES ABBOTT, P.C.

TRIBUTE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, a few moments ago a note was passed to me indicating that the flags on Parliament Hill have just been lowered to half mast in tribute to the late Mr. Justice Douglas Abbott, a retired judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. Honourable senators will know very well the excellent reputation of the late Justice Abbott, who was a parliamentarian for many years in the other place, a former Minister of Finance and Minister of Defence as well as the father of another privy councillor and former minister in a recent government, the Honourable Anthony Abbott. On behalf of the government, I express our sincere sympathy to the members of his family and say how proud all of us are of his luminous career in the public service.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the third reading of Bill C-12, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Muir, for the second reading of the Bill C-6, An Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, last Tuesday we listened to the second reading speech of the Deputy Leader of the Government on Bill C-6. We certainly have no complaint about his forensic style—

Senator Doody: I will look that up.

Senator MacEachen: —but I must say that his speech had a tone of optimism and, possibly, complacency. This, of course, is in marked contrast to the actual evidence that was presented during our committee hearings on the pre-study of the bill. Senator Doody spoke in terms of cooperation, economic activity, benefits, security of supply and self-sufficiency. The committee hearings disclosed a somewhat different reality when it comes to the assessment of the situation, particularly on the east coast.

Before examining the situation as it was revealed in the committee hearings, I should set a bit of atmosphere by asking senators to cast their minds back to February more than two years ago, when the Accord was formally announced in the ballroom of the Hotel Newfoundland. I recall the proud and intemperate boasts that surrounded the announcement of the Atlantic Accord and the proud assertions of those who claimed that prosperity and plenty would come to the province of Newfoundland and that that have-not province would be transformed, almost overnight, into a land of plenty. One of the reporters present, Ms. Diane Francis of the Toronto Star, described the atmosphere in the ballroom of the Hotel Newfoundland as one of “near hysteria”. She described the scene as follows: “Yesterday’s news conference on the pact took on the air of an old fashioned religious revival, with the crowd of 500 applauding wildly as five Tory politicians made 90 minutes of speeches.”

• (1510)

I can only say that time has taken its toll, or, to repeat Mr. Diefenbaker’s words, “It’s a long road without ash cans.”

When Tory politicians rise to speak about Newfoundland, particularly in Newfoundland, they no longer speak to hundreds of people applauding wildly. That has all changed. In fact, they are now as likely to criticize their own government for the treatment meted out to that province and the other Atlantic provinces in the field of fisheries and regional development.

It is in that light that the Atlantic Accord must now be examined. In approaching an examination of the bill, and the policy which is behind the bill, I think it is relevant to point out the long delay which the government has allowed in the implementation of this cornerstone of its energy policy. The Atlantic Accord, as I pointed out last Tuesday, which was signed on February 11, 1985, more than two years ago, contained a clause requiring the two governments to introduce enacting legislation within one year. The Government of Canada met that deadline with only three or four days to spare. Bill C-94, as it was then called, was introduced in the House of Commons on February 7, 1986. Of course, given the collapse of oil prices, the timing of the legislation could not have been worse. It took the government almost an additional three months to proceed to second reading of the bill, which took place on May 26, 1986.

In light of the subsequent neglect of this bill by the government, one can hardly but be puzzled by the statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on May 26, 1986, when he stated:

It is important that this legislation be passed as expeditiously as possible so these funds can flow to Newfoundland for . . . development projects.

Of course, the Deputy Leader of the Government used almost the same phrase last Tuesday, almost a year following the speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

I must say, honourable senators, that the opposition in either house cannot be blamed for any delay in coming to the rescue of the province of Newfoundland. The debate on second reading which took place in the House of Commons began, as I have said, on May 26, 1986, and the bill was referred to a legislative committee on the very same day, with a day or less of debate on that important stage of the bill. The Senate itself embarked on a pre-study of the bill. Neither committee, however, had an opportunity to complete its work and report because Parliament was unexpectedly prorogued by the government on August 28, 1986.

When the new session began on September 30, the opposition in the House of Commons showed its willingness to facilitate government business. On October 3, 1986, unanimous consent was given for Bill C-94 to be deemed to have been introduced, read the first time, read the second time and referred to a legislative committee as Bill C-6. Despite that magnanimity, as I would describe it, by members of the opposition, again there was delay. The committee did not meet to consider the bill until October 29, 1986, a delay of almost four weeks. In the meantime, the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources had once again begun a pre-study, hearing from the Minister of Energy, Mr. Masse, on October 22.

In the House of Commons, the Legislative Committee met twice before presenting its report to the House on November 6, 1986. True to form, however, the government again delayed. Debate on the report stage did not begin until March 2, a delay of four months.

Why has the government shown such neglect for this bill, which the Deputy Leader of the Government asked last Tuesday to have passed expeditiously "so that funds could flow to Newfoundland", the same phrase used a year earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary in the House of Commons? The reason is, of course—at least one can infer this—that the government has found itself helpless in the face of the collapse of oil prices, and has been unable to adjust a policy which was presented in a bill at a time when the world economic situation—certainly in the energy sector—was totally different.

In February, 1985, the spot price of West Texas Intermediate was $27.82 per barrel expressed in U.S. dollars. In November of that year, it had actually risen to more than $31; however, by March, 1986, it had plummeted to $13.10, and over the last year, prices have remained relatively soft, falling to $12 in July and only climbing to approximately $18 as of last week.

That is an important point, honourable senators; the legislation before us was predicated upon a price of $30 (U.S.) a barrel for oil, and the expressions which the Deputy Leader of the Government used in his speech—namely, the benefits from hydrocarbon exploration projects and the economic activity the bill will generate—might have been relevant when the bill was first put together.

The most charitable thing that can be said, honourable senators, is that it is certainly not the right bill at the right time. It fails completely to address problems now faced by the offshore oil industry. It fails to achieve the goal of encouraging offshore exploration and development. Simply put, it has been overtaken by world events, and the government has not responded. One would certainly not call this a "timely" bill.

In a way, this bill is a symbol of the failure of the government's overall energy policy, a policy of deregulation. Even many of those in the industry who may have originally supported the government's overall thrust are now expressing serious doubts. Mr. John F. Smith, chairman of the board of directors of the Offshore Trade Association of Nova Scotia, stated before the energy committee as follows:

I would say that the timing of it was incorrect. There are times for deregulation and there are times for regulation.

Perhaps it was not a mistake at the time. It certainly is a mistake, in my view, at the moment. I do not know of anyone in the industry who would take issue with what I just said. They want regulations now. They want—I almost hate to use the word—

This is Mr. Smith speaking:

—protectionism. They want guidance. They want control. They also want input into that direction and control.

With direct reference to the east coast, he noted that Bills C-5 and C-6 deal with the development, or, as he called it, "the implementation phase" of offshore development. He expressed concern that, and here I quote him again:

the implementation phase may not reach stage one unless the basic policies are different.

And, of course, Mr. Strong, the president of Newfoundland Ocean Industries Association, began his testimony before our committee with a somewhat colourful introduction. He said as follows:

● (1520)

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Good afternoon, honourable senators. I bring greetings from what some may call Fantasy Island, but I guess I might say I bring greetings from Fantasy Island to Disneyland.

And, of course, he was right. Bill C-6 does not deal with reality; it deals with a state of affairs which may have existed in the spring of 1985, but which has long since disappeared. It does nothing for the offshore on the east coast.

When Mr. Stanford of Petro-Canada was before the committee, he was asked by Senator Kenny whether there was "anything in Bill C-6 which would cause you to increase your activity or start any activity on the east coast?" His simple answer was, "No, there is not, senator."

As we have all heard, Petro-Canada last week announced a drilling program for the Terra Nova oil field off Newfoundland. However, it is a truly modest program that may in large part have been prompted by other considerations. After all, Mr. Stanford himself told us there was nothing in this bill or in this policy—and that is the important thing—which would encourage activity on the east coast. In any event, I would like to say a word or two later about Petro-Canada's more recent announcement.

We heard in the Senate committee from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He reiterated that one of the Atlantic Accord's major goals was to "create a clear and balanced regime that will serve as a framework in which industry can invest with confidence." We all know that investment in the offshore has virtually disappeared and there is certainly no confidence.

The minister, in a truly puzzling statement, went on to say:

The period of falling prices we are now experiencing offers the perfect opportunity to establish a legislative framework that will maintain the level of activity, ensure the development of new projects and enable all Canadians to take full advantage of this future growth.

Well, how can this be? The legislative framework we have before us was constructed when the price of oil was almost $30 per barrel. It does nothing to address the present situation. The "level of activity" has not been maintained, the "development of new projects" has not been ensured, there is no growth for "Canadians to take full advantage of". By all measures, as enunciated by the minister himself, this legislation is wide of the mark.

I would like to mention the government's role in the current slump in offshore exploration and development. As we all know, world oil prices are indeed an important factor, a factor which this legislation does not take into account. Nevertheless, oil prices are but one factor, and the evidence of that was borne out in testimony before the committee. Mr. Smith, again, when he appeared, stated that the world price of oil:

... is only one leg of the stool. If the only leg remaining is world oil prices, then they—

Meaning the major oil companies:

—will leave for that one reason. However, if they see legislation that supports them and demonstrates that they are part of a partnership, and that they are "going down the road together", even if the deal is tied into Canadian benefits packages and returns on investment, my belief is that the major players will still hang around.

That was the evidence from Mr. Smith, chairman of the board of directors of the Offshore Trade Association of Nova Scotia. Of course, we heard further testimony from other witnesses bearing on the same theme, particularly by the president of Husky Oil Limited. He described how the replacement of grants under the Petroleum Incentive Program with a tax credit system ruled out any further participation by his firm in the offshore, regardless of the price of oil. He said:

If we still had $28 oil prices under this policy, we would not be able to explore in the Canada Lands... Oil prices are a big factor but the fact of the matter is that in this environment this kind of investment—mid-$20s, $28-U.S. oil prices—we would not be able to invest in the Canada Lands—not in the exploration phase and not in the high risk phase, because we don't have the capital base to do it.

His company was ruled out because the new tax credit scheme—the scheme which replaced the incentive grants—did not offer it the encouragement to continue. He went on to say that even with $28 barrel oil:

we wouldn't be investing because the system does not allow us to take into account the risk.

Well, what of the future of Husky, which company was the most active explorer offshore Newfoundland? Mr. Price said:

... I see our company's participation in the east coast basically drawing to a halt at the end of the work program that is currently eligible for petroleum incentive payments. That would be the middle of next year. To change that would take a price rebound, along with a policy framework that we can operate within, or a special policy framework dealing with the current price environment. It would take changes in those variables for Husky Oil to be able to deploy capital in that kind of an investment.

Petro-Canada had an interest in almost half of the 300 wells drilled off the east coast since 1976. When its Resources

Division president, James Stanford, was asked by Senator Barootes:

Were the PIP grants a major factor in your activity off the east coast?

He answered:

There is no question about that, senator. The PIP grants were very significant.

We know, and have always known, and the testimony before the committee confirmed the realization that the Petroleum Incentive Program grants were instrumental in encouraging exploration on our frontiers. The government then announced the end of these grants and that is when the offshore began to decline. We all know that the price of oil did not collapse until December 1985/January 1986. Well before that, however, there were signs that activity on the frontier was slowing. In September of 1985 when oil was $28.79 U.S., the Globe and Mail reported that three major drilling rigs left the Atlantic offshore and headed for the North Sea, and two other rigs were idle without contracts. This was occurring when oil prices were only $1 less than they had been a year before; when prices had actually increased by more than $2.50 from a low of $26.12 in January, 1985. Drilling rigs were leaving Canada to drill overseas because the Conservative government had made it perfectly clear through its energy policies that offshore exploration was no longer to be a priority. The subsequent collapse of oil prices only accelerated the exodus which had already begun.

• (1530)

Honourable senators, I think it is a sober reflection that, should world prices increase to their previous levels, a resumption of activity off the east coast is by no means guaranteed under the current policies of the present government.

As I mentioned a moment or two earlier, Petro-Canada announced last week that it would drill two delineation wells in the Terra Nova field off Newfoundland. However much we would like to believe that this is a signal of a resumption of strong activity in the offshore, the facts unfortunately indicate otherwise. First, this is a relatively modest $45 million drilling program designed to determine the northern boundary of the field. Only after this drilling is complete will the company decide whether or not it wishes to proceed with development. Of course, any development plan, as is indicated in the bill, would require agreement between the federal and provincial governments.

Honourable senators, some say that the announcement by Petro-Canada has much to do with its reported unhappiness with Mobil Oil over the Hibernia negotiations. Petro-Canada has a 25 per cent interest in Hibernia, and reportedly would like development to proceed. It may be that by moving closer to development on the Terra Nova field, Petro-Canada is trying to embarrass and force Mobil's hand on Hibernia. That would be all right, but we also ought to bear in mind that Petro-Canada is known to be reserve-poor. If the drilling is successful, Petro-Canada could increase its reserves by up to 60 million barrels at a very modest cost, and that, needless to say, would increase the company's worth.

However, having made these observations, let us put Petro-Canada's announcement in perspective. The only well now being drilled off the east coast is one on the Grand Banks being drilled by Husky-Bow Valley. Now Petro-Canada announces that it will spend $45 million to drill two additional wells. This illustrates how the perspective and the vision of the government has collapsed. When that modest $45 million program was announced by Petro-Canada, the honourable John Crosbie declared, and I quote:

It's a great day for Newfoundland.

In 1984, $790 million was spent on the Newfoundland offshore and $608 million was spent for work off Nova Scotia. Today, when an announcement is made that $45 million will be spent, we hear that "It's a great day for Newfoundland." That shows how the vision of the government has collapsed over the sobering period of two and-a-half years in office. Presumably, the government is as surprised as everyone else that there is any activity in the offshore under its policies, and that an announcement of an expenditure amounting to less than 5 per cent of what was spent in 1984 is therefore a cause for celebration. For any other government, it would be a cause for shame.

What is the future for the local industries in Atlantic Canada? We know that with a downturn in prices and under this government's policies the energy industry in Atlantic Canada is devastated. Offices have shut down; drilling rigs sit idle; people are jobless. Petro-Canada, which at one time had five rigs operating offshore employing 700 people directly and almost 2,000 people indirectly, is now down to two mothballed rigs with a staff of 50 persons to watch over them. In fact, the company—and this almost does not bear repeating—shipped some of its onshore equipment from Mulgrave, Nova Scotia to Ghana, West Africa. Such is their faith in the future of the offshore in Canada.

Geophysical Services Incorporated has gone from approximately 180 permanent employees in 1983 to less than a dozen. Mr. Strong from the Newfoundland Ocean Industries Association testified before the committee on October 22, 1986 that direct jobs in the Newfoundland offshore service industry had fallen from 3,600 to 1,200.

As regrettable as all of this is, perhaps even more distressing is the fact that the expertise that has slowly developed in the offshore is now in danger of being lost for good. Mr. Strong expressed his fear before the committee that, should activity resume in the offshore, the people of Newfoundland would not be in a position to participate in any future development. He said that:

...under the Atlantic Accord... first consideration should be given to those businesses resident in Newfoundland, so long as they are competitive in price, quality and delivery.

Of course, I would agree with that, as would all of you, but Mr. Strong went on to say:

[Senator MacEachen.]

But if they have gone bankrupt, how can they be competitive in price, quality and delivery? That will be the state of the service sector in Newfoundland over the next 12 months.

That testimony is fresh in the memory of all of us who attended the committee. Mr. Strong feared that:

...because of the downturn we are not going to be competitive, which will therefore allow the operator to go outside Canada to source a lot of the equipment and the technology required in the development of Hibernia.

Honourable senators, that problem pinpointed by Mr. Strong is not in any way addressed in this bill. It is a real and serious concern, and Mr. Donald Seaman of Bow Valley Industries Limited stated that people who had been assembled "to carry on the east coast exploration programs will be dissipated..." He went on to say that the only presence his company would soon have in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland would be "caretaker people, looking after the equipment..." We have gone from talent which was "renowned world wide" to "caretaker people." This is quite an indictment of the policies that are in effect at the present time.

The energy industry, particularly the oil industry, which was to be the engine of growth for the Canadian economy—and I will return to this later—has now, in Atlantic Canada and on the east coast, been entrusted to "caretakers."

I will add to this description by referring to the results of an acreage auction held off the east coast in April, 1986. Of the six tracts of land on the Grand Banks offered for auction, exploration bids were received on only three. The government called the results "a concrete indication that the federal government's new frontier lands policy is a success." Well, Ian Doig, who is regarded by many as an excellent oil analyst, called the auction "a disaster." Another analyst, Mr. Jim Hamilton, said that it was "even more catastrophic than I would have thought." Robert Orr, exploration vice-president of Husky Oil Operations, commented that the bidding was "indicative of what is going on out there. It's getting grimmer all the time."

While the analysts in the oil industry were calling that auction disastrous, devastating or whatever term they could use to describe its seriousness, the minister, at that time the Honourable Pat Carney, was totally unaware of what was going on. She did not even adjust her rhetoric to the reality. She issued a news release in which she proudly stated: "The interest in the three parcels of land on the Grand Banks is certainly a positive sign the new frontier lands policy is working." Well, we all know that it is not working.

Exploration and development have virtually ceased on the east coast. If the government's policy was a success and if it was working, why would anyone call its results "catastrophic" and "a disaster"? Why did four Newfoundland business groups, including the St. John's Board of Trade, band together less than three weeks later to warn of "a total collapse of the East Coast drilling program" and draw attention to "devastating economic and employment ramifications"? I suppose I should now ask: Is it any wonder that your committee hears from witnesses who use the words "Fantasy Island" and "Disneyland" when describing both what is happening in Newfoundland and the attitude of the government in Ottawa?

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Masse, appeared before the committee, he finally admitted that all might not be well. He stated: "It is up to us to discover the means of encouraging activities during the difficult period we are now facing." The disaster that was and is occurring on the east coast was now referred to as a "difficult period". Well, that was an advance. Furthermore, although Mr. Masse, in his statement, acknowledged that the government had a responsibility to help alleviate the problem, his words have not been followed by any action. Again, he stated, "It is up to us to discover the means of encouraging activities." But that was five months ago. After acknowledging its responsibilities, the government has apparently decided to abdicate them. No action has been taken to discover any means by which to encourage activities.

The question which must now be addressed is: What is to be done? Clearly something must be done, not only for the sake of the Canadian oil industry but also for the longer term security of Canada's energy needs. I know the deputy leader quite rightly used the words "energy security" and "energy supply", but there is nothing in the bill or in the policy that will bring that about, at least for the offshore.

Time and time again, concern was raised in the committee on security of supply. One oil analyst, Mr. Doig again, described how we are using our reserves faster than we are finding or creating new ones. Since 1976, our oil reserves have fallen by 6 per cent and American reserves have fallen by 22 per cent. The Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board estimates that by the year 2010, Alberta's light and medium production will fall from 900,000 barrels per day to less than 100,000 barrels per day. As Mr. Doig pointed out in a brief submitted to the committee:

Saving our bacon has been the growth of non-conventional reserves which now represents about one-third of the total. On the conventional side, we are only replacing seven barrels for every 10 barrels produced.

Honourable senators, it is clear that the government has turned its back on the growth of non-conventional reserves. Exploration in the offshore and the frontier regions is not a priority at all. Development of the Husky upgrader has been stalled. The government is content to live off the exploration gains made during previous administrations, all the while condemning them and letting the future somehow take care of itself. That is not a policy. That is an abdication of responsibility.

Others have been pointing out to the government what might be done. It is not up to me to prescribe the solutions, but it is certainly up to the government to tell us why it has not publicly addressed solutions which have been proposed.

In June of last year, the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources recommended loan guarantees for frontier oil projects and a floor price for both non-conventional oil production and for the first thousand barrels per day of conventional production for each Canadian producer. These recommendations were ignored by the government. In its earlier report of August, 1985, the same committee of this body recommended "that special incentives for both petroleum exploration and development on Canada Lands be established to encourage Canadian participants." That recommendation has not been acted upon by the Government of Canada.

More recently, on December 2, 1986, Mr. Art Price, president of Husky Oil Ltd., appeared before the House of Commons Committee on Energy and presented an innovative and interesting plan which immediately caught the imagination of the industry. Mr. Price began by noting that:

The federal government is the only Canadian entity that can take steps that could temper the impacts of current low OPEC oil pricing policies on the Canadian economy and reduce the ability of OPEC to cause dramatic impacts through future pricing policies.

Honourable senators, I will not at the moment give expression to my views about OPEC and its role in the world economy. At another point I may. But Mr. Price certainly put his finger on a crucial problem existing in the world, namely, OPEC oil pricing policies, which are not intended in their formulation to assist the industrialized countries or the consumers of the industrialized countries, but are intended to increase long-term OPEC market power.

• (1550)

Any government or country which ignores the implications of OPEC pricing policies will live to regret it—but I will not go into that. I simply say that Mr. Price pinpointed the problem and proposed that the federal government enter into long-term contracts to buy oil at a specified price when it came on line some years in the future from major non-conventional sources.

Of course, we know that these sources include oil sands, Hibernia, the Beaufort Sea, and a floating production system on the Grand Banks. This proposal that was made in the House of Commons committee has many interesting aspects to it and should be examined. It was brought over three months ago, caused a stir in the industry, but the government has yet to respond officially.

It is regrettable that not only is the government unable to formulate new policies on its own, but it is also apparently incapable of evaluating and weighing the suggestions of others. The government is, in fact, acting as if Canada's needs will be met indefinitely by oil imported at less than $20 a barrel. That is simply not realistic. Unless we take action to ensure acceptable levels of future domestic production, we are inviting excessive and opportunistic future pricing by OPEC.

The government is pursuing a policy of non-intervention, a policy of no policy. It has introduced again this rather stale piece of legislation which is out of touch with current reality—certainly on the east coast—but it still repeats the rhetoric that it first used when it took office two and a half years ago. It has shown no capacity to adapt to the new situation. It should adapt and produce some new policies and abandon the rhetoric of the past.

When this government came to power it lost no time in proclaiming that the oil industry would be the engine of growth for the entire economy. Remember two and a half years ago when, in the flush of victory and the optimism generated by that victory, the oil industry was to be the engine of economic growth? Well, that has been abandoned. It was abandoned this afternoon by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who said, “A new impetus for economic growth can only come from trade with the United States.” The only impetus for economic growth in Canada that we can look forward to is a trade agreement with the United States!

So the people of Newfoundland can forget about the offshore as the impetus to their growth, and the people of Nova Scotia can forget about it, because the policy enunciated today, and yesterday, by the Prime Minister is that in the future even the offshore areas of Canada must rely not upon their natural resources in the main, but on a new bilateral trade agreement with the United States.

The government should rethink its approach and understand that by its abdication of responsibility—through its inability to conceive for itself a role in Canada’s energy future—it not only handed to OPEC the key which starts this engine of growth, but it also willfully neglected to keep a spare key for itself. That is a reckless policy and it is recklessness for which the people of Canada will suffer and for which the people of Atlantic Canada are now suffering because this bill, which is the energy policy for Atlantic Canada, offers no relief to the decline in economic activity and it offers no way by which exploration and possible development will take place. I say that it is fine that we should establish a framework and that there should be a place for Newfoundland in the future of the offshore and that we should provide $300 million in the offshore development fund, but what is the point of all of this if there is no development? That is the basic question.

I must express my regret that the government has not reflected the urgency of the situation in its policy and that it has brought forward a bill—and has asked us to pass it, which we will do—which was conceived in a time of altogether different economic circumstances.

Senator Frith: Well done!

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I believe most of us have committee meetings either in process or about to start, so I will not speak as long—you will be glad of this, I am sure, after a full afternoon—as I had intended to. I will try to make a couple of points, and then we could adjourn the debate on this, unless there was someone who wanted to follow me immediately.

I want to congratulate Senator Doody. His presentation of the situation was probably as good as anybody could hope for because he had a difficult job, as we all have, really, when we are dealing with the Newfoundland problem, which goes back hundreds of years.

There are two Newfoundland items before the Senate right now. One is the Atlantic Accord and the other is the Canada-France Agreement that took place two or three weeks ago.

Our difficulties with France and France’s difficulties with us go back almost to John Cabot’s time. You might remember—I am sure some of you do—that one of the famous dates in Canadian and French history was 1534, when Jacques Cartier came across the Atlantic on a voyage of exploration and pushed into the Strait of Belle Isle and into the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, hoping that he was the first to do that. He was somewhat chagrined to find out, when he reached his destination, that there were other French ships, ordinary fishing ships, ahead of him and, in addition to that, there were some large Basque whalers. From that period in the early 1500s right up until the present century, this problem between English settlers and French fishermen existed. Those of you who can visualize the Island of Newfoundland will realize that it is triangularly shaped. In those early years the French fished the coastal waters off northeastern and northern Newfoundland. In any given year there were as many as 600 French vessels in that area. There were others from Portugal and Spain, and, in time, England caught up.

● (1600)

However, the British were concentrated in the waters at the southeastern portion of Newfoundland, the so-called “English shore.” There was plenty of room for the French in the northeast and in the north and for the English in the Avalon Peninsula. That went on for a couple of hundred years.

However, by 1704, the situation had changed. At the end of the Spanish Succession War, which some of us called “Queen Anne’s War”, there was the famous treaty of 1714 in which France was guaranteed fishing rights off the northeastern coast of Newfoundland. Ever since then, that has remained part of every major treaty between France and Britain.

As the number of English settlers increased, they spread out and conflicts developed. I will not go into any more detail on that except to say that I had hoped, as I am sure many others have, that our difficulties with France would have been resolved. I do not want to give the impression that I am trying to paint France as being the villain in this case because I am not.

One of the major problems in this whole matter was the role of the British government. It may come as a surprise to some of you that, frequently, the British government supported French claims around Newfoundland to the detriment of the English, Irish and Welsh settlers who ran into conflict with the French. The English, Irish and Welsh were on one side and the French on the other.

My analogy leads up to the situation which exists today. On several occasions, France and Britain ganged up on Newfoundland and attempted to push through measures which would seriously diminish Newfoundland’s role in the fisheries and which would have meant that parts of the Island of Newfoundland would have been alienated. The two most serious occasions that that happened were in 1857 and 1874.

In 1857 France and Britain ganged up and put through an agreement without reference to the government of Newfoundland. Newfoundlanders had a government at that time just as Canada had a government. Newfoundlanders, to a man, to a woman, rebelled. Delegations were sent to England. They appeared before the British Parliament. Newfoundland emissaries travelled all over Britain enlisting the support of the British people. Here was this small colony with fewer than 200,000 people standing up to the two most powerful countries in the world at that time—Russia and Germany had not reached the point where they could compete with France and Britain. That small group of Newfoundlanders, largely by enlisting public support in Britain, forced England and France to capitulate as far as the legislation they had drawn up was concerned.

A similar event took place in 1874. I believe that some of the older members of this chamber, particularly Senators Denis and Flynn—neither of whom is in the chamber at this moment—would be interested in this. In the 1770s, a great lobster fishery developed around the shores of Newfoundland. It had not been developed previously because they had no means of preserving it, but by 1770 they had developed a technique which enabled them to process lobster, and Newfoundland lobster fishing rapidly became one of the leading fisheries in North America and the French claimed a monopoly on part of it.

France and England were “palsy-walsy” once more. Britain supported France and once again there was a complete eruption in Newfoundland headed by a Newfoundland fishing businessman by the name of James Baird whose grandson sat in this chamber as a senator, Senator Alex Baird, commonly known as Sandy, a famous World War I hero. James Baird headed the fight against Britain and France and appealed to the supreme courts in Newfoundland and Britain on two major matters. He won his argument in both instances, thereby forcing Britain and France once again to come to their knees so far as the Newfoundland fishery was concerned.

Although they are small in numbers, one has to be careful not to underestimate the people of Newfoundland in these matters. A couple of weeks ago, when the hullabaloo developed about the agreement between France and Britain, I could not help but think of how remarkably similar this situation is to what happened back in the previous century. As Senator MacEachen says, what is happening today is a disappointment. He also said the obvious, that is, that something must be done. But what? As I say, I do not know. Certainly, we cannot go on like this with Newfoundland forever getting the short end of the stick. I do not know what the answer is, nor do I pretend to. However, we have to do something.

For the sake of a little bit of history, I would like to mention a personal experience. In the years 1965 and 1966, I accompanied the then Premier of Newfoundland, Joey Smallwood, to Ottawa to meet with Prime Minister Lester Pearson. To me meeting this man was utterly fascinating. Only the three of us were present over in what was my first visit to the East Block, which was where the Prime Minister's Office then was. The matter under discussion was offshore oil resources. During those discussions Prime Minister Pearson made an informal offer or suggestion to us. After getting the advice of many leading people of one kind or another in the oil business, the result, to my disappointment, was that the Prime Minister's offer, which he was prepared to take back to his colleagues and eventually to Parliament, was not accepted. I cannot help but think that it was perhaps one of the most serious omissions on our part, although we thought then that our course of action was for the best.

Honourable senators, I have other things to say, but since we have other business and if no one would like to speak right now, I would like to move the adjournment, if that is agreeable.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not wish to close the debate at this point, but I would like to make a comment if I may. Perhaps I could ask a question of Senator Rowe or of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

It was my hope—and like the game show “Jeopardy” I will frame it in the form of a question in a few minutes—that we would be able to conclude the second reading debate on this bill this afternoon and that, if honourable senators opposite wished the legislation to go to committee, we would arrange a meeting of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee to have another, I hope short, look at the bill. The legislation has been before the Energy Committee, as I said earlier, on two different occasions and on our order paper at two different stages of its being. I had hoped to speak briefly on the bill this afternoon thereby finishing second reading. Of course, if other senators wish to take the adjournment, there is not a great deal that I would want to do to stop the debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had suggested—in fact, “insisted” would be a better word—to the Deputy Leader of the Government that this bill go back to committee for further study, because it has been some time since that committee studied the legislation and because there was some feeling that the committee had not placed sufficient emphasis on witnesses from the east coast. However, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate advised me today that he would not be insisting that the bill be sent to committee. So unless some other senator insists on the legislation going to committee, it seems to me that we will be able to skip that stage.

Senator Doody: Perhaps I could ask a question of Senator Rowe. I know that I am on very shaky ground here because this bill has been in progress in the other place for what appears to be an interminable period of time. In any event, it is here and I have been asked by the Government of Newfoundland to do what I can to move it along. Last week an announcement involving $66.6 million was made down there. Most of this money would be made available to the Province of Newfoundland to cover moneys which they, in turn, paid out of their own kitty to forward projects covered by the development fund provided for in this bill. It does not seem fair to me that we should hang the bill up any longer than necessary.

I am not trying to suggest that honourable senators do not have a right, indeed, a duty, to discuss the bill at whatever length they wish. I simply want to go on record as saying that I am trying to get the bill through this place as quickly as I can.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I am very happy to cooperate in this matter. I have nothing more of great significance to say. This is a matter that we could talk about for weeks and months, but let us consider my remarks concluded.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Rowe has concluded his remarks, and I have no indication that other honourable senators on our side wish to speak on the matter. Senator Doody will know if anyone on his side wishes to speak. If no one wishes to do so of course, Senator Doody can close the debate on the motion for second reading now. I suggest that we put off third reading until Thursday, thereby giving honourable senators who may wish to speak notice, and if somebody wishes to speak they can do so then.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I appreciate Senator Rowe's cooperation and, indeed, the cooperation of all honourable senators. If nobody else wishes to speak, I will conclude the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should start by thanking Senator Rowe for his kind comments at the beginning of his remarks and for his cooperation at the end of his remarks. It is not unusual that I should find myself thanking Senator Rowe. I have been thanking him for a number of years, and I hope that I will be able to do so for a number of years to come—perhaps not always in this place, as time is growing short, but, I hope, in other fora.

I would like to mention briefly the importance of the Atlantic Accord to Newfoundland. I know that Senator MacEachen went to great lengths and gave us a very learned dissertation on his conception of the national energy policy as it applies to the country as a whole and, in particular, as it applies to the east coast. My opening comments on Bill C-6, which is called, quite properly, the Newfoundland Accord, were aimed at hailing, in effect, the spirit of cooperation between the Province and the Government of Canada which occurred at the time of the signing of the agreement. I was not trying to convince anybody that there have not been some strains and difficulties in the meantime. Indeed, I suspect that tomorrow we will have an opportunity to hear something on the discord side of the federal-provincial relationship. The recognition of Newfoundland's interest in that offshore area and in the resources that are out there is a very important item for Newfoundland, not only in terms of economic development, which we hope will occur down the road, but also in terms of recognizing Newfoundland's place in Confederation as an equal partner and as a province with a right to develop and to prosper from what has always been considered in our province as one of our natural resources, the offshore oil. It was decided by a test court case that, in fact, this resource was not the property of the people of the province of Newfoundland. In compensation for that disappointment, the Government of Canada was generous enough to serve the people of Newfoundland a reasonable offshore accord, the terms and conditions of which, I think, are very generous.

• (1620)

I, too, regret, as Senator MacEachen does, the length of time it has taken from the signing of the accord—in February, 1985—until today when we find the bill at second reading stage in the Senate. I was present at the euphoric moment in the ballroom of the Hotel Newfoundland when some 500 people attended a luncheon. I do not share the impression of Miss Francis—I think she is the reporter who was quoted—that there was hysteria in the room. The 500-odd people present were mostly members of the Newfoundland Board of Trade, and they are hardly an hysterical bunch. I have attended meetings in Newfoundland when there was a great deal of hysteria, but that certainly was not one of them. Perhaps Miss Francis was upset by the fact that there was a 90-minute speech period before the food was served. Perhaps that is not the way they do things in Toronto. Perhaps she was a bit off because of that but, in any event, I regret she was upset. She is welcome in Newfoundland any time.

We have every reason to believe that Hibernia will come to pass. That will not happen tomorrow. The oil price situation in the world is such as to preclude that. To talk about the world glut in oil supplies and lay that at the feet of the Government of Canada as its responsibility is stretching the imagination a great deal.

You can talk about the lack of activity on the east coast, or in the frontier regions or in Canada generally, but it is hardly the fault of the Government of Canada when one looks at the world oil price situation and what has occurred.

I know that the oil industry is not happy with the present level of activity, and I suppose that if the taxpayers of Canada want to throw another $3 billion at the oil companies, then that is a decision the taxpayers of Canada will have to make. I see no indication that this particular government wants to follow that particular route. I certainly do not encourage this government to do so. There is no difficulty at all investing billions and billions of dollars in oil exploration and production when it is somebody else's money.

Some of the representatives of the companies that testified at the committee meetings were only too pleased to talk about government intervention and government floor prices, and so forth, when the price of oil was down, but when the price of oil goes up and the markets are good, they all decry government intervention. They say, "Don't touch us. Stay away from us. Let us run our own businesses." However, let the price of oil go down, and they are climbing over the fence and beating at the door looking for more government handouts and more government participation.

[Senator Doody.]

That is a situation that has to be changed. The security of supply is certainly of interest to Canadians, but it would be foolhardy indeed for Canadians to pay $50 a barrel for oil when it is available for $20. I suspect that the oil reserves we have today will still be here tomorrow when the price of oil once again climbs to an economic level.

I heard Senator MacEachen tell us that the bill is dated, that it is out of touch with the east coast, and so forth. I do not think it is out of touch at all. A $66.6 million announcement was made down there a few days ago by the ministers of the Government of Canada. That is certainly not out of touch or out of date with the people of the province of Newfoundland. That $66.6 million is every bit as important as it ever was. To downplay the Terra Nova investment as being modest, or only a meagre $45 million, indicates that somebody is out of touch with reality; a $45 million investment in two delineation wells on the Terra Nova field is a significant vote of confidence in the future of the oil development program on the east coast. I, together with everybody else in Newfoundland, am absolutely delighted to see that $45 million being invested, although it is not as good as $50 million, $60 million or $70 million would be. However, it is a significant vote of confidence in the future of the industry and, indeed, in the future of the province.

We are not going to hitch our wagon to offshore oil in Newfoundland, in any event. The past, the present and the future of that province is the fisheries industry. That will always continue to be the case. Whatever jobs, profits or gains we can obtain from the development of the offshore hydrocarbon resources we will more than welcome, but we will never move from the realization of the fact that our island is dedicated to and predicated on the fishery.

Honourable senators, I will not take any more time because we do have at least one other piece of business to deal with today of which I am aware. With those few words, I move second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Thursday next.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL 1986-87 (No. 2)

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-40, to provide borrowing authority.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill we are discussing today is the customary legislation to provide statutory borrowing authority for the government under the Financial Administration Act. That act requires parliamentary authority for the government to carry out a debt program to meet its financial requirements, apart, of course, from the refinancing of existing debt as it matures, the roll-overs.

I should also make mention of section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, since it applies to the present bill. Section 39 provides for short-term temporary borrowing by the government, but the term of the borrowing may not exceed six months and each borrowing requires approval by the Governor in Council.

The amount of borrowing authority sought by this bill is in two parts; one requests supplementary borrowing authority of $3.6 billion for current fiscal year 1986-87, the second part requests authority for $24.3 billion for the next fiscal year.

Let me deal first with the supplementary amount for the current year expiring at the end of this month. The primary reason for seeking this authority is related to the recent volatility in the exchange markets. We have experienced periods of sudden upward pressure on the value of the Canadian dollar, and the maintaining of an orderly market in this environment resulted in a very substantial increase in the government's official reserves. Domestic borrowing had to be increased to obtain the Canadian dollars to finance this increase in reserves.

The amount of $3.6 billion in supplementary borrowing authority is equal to the amount of borrowing authority that was used to acquire U.S. dollar reserves during the period from April 1, 1986 to January 31, 1987. While the government does have a non-lapsing reserve of $2 billion in borrowing authority carried forward from 1984-85, this was not sufficient to cover the borrowing necessary for foreign exchange operations.

The additional borrowing of $3.6 billion covered by this supplementary authority will permit the government to replenish this $2 billion reserve and have the operating margin required to meet any further exchange market interventions to the end of this fiscal year.

Honourable senators will note that clause 2(2) of the bill provides for the cancellation of all of this supplementary borrowing authority that remains unused at the end of the current fiscal year on March 31 to the extent that it exceeds borrowing carried out between February 18 and April 1, 1987 under the terms of section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

I should point out that in the normal pattern of financial operations, the government's financial requirements are customarily high in the first quarter of the fiscal year, and especially in April, when they usually exceed what can feasibly be financed by regular borrowing operations in that month. That is partially, I am told, because of the income tax returns, or refunds. For that reason, cash balances at the fiscal year-end have to be built up to meet this heavy seasonal demand, and this will be done on a temporary basis through section 39 short-term borrowing.

● (1630)

This section 39 authority was used to provide for a net increase of up to $600 million at the March 5 treasury bill auction. Since the refinancing of section 39 borrowing, when the debt matures, requires new borrowing authority, the bill before us makes special provision for this. It provides that borrowing authority, to the extent that it equals money borrowed under section 39 in 1986-87, can be carried forward into 1987-88 to allow refinancing of the maturing debt issued to build up cash balances in the current fiscal year.

I believe that is a new approach or a new clause in a borrowing or loan authority. I think it is necessary that the government act reasonably and prudently—

Senator Frith: Would you read that again?

Senator Doody: Yes. This will be done on a temporary basis through section 39 short-term borrowing. This section 39 authority was used to provide for a net increase of up to $600 million at the March 5 treasury bill auction. Since the refinancing of section 39 borrowing, when the debt matures, requires new borrowing authority, the bill before us makes special provision for this. It provides that borrowing authority, to the extent that it equals money borrowed under section 39 in 1986-87, can be carried forward into 1987-88 to allow refinancing of the maturing debt issued to build up cash balances in the current fiscal year.

That is the first time I have ever been asked for an encore during the reading of a loan bill. It is very gratifying!

Senator Frith: You will understand why, in view of your previous comments in connection with borrowing authority.

Senator Doody: I should note that the bill received prompt passage through the other place, and speedy passage by the Senate will help to achieve an orderly, ongoing debt program.

I should also like to point out that the borrowing authority which is requested for next fiscal year, Part II of the bill, will provide borrowing authority of $24.3 billion for 1987-88. This includes the financial requirements of $21.3 billion as outlined in the budget of February 18, plus a $3 billion non-lapsing reserve for unforeseen requirements, including any build-up of our official exchange reserves in the coming fiscal year.

In light of recent experience, I suggest that a $3 billion reserve is prudent and appropriate. Exchange market operations during January alone required the government to use about $2.5 billion in borrowing authority. So it is not unreasonable to make provision for the degree of flexibility that is needed in these times.

I should point out also the steady reduction in the government's financial requirements that has been experienced since the present government took office. The Minister of Finance, in the fall of 1985, set out the principles of fiscal policy that he intended to follow, one of which was to ensure substantial year-over-year reductions in the government's financial requirements. The success achieved in meeting this goal has been most encouraging. The $21.3 billion in financial requirements for next fiscal year represents a reduction of 28.5 per cent over three years.

Honourable senators, I mentioned earlier the need for some urgency with this particular bill. This is nothing strange, I am sure, to honourable senators. There always seems to be a need for expediency or speed with the borrowing bill. I am told that the Canadian government would like to go to the market as quickly as it can for a bond issue. There is also a weekly treasury bill auction coming up. The terms and conditions of those treasury bill auctions are always announced a month ahead of the actual auction itself. So any delay in the passage of the bill compresses the time frame in which they can go to the market, and results in less flexibility in trying to take advantage of favourable exchange rates or interest rates. With those words, honourable senators, I commend second reading of the borrowing bill, Bill C-40.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Stewart of Nova Scotia will be our principal spokesman on Bill C-40. Perhaps in order to clarify one aspect of the bill, may I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether I am right in the following stages of analysis of clause 2. First he tells us that there is already an unused borrowing authority of some $2 billion; is that correct?

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: Now, by clause 2(1) there will be an additional $3.6 billion borrowing authority between now and the end of March; is that correct?

Senator Doody: I believe that is true. I have passed over my notes.

Senator Frith: I am taking my figures from the bill. That is more than $5 billion in borrowing authority—that is, authority given by Parliament.

Senator Doody: The government may borrow up to an additional $3.6 billion, because it ends on March 31, 1987.

Senator Frith: And the addition is to the borrowing authority it already has—that is, parliamentary borrowing authority it already has left over for 1986-87.

Senator Doody: Three billion dollars of that can be carried over beyond March 31—

Senator Frith: But before it gets to that, just so that we understand—forgetting about subclause (2) for the moment, because subclause (2) brings in the Financial Administration Act—with regard to subclause (1) there is an unused borrowing authority, even if this bill were not passed, of some $2 billion. I think that is what you said.

Senator Doody: I am not sure whether or not that is being used for foreign exchange purposes.

Senator Frith: I thought that in the text you said that there was unused borrowing authority of some $2 billion.

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: In addition, if we are right about that, if this bill is passed there will be an additional $3.6 billion parliamentary borrowing authority usable between now and April 1.

Senator Doody: I think so.

Senator Frith: Then, if we go to subclause (2), we say that the borrowing authority conferred by subsection (1)—that is, $3.6 billion—that remains unused and in respect of which no action has been taken by the Governor in Council prior to April 1, 1987 pursuant to section 37 of the Financial Administration Act—

Section 37 deals with parliamentary authority, not Governor in Council authority—

Senator Doody: Section 39 is Governor in Council authority.

Senator Frith: It goes on:

—shall expire on March 31, 1987 to the extent that the unused authority—

We must mean the unused parliamentary authority:

—exceeds the amount authorized between February 18, 1987 and April 1, 1987, by the Governor in Council . . .

Under section 39.

Senator Doody: Presumably.

Senator Frith: So the part they are referring to—namely, the amount authorized between February 18 and April 1—is section 39 authority, not parliamentary authority. You may want to check this.

Senator Doody: Yes. It is getting technical.

Senator Frith: I know that the Deputy Leader of the Government, when he was Chairman of the Finance Committee and in opposition, persuaded the Finance Committee—and the Senate, as a matter of fact, as well as the government—that we should keep a very sharp eye on this business of held-over borrowing authority—borrowing authority sort of accumulated and stuffed away in a cupboard to be used even while applying for further parliamentary authority.

Senator Doody: The powers of persuasion have not diminished any.

Senator Frith: No. We are totally persuaded. I am wondering whether the Deputy Leader of the Government will obtain for us something a little more definite about those last four or five lines of clause 2(2). To the extent to which the unused authority exceeds the amount authorized, can we be sure that the word “authorized” means authorized under section 39 and not authorized by Parliament?

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: And may we have some figures as to what has been used since February 18 and might be used between now and April 1?

Senator Doody: Yes. I will undertake to get that information for the Senate, and I will make absolutely certain that the nods and grunts, and things that I did in between, are also absolutely accurate.

● (1640)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate in the name of Senator Stewart of Nova Scotia. I would like to ask that the debate be adjourned until Thursday of this week. Senator Stewart is unable to be here today or tomorrow, but he might be present on Thursday.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Stewart, debate adjourned.

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

UNION OR ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA—INQUIRY REFERRED TO FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability and advantages of the Turks and Caicos Islands becoming a part of Canada; the support for such action among Turks and Caicos Islanders and Canadians; and whether any of the following steps might be usefully taken prior to a formal union or association:—

- (1) adoption of a common currency;
- (2) designation of Canada's Governor General as the Queen's representative for the Islands;
- (3) a closer economic association between the two countries;
- (4) any change in procedures to our mutual advantage that would assist the entry of Canadians to the Islands, and of Islanders to Canada; and
- (5) provision of efficient direct air service between the two countries.—(Honourable Senator Macquarrie).

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I do not wish to take you beyond the sunset this afternoon but you must admit that I did not get a very early start on this matter, either. I am emboldened to say a few words about this particular inquiry because I gave an indication to Senator Argue that I would.

On the last inquiry I was involved in, I was reluctant to make a speech until I found a propitious day, an easy day when there was very little talk. Three and a half months after that, I finally delivered my remarks on that particular inquiry. I have therefore, even at my advanced age, learned a lesson or two. I do not intend to let these things moulder and gather dust for half a year while I wait for an easy day when I am just helpfully and hopefully filling in time.

I am very pleased to be involved in this matter. I am delighted with what Senator Argue said the other day, and in particular with what he said about me. I commend that part of his speech to your second reading, honourable senators. I always knew that he was a very learned man, very devoted to and caring for the problems of the west, especially the grain farmers, but I did not know he had such profound good judgment as I discovered when he discussed my qualifications. It was a most excellent speech.

On this Turks and Caicos Islands matter, as in so many other matters, I am now something of an emeritus figure. I am leaving the active leadership to people such as Senator Argue and Mr. McKenzie in the other place. It is quite a while since I led a delegation from the House of Commons to the Turks and Caicos Islands. In fact, it took place in 1973, a most auspicious year: One century after the Dominion of Canada had its other great acquisition. That was the year that Prince Edward Island joined the Dominion of Canada. The Earl of Dufferin went down there a few days after the July First event. He then wrote back and said: "According to the way they put it, Canada has joined Prince Edward Island."

Honourable senators, that is the way to look at it. There is no point in going around apologizing for yourself, especially when you are small.

Of the illustrious quintet that made up the committee which went down to the Turks and Caicos Islands in 1973, I am now the only relic, as Doug Fisher would say, remaining on Parliament Hill. Mr. Dupras and Mr. Trudel are no longer on the hill; Mr. Saltsman is no longer with us. Sadly—and prematurely—he died. The other member was William Knowles, a wonderful man from one of the Ontario constituencies in the tobacco belt. At approximately that time, Mr. Knowles announced that he was leaving politics for health reasons. As he put it, "My health is good and I want it to stay that way." So he never ran for office again.

I made a commitment to Senator Frith that I would tell him the derivation of Turks and Caicos, and I am able to do that. The Turks part of it comes from the flower of the cactus which is prevalent in the area: Echinocactus Myriostigma, as it is rendered in Latin. It has scarlet flowers shaped like a tarbush or a fez. In those days, they seemed to think that only the Turks went in for that kind of head-dress, although many other Muslim people do also. I, myself, own a couple of these hats, but I forbore to bring them here because, while according to the rules of Parliament, I can wear them into the chamber—in fact I could stand with them on—I could not speak, and that would be completely off-putting. Therefore you will have to take my word that they do look like a fez or a tarbush, and that is where the first part of the name comes from.

The other part is "Caicos" and this is really finite learning. It is not quite Spanish; it is Cuban. Everyone knows that there is no Cuban language any more than there is an American or a Canadian language. However, it is just a little different from what someone in Valencia would say is pure Spanish, but it means a large reef or shoal and, down in those islands, many of those large reefs are, in fact, islands. Therefore, honourable senators, I have given that little lecture in philology, and it is all out of the goodness of my heart!

Senator Gigantès: It is surely etymology, senator?

Senator Macquarrie: If it were not so late, senator, I would take that one up, point by point.

I also must claim that, when I was in the House of Commons, the rule was then—and I suppose it is still—that one member can produce one motion at a time per session and that is all there was to it. For 13 years I had on the Order Paper a resolution calling for closer relations between Canada and the Commonwealth Caribbean countries, and quite frequently I had a section there dealing with the Turks and Caicos Islands. When I came to this illustrious upper house, my first inquiry was one dealing with the same subject in exactly the same phraseology. So, honourable senators, although I was not overly successful, I was pretty darned persistent.

Senator Frith: Senator Macquarrie, there is some static coming through.

Senator Macquarrie: I know I am a dynamic character, but I cannot believe that I am responsible.

Senator Gigantès: You are emitting sparks; you are sparkling.

Senator Macquarrie: Yes, senator, sparkling is the better word. Senator Frith, I hope that has cured the problem. I have turned off all the power that is not my own.

Senator Frith: I find it almost impossible to be distracted by anything when I am listening to you, Senator Macquarrie, but that was distracting.

Senator Macquarrie: I appreciate that. Your judgment is great. Your hearing is temporarily defective, but your judgment overcomes it.

Honourable senators, I must say that I was a little distressed by the reaction in a recent issue of that great newspaper, the Globe and Mail, to Senator Argue's suggestion where, somewhat unworthily, they suggested that:

Drug-related corruption was so bad that last year Britain decided to abolish the territory's executive council and impose direct rule. 'It is almost impossible,' Britain's Junior Foreign Office Minister Tim Eggar told the Commons last July, 'to underestimate the extent of the drug traffic problem in the islands.'

They then suggest that perhaps what we should do is give a friendly wave from afar, and perhaps a few visits to sample the local solar energy. I felt that that was slightly condescending and slightly unfair. We know that there were problems there. I thought that the misdemeanours of these ministers were summarily and properly dealt with and disposed of. I cannot think of too many administrations that can look back too many years and say, "We all have clean hands." One of my professors used to say that it was all very clever to talk about the crooked administration of New York City in the days of Boss Tweed, but more careful reading would reveal that the administration of the city of Montreal at that time was said to be by "municipal banditti". We in Canada were probably a little more literate, but the reality was not all that different. To suggest that these little islands are a particular area which nourishes and nurtures criminals or misdeeming people is, in my view, just a little unfair.

● (1650)

I have always thought that it is not a good reaction to take the view that we have troubles enough, let's not add to them, that there are enough poor people in the maritimes, and so on. I think Milton was right when he said, "I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue." If we take that view, we draw around ourselves the mantle of isolation and the cloak of self-righteousness. We will not make our place in the world, which made great such people as L.B. Pearson. I think that to discard this notion of union simply because it might involve us or it might cost a dollar or two—or, even worse, that it might bring some benefits to these 7,000 or 8,000 people—is unacceptable.

In 1974 in the other place I asked why the government at that time was not going to do anything about the union of these islands with Canada. The suggestion, in response, was that it would be dislocating to the region if some benefits of the Canadian economy were extended to these small islands and not to other islands in the area. Honourable senators, when we launch CIDA programs, do we refuse a country like Benin simply on the basis that we cannot offer every other country in Africa a similar program? Do we take the view that if it cannot be universally applied, nothing can be done? The essence of the matter is that the Turks and Caicos have asked to become a part of our country. I do not think that it is incumbent upon us, in the light of their voluntary approach and attitude, to take the view that we know what is better for them; that such a union would contribute to the disequilibrium in the region.

I will not stress all of the advantages that would flow to Canada from this association. Another smart aleck remark often given in response to this proposal is, "Oh, God, you always bring this up on a bad day in the winter." Today I am going to lay it right down and hope that Hansard gets it—it is a lovely day in Ottawa and the sun is shining. I am not quaking before any great blizzard. If we were foolish enough to be sitting here in July—and I hope we never are—I would say the same thing then.

Honourable senators, I think that this is an exciting prospect. In achieving greatness, we in this country have moved from the east, where it all began, and eventually made true that Latin expression, a mari usque ad mare—from the sea all the way to the sea. Then we woke up and discovered there was another sea and achieved sovereignty up to the North Pole. That was one of the great achievements of Sir John A. Macdonald. As the old Encyclopaedia Canadiana used to say, eight of the nine great things accomplished in Canada were accomplished by Conservative governments. We achieved vertical sovereignty—now why not look to the south? Why not bring into our population people who would add greatly to the cosmopolitan nature of our society?

Narrow-minded people—and there are a few in the world—may say, "Oh my, they will all want to come north. That is what will happen—talk about immigration!" Well, if they came north in January, I think many of them would head back. But supposing that so foolish a thing did take place, could not this country of 26 million people stand such a strain as that caused by a few thousand more people who would be our own?

Senator Argue has done a splendid job. These are absolutely beautiful islands with 230 miles of beaches—beaches of the quality of those in Prince Edward Island, if I may say so.

Senator Corbin: In the summer!

Senator Macquarrie: Yes, Senator Corbin is quite right. Our beaches are all right in the winter, but I would not want to go in the water, I can say that.

These are white, beautiful beaches; the sea is that Caribbean blue—lovely clear water that we all know about and love. Because of the salt mines that were operated under the British for many years, it is the most buoyant water in which one can swim. Swimming is one of the few good habits I have left. It is a wonderful place to swim. I have never been swimming in the Great Salt Lake but I swam in the Dead Sea, and I find the sea around the Turks and Caicos much more attractive.

I have heard it said that the Turks are a place of sighing and waving palms. I think that is a misconception, however, which I will not spread further. These islands do not look like Tobago or Antigua. They do not have great swaying palms. The growth is palmetto and mangrove—somewhat stunted but quite attractive.

Yesterday I had a telephone call from someone who told me that this country has great potential for raising bees. I am not an apiarist, although I used to like honey, but I have learned that the constant polluting of the air and the advances upon the great open spaces make it difficult to carry through the industry of the apiarists with success. Apparently, the Turks and Caicos would be a great area for those who are involved in that important business.

These islands, as we know, would provide a tremendously good place for tourism. I know nothing about the possibilities of investment—I am not a businessman and I am not interested in making money. Anyone who takes my advice in this regard would not likely advance, so I will refrain from giving it.

Senator MacDonald: But you do own land there.

Senator Macquarrie: I wish I did, although I probably would not know what to do with it. Had I wanted to make money years ago I probably would have studied law, medicine or something like that, but it is a little late now to take any of those courses. I cannot, therefore, provide any details on business.

I must reply to Senator Spivak, who asked about distances. This place is 100 miles north-northeast of Haiti, 570 miles from Miami and 400 miles from Puerto Rico. It has good air service now, which it did not have before. Its area is 166 square miles.

There are six or seven islands and when they put on a banquet, as they did in 1973, there is one on every island. I remember one particular occasion where few after dinner speeches were delivered. While they do not really produce rum, they certainly know how to mix it. I made a little speech of thanks in which I told them how much the West Indies meant to me and to all maritimers. I told them that I was especially endeared to their islands because I come from a small island and knew what a small island was. I think I quoted Lord Tweedsmuir, that great man—perhaps our greatest Governor General and certainly our most literate—who said that small countries and small islands are wonderful because you can carry them the more easily in your heart.

● (1700)

After I was through, one chap said to me, "How big is that place of yours, Prince Edward Island?" As every school boy on the island knows, I said, "Two thousand one hundred eighty-four square miles." He said, "Geez, man, do you call that small?" So, this little community that we are talking about is so minuscule that P.E.I. is quite an empire by comparison.

I suggest that we not laugh about the expression "Turks and Caicos," which always seems to amuse people—I do not know why it does, or why the union of one country with another is a joke. No one laughed about Benelux, and I do not remember anyone hah, hah, hahing about Newfoundland joining Canada. They laughed at Newfoundland jokes after they came in, but the union was not a subject of great mirth.

Senator Doody: People from the province are not that amused.

Senator Macquarrie: There you go. Some of the Newfoundlanders were not amused.

I do not know whether they would have a referendum down there—I have no idea—but I felt that in 1973 everybody thought I had a Canadian flag in my briefcase and was going to run it up their flagpole, which would be quite an interesting thing for an opposition member of the House of Commons to do. But I did not have my flag with me.

I can only say that there is a sentiment of great goodwill toward Canada, and I do not think that we should dissipate it. I have not talked to Prime Ministers and others about what the likely prospect is of these islands becoming a part of Canada, and I have no way of knowing whether the suggestion will be better treated than it was in the 1970s, but I hope so. I think it is a good idea. I am not afraid of the responsibilities; I know that this status will take quite a while. They want the Canadian system of education and right there you have a problem, because we have a provincial system. There are some questions to consider about the effects on the islands. Would they go through a period of being a territory? Would they go through a period of an economic union phasing into political union? All of these things require a lot of talk, negotiation, careful discussion, and good study.

I used to say in the other house that this proposal should go to a joint committee of the two houses. Stanley Knowles always supported me on this, but one day he reserved his support. He said, "I notice you mentioned rum and you also mentioned a joint committee. Both rum and the Senate are two things that we can do without as far as I am concerned." Anyway, the motion did not go through, so Mr. Knowles had no great anxieties on either score.

Here it is St. Patrick's Day. I am a dour Presbyterian practising Lent—which is a foolish thing to do—but it is all the more difficult to talk about the West Indies whose greatest product, which brought the emotions of the maritimes and the West Indies into sweet harmony, was the fruit of the cane. I cannot put on a party tonight for you as I used to do after my speeches on statements and motions because of these things.

I want to commend one thing. I have, as all senators do I am sure, a communiqué from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the Caribbian training seminars. It closes by indicating that "this tradition of the Canadian sponsored diplomatic training activities in the region reaffirms a long-established 'special relationship' between Canada and the Commonwealth Caribbean."

I am supporting Senator Argue on this because I think it is a good idea. It challenges us and allows us to think of new responsibilities. As Mr. Pearson used to say, it is good for us in Canada to take our minds off our own internal problems and think beyond.

I may be quoting what I once said—in fact, I have said it for many years: I never pay much attention to those people who say that charity begins at home because those guys are not too charitable at home, either—at least I never saw any that were. I think there is a challenge here. There is a possibility of doing something interesting and something unique. There is something in it for us, but I am more interested in what we can do for people who are, in a sense, knocking on our doors. It is not a good host, not a good Commonwealth brother who would do anything but open that door.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not think Senator Argue will be here this week or next. He asked me to ask if there were any other senators wishing to speak to this and if not, it is his wish—and I believe Senator Macquarrie's—that this matter be referred to the committee on Foreign Affairs.

I am prepared to move that because it is appropriate to refer an inquiry to a committee. It might eventually turn into a motion, but it is not in that form at this stage. I am prepared to do it on behalf of Senator Argue, unless Senator Macquarrie would like to do it as a co-sponsor, so to speak.

Senator Macquarrie: I would second it.

Senator Frith: On behalf of Senator Argue, I move that this inquiry be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for study and report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, for Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie:

That this inquiry be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for study and report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments (Statutory Instruments No. 36), presented in the Senate on February 5, 1987.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, since this matter has been carried on the Orders of the Day since some time in February, I thought I might make a comment or two that I think would not last more than a minute or two, and perhaps this matter can be concluded.

Briefly, the report of the committee deals with the fact that the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments found that the particular regulations governing the halibut fishery off the west coast of Canada and the United States was, in the opinion of the committee, illegal. Very simply, the regulation was adopted. Governor in Council passed regulations on June 28, 1984.

First, in the opinion of our counsel and, subsequently, the opinion of the entire committee, under the International Pacific Halibut Commission, an agreement reached between Canada and the United States in 1953—

Senator Frith: Is this report somewhere in our brief?

Senator Nurgitz: Is it ever.

Senator Doody: You mean you have not read it?

Senator Frith: I thought I read something about vegetables.

Senator Nurgitz: Well, vegetables is the next report.

Senator Frith: Okay.

Senator Nurgitz: I thought I would deal with some fish today.

To repeat myself, under a 1953 agreement between Canada and the United States, the International Pacific Halibut Commission was established. This commission has the authority to make regulations. A regulation was passed by the Governor in Council and our committee believes that the wrong body passed it. It is as simple as that.

At one point we thought that the minister concurred; he has since taken the position that the regulation could be passed either by the Governor in Council or by the International Pacific Halibut Commission. We disagree.

That is the nature of the report. I do not know what more can be said about it. I brought it to the attention of the Senate and I see no need for it to be carried further.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): All that is being recommended in this case is that future regulations to implement the convention be enacted by the International Pacific Halibut Commission; whereas the other recommendation is a little more serious, it is one that suggests that you put into the form of a motion the mechanism which will, in fact, declare these regulations invalid unless someone does something about them. However, that does not apply in this case.

Senator Nurgitz: It does not apply. I understand what Senator Frith is saying but I do not want to get into whether he is right or wrong on the fruit, vegetable and honey regulations which is what he is referring to.

Senator Frith: As they say, "That is another show."

Senator Nurgitz: That is right.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

PRIVILEGE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to Hansard of yesterday and particularly to the resumption of the inquiry with respect to the desirability of the union or association of the Turks and Caicos Islands with Canada. You will note that on page 641 Senator Macquarrie said:

These islands, as we know, would provide a tremendously good place for tourism. I know nothing about the possibilities of investment—I am not a businessman and I am not interested in making money. Anyone who takes my advice in this regard would not likely advance, so I will refrain from giving it.

At which point I interjected, "But you do own land there."

These bons mots have invariably gotten me into trouble over the years.

Senator Frith: That is true, without exception.

Senator MacDonald: Of course, Hansard cannot record the tone of voice used in making such remarks or the supposed wit in behind their making. In this instance one man's supposed wit can sometimes be another man's wound. I have written a letter to Senator Macquarrie apologizing for this smart alec remark, and I would like this chamber to know that I have done so.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while we are referring to yesterday's Debates I have, perhaps, a footnote of order. At page 627 of yesterday's Debates of the Senate, Senator Bosa asked a question relating to Consumer and Corporate Affairs and a writ that had been issued against the minister, to which the Leader of the Government in the Senate pointed out that since there had been something claimed in a writ he did not want to deal with the question because it was before the courts.

I would like to outline to honourable senators the status of sub-judice. The references in Beauchesne's at pages 118 and 119 do not completely support the position taken by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It seems to be clear that as a voluntary measure or convention Parliament does not comment on criminal cases before the courts. However, citation 337 says:

(1) No settled practice has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.

(2) In civil cases the convention does not apply until the matter has reached the trial stage.

And there is a citation from Debates of February 11, 1976. So sub-judice in civil cases is not as clearly settled as it is in criminal cases. It seems that the convention applies in civil cases only in the event the case has reached the trial stage.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for his intervention.

Senator Frith: I am not urging you to change your answer.

Senator Murray: I have not consulted the authorities or the precedents the honourable senator cites. I simply say that my reply to Senator Bosa is based on the fact that we in this house, as do members of the other house, enjoy an enormous privilege, and that is the privilege of being able to speak our minds on any and every subject without our comments becoming actionable outside this place. This is a tremendous privilege and one that I think should be used with the utmost restraint, especially when it regards matters that are at any stage of a judicial proceeding, whether criminal or civil.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if it meets with your agreement, it might be appropriate at this time to ask that Question Period, Orders of the Day Nos. 1 to 5 and various other matters of business before us be deferred so that we may resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing the testimony of the Premier of Newfoundland, who is ready, available and anxious to get on with the matter. May we now proceed to Order No. 6?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it your wish that witnesses be invited to attend the committee now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Pursuant to Order adopted on February 11, 1987, the Honourable A. Brian Peckford, Mr. Leslie J. Dean and Mr. Hal Stanley were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, the honourable Premier of Newfoundland scarcely needs an introduction here or anywhere else in Canada. The Honourable Brian Peckford has been a member of the House of Assembly of Newfoundland since 1972. He has been Minister of Energy and Mines, and since 1979 he has been Premier of that province. He has been a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada since 1982.

Premier Peckford is accompanied today by: Mr. Leslie J. Dean, Assistant Deputy Minister, Policy Planning, the Department of Fisheries, who is on the Premier's immediate right; and Mr. Hal Stanley, the Deputy Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs.

On behalf of all senators, I take pleasure in extending a very warm welcome to the Premier and his officials.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say to our witnesses that we welcome them in our midst and that we are pleased and honoured that they have accepted our invitation.

May I further say that you are not in a court of law, that you are not under oath, that you are in the Senate of Canada. The Senate has a longstanding tradition of being factual. Of course, every word, whether in English or in French, is recorded. You are at liberty to use either one of the two official languages of our country. We want you to feel at ease and relaxed. We will give you all the time you need to answer questions properly. You may consult your assistants or companions at any time. We would ask you to please keep your preamble brief. In other words, no speech in answer to a question. My honourable colleagues have a reputation of being fair and co-operative.

I now call upon the Honourable the Premier of Newfoundland.

Hon. A. Brian Peckford, Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador: Honourable senators, first of all, let me thank you for your invitation to appear before this body today. We are very appreciative of having an opportunity to lay before you certain facts which we think are important to Canada and particularly important to the province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

I have been instructed to give my remarks in one of the two official languages of Canada. I hasten to add that I may be adding a third, Newfoundlandese. While that has not yet been recognized as an official language of Canada, certainly it has certain things about it that I am sure Senator Doody would not want me to depart from.

The Government of Newfoundland and Labrador rejects the recently signed Canada-France Fisheries Agreement. There are two main reasons for this rejection. First, the agreement gives away non-surplus fish resources, which are absolutely critical to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. Second, the Government of Newfoundland, the industry and all other east coast fishing interests, were excluded from the negotiations immediately preceding the signing of the agreement.

On numerous previous occasions, and more particularly at both the Premiers' Conference in Edmonton last August and at the last First Ministers' Conference in November in Vancouver, I impressed upon my colleagues and the Government of Canada the overall significance of the fishing industry to our province and the disastrous implications of foreign overfishing. At every opportunity the Government of Newfoundland clearly articulated the need for a greater voice in the management of our fishery resource, given our concerns over the federal government's insensitivity to our position on crucial fishing management issues.

During the course of the Canada-France discussions, we made it absolutely clear to the federal government and I, personally, to the Prime Minister on a number of occasions, that the final outcome of these negotiations would have major implications for our province. For this reason, we also made it absolutely clear to the federal government that their final position should reflect our concerns.

We were assured by the Prime Minister that this would be the case and that the interests of the east coast fishery would not be overridden by interests in maintaining good relations with France. The basis of our concern took on new dimensions towards the end of 1986 when, with our full support, and principally for conservation reasons, the northern cod quota for Canadian fishermen was reduced by 10,000 tonnes. The Canadian offshore fleet will bear this total reduction. Amazingly, the Government of Canada, less than one month after making this reduction, committed our valuable non-surplus cod for 1988-1991 to a foreign country. This was done without knowing whether or not the northern cod stock quota for Canadians will be reduced further in 1988. Our fragile rural economy, which is totally dependent on the fishing industry, cannot survive such insensitive decisions on the part of the federal government.

Moreover, Newfoundlanders were shocked to learn that the agreement with France did not address the blatant French overfishing activity in the disputed 3Ps fisheries zone off the south coast of Newfoundland.

● (1410)

Whereas the east coast of our province is totally dependent on the northern cod stock, the entire south coast inshore fishery is dependent on the 3Ps cod stock. We impressed upon the Government of Canada continuously that any acceptable agreement must immediately address this serious overfishing problem. Recent French catches have exceeded the Canadian assigned quota of 6,400 tonnes by 20,000 tonnes, and sometimes more.

However, having put 3,500 tonnes of Gulf of St. Lawrence cod on the table to satisfy obligations under the 1972 Canada-France treaty; having put 3,000 tonnes of 2GH surplus cod on the table; and having given a commitment to include valuable non-surplus northern cod in any 1988-1991 interim fisheries agreement, France's overfishing in the 3Ps area will continue unchecked, in spite of all of those concessions made by Canada. In return, the agreement only commits France to talk about arbitration on the 3Ps boundary, with no assurance whatsoever that France will agree to submit the boundary question to third-party arbitration. Clearly, from a fisheries management perspective, the agreement is totally unacceptable. It is also clearly evident that Canada demonstrated a total insensitivity to the concerns raised by the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, and indeed by other Atlantic provinces and the fishing industry at large.

The second dimension of the Canada-France agreement which is also of grave concern to Newfoundlanders relates to the consultative process. This I will address in greater detail later, but suffice it to say that the Province, at the eleventh hour and when real decisions were being made, was excluded from the negotiations. At no time was the Province aware that the federal government had made the decision to offer northern cod to France. Indeed, the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador was not officially informed of the January 23 to 24 meeting in Paris until the meeting was actually in progress. Clearly, on an issue of such importance to our province and on an issue which I had publicly raised with the Prime Minister, the federal government ignored the federal-provincial consultative process.

Let me place our opposition to the agreement Canada has signed with France in an historical perspective. In 1972, Canada signed an agreement with France relating to French fishing rights off the Atlantic coast of Canada. This new agreement superseded all previous treaty provisions relating to the right of French nationals to fish in Canadian waters.

There are three major elements in the treaty of 1972. The first provided for metropolitan French vessels to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on an equal footing with Canadian vessels until May, 1986. This right has now terminated.

Canada also undertook, in the event of an expansion in the limits to its fishing jurisdiction on the Atlantic coast, to "recognize the right of French nationals to fish in these waters, subject to possible measures for conservation of resources . . ." That is the right to fish—not northern cod, but the right to fish, subject to conservation measures.

Senator Frith: Is that still under number one, Mr. Peckford? That is still under heading number one, is it?

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

We maintain that while this provision obligates Canada to provide fish to France, it does not obligate us to provide our most valuable, non-surplus fish. Canada can discharge its obligations to France by providing surplus fish, of which there are great numbers. France, on the other hand, maintains it has a preferential and unlimited right, subject only to conservation measures, to fish anywhere in Canadian waters, and it is through this provision that France maintains it has a right to northern cod.

Finally, the treaty also permits a maximum of ten trawlers based in Saint Pierre and Miquelon to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This right is "in perpetuity." It is also unquantified and is a matter of dispute between Canada and France.

This treaty of 1972 represents the last vestige of French fishing rights in Newfoundland which go back to the eighteenth century. France's demands under the treaty are totally unreasonable, and any accommodation of these demands by Canada would be unconscionable and insensitive to the needs and welfare of Canadians who are dependent on Canada's fish resources.

Closely related to the 1972 fishing treaty is the boundary dispute between the two countries around Saint Pierre and Miquelon. In 1977, Canada declared a 200-mile exclusive economic zone. France followed shortly afterwards and declared a 200-mile exclusive economic zone around Saint Pierre and Miquelon. This disputed zone is the area you have all perhaps now become familiar with as 3Ps.

Canada maintains that, under international law, France is only entitled to a 12-mile territorial sea. Throughout all the negotiations over the past nine years, France has continued to maintain a totally unreasonable position.

Since the declaration by both countries of a 200-mile exclusive economic zone in 1977, Canada and France have met on a regular basis to try to resolve by negotiation the boundary around Saint Pierre and Miquelon and also to come to agreement on France's rights to fish stocks in the waters around Newfoundland. Unfortunately, the two have become linked.

Both countries must agree to submit the boundary dispute to independent international arbitration. Canada has agreed; France has not. Up until now Canada has used only the fish as—may I be so bold as to say—the "bait" to get them to the boundary arbitration. Of course, our argument, which I will turn to in a second, is that other trade levers should be used as well and it should not be just on the backs of Newfoundland fishermen that we should try to resolve that boundary dispute.

I would like to review with you the province's involvement in these discussions. In 1978, the Government of Newfoundland received a commitment from the federal government to include two provincial representatives at all meetings when the boundary and resource-related issues were being discussed.

From 1978 until 1984, there were seven rounds of negotiations between Canada and France. Representatives from the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador were invited to all sessions and, in addition to attendance at the formal negotiating sessions, the federal government consulted the province on a regular basis. From the very beginning then, the government of Newfoundland was involved in these meetings.

In 1985 the federal government expanded its consultative process and established an advisory committee of officials from governments, industry and unions in the five eastern provinces. The Government of Newfoundland participated in this committee. Meetings of this committee were called on a regular basis by the federal government prior to each of the formal negotiating meetings with France.

At the December, 1986, meeting in Paris and the meetings in Ottawa on January 12-16, 1987, both countries, at France's suggestion, agreed that they would restrict their delegations. Nevertheless, the federal government included a representative of the Government of Newfoundland as part of its delegation.

From the first negotiations held in 1978 to the round of negotiations held in Ottawa on January 12-16, 1987, the Government of Newfoundland had been included in the Canadian delegation at all meetings.

This process of involvement and consultation continued up until the secret meeting in Paris on January 23-24, 1987. This was the first time the Government of Newfoundland was excluded from meetings between Canada and France and this was the first time that the Government of Canada put 2J+3KL, or northern cod, on the table.

In all the previous discussions, the government of Newfoundland had consistently and forcefully stated its objection to offering any 2J+3KL northern cod to France. Yet, at the first meeting from which the Government of Newfoundland was excluded, the Government of Canada made a commitment to France to include 2J+3KL northern cod in an interim fisheries arrangement for 1988-91.

Following the conclusion of the meetings between Canada and France in Ottawa on January 16, 1987, the Province received a call from officials in the federal government of January 20 advising that the federal government was considering offering France this 2J+3KL northern cod and asking for the Province's reaction if this cod were put on the table. The federal government was advised in no uncertain terms that the Government of Newfoundland could not accept this proposal. No mention was made of any meeting in Paris or that the Government of Newfoundland would be excluded from any such meeting. Neither were we told that a final decision had been made to offer France this northern cod.

Was this an oversight or was this deliberate? There had never been an occasion in the previous nine years when the Government of Newfoundland had not been advised of the position Canada would take at these meetings, nor had we been excluded from these meetings. In our view, it is not plausible to believe that the failure to advise us of the 2J+3KL decision and to exclude us from the meetings were oversights when this had never happened before and when it was known to the Canadian negotiators that the position Canada was to take at that meeting was strongly opposed by the Government of Newfoundland. Was this the reason Newfoundland was not advised of and was excluded from the meeting?

I can only conclude that Newfoundland was excluded because of our well known and often stated position that northern cod should not be on the table.

One of Canada's objectives in this process was to obtain France's agreement to arbitrate the boundary. The Government of Newfoundland and Labrador agreed. The long-term solution to this overfishing problem is a resolution of the Canada-France boundary question through third-party arbitration. But the Government of Newfoundland cannot support an agreement which uses non-surplus fish stocks to entice France to third-party arbitration, especially when that agreement does not contain measures to control French overfishing in the 3Ps zone. To buy an agreement to arbitrate Canada's boundary at the expense of the non-surplus fish stocks on the northeast coast of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Canadian fishing industry is unacceptable.

We are prepared to pay our share of the price to obtain France's agreement to arbitrate the boundary, but this price must be fair and reasonable and must not jeopardize the long-term interests of the fishing industry. As a demonstration of our reasonableness, we agreed to offer to France 10,000 tonnes of Greenland halibut—a surplus but valuable species—as well as 2,000 tonnes of surplus cod in the 2GH zone, located in the northern part of Labrador. France totally rejected this generous offer. We do not understand why Canada did not maintain that sort of position throughout and refuse to sign the agreement. Canada would have had very good arguments to use, because the undefined right of France to fish in Canadian waters is just that, an undefined right. One can define it and make it real with surplus fish just as well as with non-surplus fish. One would submit that it could be made even better that way. In any normal arbitration procedure, any reasonable person would have to say that France's undefined right to fish is being fulfilled.

Senator Frith: Better bait!

Mr. Peckford: Better bait, yes.

It is critical to realize that there cannot be a solution to this national boundary issue if it is confined to fish. This is really the sad history of Newfoundland because this has happened with respect to the E.E.C. too. A satisfactory agreement between Canada and France to arbitrate the boundary can be achieved, but only if the Canadian government is prepared to use all of the instruments of its foreign policy and its bilateral relationship with France. It so happens that the boundary dispute arises from the coast of Newfoundland. It so happens that the boundary dispute, because it is on salt water, involves fish. But that in no way should mean that the only instrument to be used to solve that dispute is the fish, if Newfoundland is truly a part of Canada. The whole foreign policy of the Government of Canada should be used to help Canadians who live in Newfoundland. To date, Canada has not been prepared to use these other instruments.

On numerous occasions during the past year, the Government of Newfoundland has called upon the Prime Minister not to jeopardize the interests of the Canadian fishing industry by the desire to maintain cordial relations with France.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the central issue is one of boundaries, not fish, and, as a boundary issue, it is a Canadian, not just a Newfoundland, issue. It is a question of Canada's national borders and sovereignty that we are talking about.

Canada's entirely reasonable position is that the Canada-France boundary dispute should be submitted to an impartial third-party international tribunal for arbitration and that, in the interim, both countries agree not to overfish the resource. France's entirely unreasonable position is to refuse to go to third-party arbitration and to continue to overfish and destroy the resource on which its own people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon and Canadians depend.

Honourable senators, I have dealt in some detail with the problems and serious implications of the recent Canada-France fishing agreement for the province of Newfoundland and the east coast fishery. I would now like to address ways in which I believe the disastrous mistake of January 24 can be avoided in the future.

It is an integral feature of Confederation that provinces manage their resources. Minerals, forests, oil and gas are all under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, while agriculture is an area of concurrent jurisdiction. There have been anomalies in provincial jurisdiction over natural resources in the past, but where these anomalies have existed, they have also been removed by corrective action. For example, in 1930 the Natural Resources Transfer Act transferred all the resources contained in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to those provinces by constitutional amendment; and in February, 1985—far more recent and current to the present situation—the federal government and the Government of Newfoundland signed the Atlantic Accord, which provides for joint management of offshore mineral resources. The Accord also provides for parallel legislation by those governments and eventual constitutional entrenchment.

The fishery is the one major natural resource in Canada which is under federal rather than provincial jurisdiction. The Province of Newfoundland and Labrador has no management control whatsoever over the fishing resources—the resources upon which its people are dependent. No province can continue to endure a situation where it has no legislative authority over a resource, the management of which pervades every aspect of its society and determines the social, economic and cultural vitality of virtually every one of its communities.

The latest Canada-France agreement is just one more example of the consequences when a province does not have any management control over its basic resources. Newfoundland was excluded from the decision to offer non-surplus northern cod to France, and Newfoundland was excluded from the meeting with France at which the agreement was signed.

This is not the first time that the province's resources have been traded away over our objections and the objections of the industry. An example is the 1972 Canada-France Fishing Treaty itself. I have already addressed this treaty earlier in my remarks. Suffice it to repeat that the treaty gives a foreign nation—France—substantial fishing rights in Canadian waters. While these rights have still to be quantified, even the most favourable interpretation of the treaty will provide France with the right of access to valuable fish resources in our waters.

We do not question the right of the people of Saint Pierre and Miquelon to maintain their historic fishing patterns. We do question, however, the recognition by the Government of Canada—in perpetuity—of rights of a foreign nation, on the other side of the Atlantic, to continue to have fishing rights in Canadian waters on the basis of past centuries when France was a colonial power in the New World.

A second recent example of Canada's fish resources being traded away to foreigners over the objections of the Province of Newfoundland and of the whole industry is the E.E.C. Long-Term Agreement.

In 1981 Canada signed a long-term fishing agreement with the European Community. In that agreement, Canada gave the Community allocations of fish in Canadian waters in return for certain market concessions, an agreement by the E.E.C. to follow Canadian conservation measures. The Province of Newfoundland vehemently opposed this agreement at the time. The provinces and the industry in general were also opposed; but Ottawa proceeded with the agreement. Over the life of the agreement, the E.E.C. received allocations of 136,500 tonnes of fish in Canadian waters. For 1987 alone, these allocations are valued at $38.75 million. In addition, Canada was not able to control overfishing by the E.E.C. in our waters. We gave them allocations and quotas when we needed the fish to get our 20 per cent unemployment rate down, which, if everyone was counted, would be about 40 per cent. We gave them the fish, which gave them entry to our waters; and they then went and overfished beyond the quota, and the market advantages were absolutely worthless. The tariff reductions were one per cent and 2 per cent, and there was still a tariff on. So they took our fish back, processed it in their country, and what fish we had left we processed, but we could not compete with our fish over there because we had an extra tariff to go through before we could compete.

Fortunately this terrible agreement ends on December 31, 1987. At the end of this year we will finally have excluded the E.E.C. fleet from our waters. There must be no equivocation on Canada's part that we must never again enter into such an agreement—and I hope that the Government of Canada is not considering any further negotiations with the E.E.C. to start another new agreement to replace this one. There is no provision in the present agreement for renewals, reopenings or whatever.

● (1430)

Unfortunately, the January 24 Canada-France Agreement continues this sad progression of giving away to foreigners the fish resources which are so critical to the economy of the whole east coast of Canada. This must stop. But it will not stop until provinces have a measure of management control over the fish resources. This fact has been clearly recognized by all Canadian premiers. First, at the twenty-sixth annual Premiers' Conference, all premiers agreed that:

—it is important that provinces, as managers of their economies, have a greater jurisdictional presence in the management of the fishery resource.

Second, at the twenty-seventh annual Premiers' Conference, the premiers agreed that:

—a major problem which plagues the Atlantic fishery is control and management of the resource. Canadian fishermen do not have sufficient allocations or quotas to meet market demand—

Also at the twenty-seventh annual Premiers' Conference, premiers agreed they would pursue further constitutional discussions, and specifically referenced fisheries as one of the items which should be included in these discussions.

In the same spirit of concern, premiers at a special meeting in Toronto on February 9, 1987, called for a review of the January 24 Canada-France Agreement.

To summarize, it is abundantly clear that: First, it is an anomaly in Confederation that provinces do not have basic management control over this critical natural resource, the fishery; second, the consequence of this lack of management control of the fishing resource by the provinces has been a series of federal give-aways of our resources; third, all Canadian premiers are unanimously agreed that this situation should be changed; and, fourth, there are precedents in our history whereby the principle of the equality of constitutional treatment with respect to resources is consistent with Canadian constitutional practice—for example, the 1930 Natural Resources Transfer Act and the Atlantic Accord.

Newfoundland and Labrador has for some years advocated a proposal for concurrent jurisdiction. We are not talking here about provinces suddenly usurping federal authority. We are talking about a concurrent jurisdiction whereby we would have some say and, obviously, in international matters the federal government would supersede. But we would have some say, which would help to ensure that agreements of this kind would not happen again. Under this arrangement the federal government would retain its basic resource management powers. However, economic decisions concerning the allocation and harvesting of the resource would be the prerogative of the provinces. This is just one approach; there may be others. But if we are to avoid the problems, discord and disunity of the past few months, Canada must address this basic constitutional problem in respect of fishery resource management.

In conclusion, I want to highlight the following points: First, the Canada-France Fisheries Agreement was made in a secret meeting without the knowledge and involvement of the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador. Second, the agreement was made in total disregard of the well known position of the Government of Newfoundland and the industry that access to the valuable northern cod stocks should not be provided to France under any conditions. Third, the agreement does not place any controls on France's blatant overfishing in 3Ps. Fourth, the agreement only commits France to "talk" about arbitration—it does not commit France to third-party arbitration. Fifth, the agreement provides France with access to the northern cod stocks at a time when the quotas to Canadian fishermen have been reduced. Sixth, the agreement does not have the support of the people in the provinces affected.

Seventh, the agreement must therefore be cancelled. Eighth, Canada must use the full weight of its foreign policy to exert pressure on France to agree to third-party arbitration on the boundary. Ninth, this agreement would not have been concluded if provinces had some control over the management of this vital fisheries resource. Tenth, the fishery is the only major national resource in the Canadian federation over which provinces have no jurisdiction. Eleventh, constitutional change is required to give provinces some management control over their fishery resources.

Honourable senators, we are pleased to have this opportunity to make this presentation. I must say in all honesty that it is a long time past that Canadians should become seized of the problems of the east coast, especially in my case, of Newfoundland and Labrador, because we will only become a viable society either through control, management and development of our resources, or alternatively—and this is what has happened historically and continues to happen to this very moment—more money must be pumped into Newfoundland through the side door rather than the front door, through some changes in transfer payments. Otherwise there will be more "out-migration" and brain drain to central Canada. The poor will get poorer and the rich will get richer. If this country means anything and if the new constitutional provisions as they relate to public services being reasonably equal across Canada and in concert with reasonable levels of taxation mean anything, may I submit that at the present moment the Constitution of Canada is being violated. We do not have reasonable levels of taxation because our 12 per cent retail sales tax is the highest in Canada and way higher than anything else. Our personal income tax, our gas tax, our tobacco tax and every other tax are the highest in Canada. We can prove objectively with facts that our services are way below reasonable standards to any fair mind. The fishery is the backbone and fundamental resource of our province. If we do not have the opportunity to develop it, then the present financial and economic plight of Newfoundland will continue and will be exacerbated over time, and there will be two or three countries in this nation rather than one. Theoretically, under the Constitution it will be only one country, but economically and financially it will be many more countries.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is the intent of the Chair to recognize first the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition, Senator MacEachen, and then the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Murray, if he wishes to speak. Then I shall recognize all those who signal to me that they wish to speak.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I begin by thanking Premier Peckford for accepting the invitation from the Senate to appear and give his views on the implications of the Canada-France Agreement reached last January. I agree with Premier Peckford that it is a good thing that problems of the east coast, like the fisheries, are receiving national attention and that increasingly Canadians are understanding what is involved for the welfare of Newfoundland and other east coast provinces in the conclusion of these agreements.

In sum, I believe that your presence here is useful and important and I thank you for your comments and your presentation.

Mr. Chairman, there are several points that I want to raise with the Premier by way of obtaining clarification. Of course, it is not surprising that the Premier has emphasized so directly what he considers to be an allocation of non-surplus northern cod in 2J+3KL. May I put some comments on the record from representatives of the Canadian government. This Committee of the Whole heard testimony from Mr. Siddon and his officials. While I did not have an opportunity to ask Mr. Siddon directly whether Canada had made an undertaking to France in the context of an agreement for the years specified to provide northern cod, Mr. Clark did, in fact, make a statement in his testimony which might be somewhat ambiguous, but which I think is worth reading. I quote from the Debates of the Senate.

● (1440)

It was agreed—as part of an overall package involving agreed 1988-91 quotas plus a signed, sealed and delivered treaty referring the boundary disputes to arbitration—that, in that context . . .

And here is the key expression.

. . . the Canadian side could look at and have on the table some unquantified and still-to-be-negotiated quota of 2J+3KL cod for 1988-91.

Mr. Clark seems to be saying that yes, the Canadian side could take a look and have on the table some northern cod, or alternatively, presumably it could take it off the table. Therefore I want to put that comment before you.

I also want to read to you some sentences from statements made by Canadian ministers in the House of Commons on this point, because I think it is very important to have it clarified.

On January 28, 1987, Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Transport, posed himself this rhetorical question: "What agreement was reached?" He then replied:

All that was reached was an agreement to negotiate. There is no agreement that France will even get a tadpole from 2J+3KL.

That is a quotation from the House of Commons Debates. Then on the same day, Mr. Siddon, the Minister of Fisheries stated:

We have offered to talk about the possibility of a very modest allocation in the area which is so important and precious to Newfoundland, referred to as the northern cod area or 2J+3KL.

Finally, the Minister of Transport in the same issue said:

There is no binding agreement for us to give one codfish, or piece of one codfish in 2J+3KL to France. That is the exact position.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Those are exact quotations from the ministers and ought to be authoritative. Furthermore, they were somewhat ambiguously supported by Mr. Clark, and I think the key question is: Who is right? I have my own views as to who is right but, if I may, I want to get some further clarification from you on that point, which is a key point.

Mr. Peckford: Senator MacEachen, I have in my hands the English translation of the January 24, 1987, agreement and I can provide you with a copy if you wish. That agreement says as follows:

2. Furthermore, the representatives of the Parties will meet before March 15, 1987 in order to initiate negotiations with a view to concluding, concurrently:

- a) a Compromis (Special Agreement) which shall submit to compulsory third party settlement the dispute regarding the maritime claims by the two countries off the coasts of St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada;
- b) a procès-verbal establishing the annual fishing quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters for the period 1988-1991 inclusive. These quotas will include cod quotas in NAFO Divisions 2J+3KL.

Senator MacEachen: "... will include ..."?

Mr. Peckford: Yes. Therefore no more need be said. They have arrived at an agreement and that agreement says that, under this agreement, we have agreed to do two things: First, to negotiate a Compromis on the boundary by December of this year. Second, to negotiate a procès-verbal by September of this year on ongoing fish quotas. Therefore by September of this year, there will be an interim fisheries agreement to run from 1988 to 1991 which will include cod quotas in NAFO divisions 2J+3KL. Also, it says "will include", not "possibly include".

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to move on to the question of overfishing, as was mentioned by the Premier in his comment. This, of course, is a very significant part of this whole difficult area. We have all expressed our disagreement with the way in which France has been overfishing, and the unwillingness of France to sit down and discuss overfishing.

Let me put it quite clearly: Why are you so concerned presently about the overfishing in the context of the agreement in light of the fact that the Government of Canada now alleges that part of the negotiating process will include a negotiation on the overfishing?

Mr. Peckford: But it is not in the agreement. There is nothing in the agreement which in any way restrains France from continuing to do in the disputed zone what they have always done, and that is to overfish that disputed zone.

Senator MacEachen: That is right.

Mr. Peckford: However, there is provision in the agreement for the Canadian and French scientists to get together regarding the 3Ps stock. It says:

The Canadian and French scientists:

- a) shall evaluate the state of the cod stock

b) shall formulate, if possible, a recommendation on the TAC for cod for 1987

c) on the basis of the current size of the biomass and the catches, shall forecast the future development of that biomass and shall formulate, if possible, recommendations for the TAC of cod for the years 1988 to 1991.

However, there is no obligation on the part of France to accept these recommendations. This is merely a provision for a committee or a task force comprised of scientists from both countries to get together and make recommendations, with nothing binding upon France to abide by what the scientists determine is an acceptable quota, if in fact that quota is lower than they had originally taken.

Therefore the situation now is that in the crucial area where you needed to have some obligatory restraint in the agreement, it is not there and in the crucial area where you did not want to give away anything, that is there.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, if we accept—and I do—the contention of the Premier that there is no provision in the agreement to restrain overfishing in 3Ps, is it his view that the agreement provides for an obligation on the part of France, in the course of these current negotiations, to negotiate the question of overfishing?

Mr. Peckford: No. The two countries have agreed to allow scientists to look at the matter and to make recommendations, but not to negotiate.

Senator MacEachen: I find this a rather difficult question to deal with because there is a great deal of confusion, but not very long ago the Prime Minister addressed a letter to the Minister of Transport in which he asserted the following:

These negotiations will also address the problem of overfishing in the disputed zone during the period of arbitration.

If France were obligated under the agreement to negotiate, or indeed even address the problem of overfishing during the negotiations, then that would be a step ahead. However, it is your contention that there is no provision?

Mr. Peckford: That is right. The only provision is here in this agreement which I hold in my hand. This is entitled "Annex", and it is a "Mandate for the Canadian and French Scientists with Regard to NAFO Division 3Ps". It states:

● (1450)

The Canadian and French scientists:

- a) shall evaluate the state of the cod stock
- b) shall formulate, if possible, a recommendation on the TAC for cod for 1987
- c) on the basis of the current size of the biomass and the catches, shall forecast the future development of that biomass and shall formulate, if possible, recommendations for the TAC of cod for the years 1988 to 1991.

In other words, it is the establishment of a scientific study team to make recommendations, if possible, and does not involve negotiations. It is just a report that will be presented by the two groups of scientists to the two countries, neither being obligated to even read those reports.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Premier should know, and other senators who might have forgotten, that we have a copy of that in Senate Debates of February 4, 1987, at page 448 and following.

Mr. Peckford: Since we are getting into this, I have one other point. One of the fears that we have is that France is continuing to hold up going to the boundary arbitration, and both parties have to agree before that can occur. France is using that, and the continued pressure on 3Ps and the overfishing it is doing, to get concessions from Canada on fishing. What we are saying is that Canada has to resist any concessions on fishing and, additionally, look at its overall bilateral relationship with France. Is Aerospatiale trying to sell submarines to the Department of National Defence? Is Aerospatiale trying to sell helicopters to Canada? What are the commodities that we trade back and forth? As long as Canada stays in that narrow negotiating strategy, then the people who are going to lose are the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Second, one can see what France is up to. If it has 2GH cod committed under the interim fisheries agreement of 3,000 tonnes now, and it can get into 2J+3KL, by the time that they agree, and all of a sudden become very magnanimous and say, "Sure, we will go to arbitration on the boundary", it will have more fish outside of 3Ps than it is now overfishing in 3Ps. So, France will have lost nothing and will have just as much fish as it always had—and then go to arbitration on the boundary.

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have one more point I want to make, and that relates to the interrelationship between the undertaking to allocate northern cod and the willingness of the Government of France to negotiate on the boundary.

The Honourable Monique Landry was quite candid in telling the House of Commons that the Canadian government really had to give the northern cod in order to get France to the table on the overfishing. France insisted upon an allocation of northern cod. In my view, that was a bargaining relationship. The French said: "If you want to get us to the table, you have to give us northern cod", and finally that was provided for in the agreement.

The benefit is, and I think the government will argue this, that there will be an arbitration of the boundary dispute and that the most favourable outlook is that Canada will recover most of the 3Ps now claimed by France.

Mr. Peckford: In the meantime it will have as much fish outside of 3Ps as it now has.

Senator MacEachen: That will be a big gain for the south coast of Newfoundland, and Canada will have jurisdiction over the disputed area, or most of the disputed area. That is a big gain. That gain has been brought about through an offer of northern cod.

Is that not a reasonable approach for the Government of Canada to take?

Mr. Peckford: No, it is not. If France continues to overfish, there will not be anything left for the south coast. There will be no fish left for the south coast, but in the meantime Canada has given France fish in the other zones. Who is to say that if they overfish in 3Ps they will not overfish in 2GH and 2J+3KL? France's history is one of overfishing in this area, and now it has a commitment in 2GH of 3,000 tonnes, and now a commitment of an undefined amount here.

So, if they keep fishing in 3Ps there will be no fish left. The whole biomass will be destroyed. It is being destroyed at a very rapid rate. You must remember that they are using factory freezer trawlers, not ordinary freezer trawlers or wet fish trawlers. Those trawlers are scraping the bottom and carrying the fish back to Brittany.

There is a great danger that this stock could be destroyed, causing problems for the south coast of the island. Meanwhile, France is now entering the lucrative 2J+3KL area, an area in which quotas to Canadians have already been reduced.

Basically speaking, how can a country reduce the amount of fish it will give to its own people and turn around and commit fish from the same stock to a foreign country? That takes away from Canadians and gives to foreigners.

We argue that if you want to satisfy that undefined right, the 10,000 tonnes of Greenland halibut, which is a very valuable species but surplus—2GH is a surplus area, and we agreed to 2,000 tonnes up there—then take them to arbitration, because one does not need mutual consent for a fisheries arbitration. Either country can take the other country to arbitration on fishing rights at any time.

That may be a great deal better than allowing France to overfish here until there is nothing left, or than giving commitments here and here, especially in 2J+3KL, the non-surplus areas, where France could also overfish. Perhaps it is better to have France overfish in one area than overfish in three areas, especially when one of those three areas is a non-surplus area.

If you want to cut your losses, don't link the fisheries treaty to the boundary to the extent France is doing, and go to arbitration for that undefined right to be defined, because it is Canadian fish. We might want to send France off to British Columbia. It says "Canadian fish". It does say "east coast fish". However, it does not say "Surplus or non-surplus". That has to be decided by an arbitrator, and no arbitrator is going to say that that undefined right becomes defined by giving France fish that are not there.

Another point I might come back to is that Canada cannot solve this issue; if it does, then we will be poor forever more. Canada should be using its other trade levers to put pressure on France and take the pressure off our fish stocks, which we need.

Senator MacEachen: I have one counter point I would like the Premier to consider.

Is it not a fact—at least that is the evidence we have received—that France fishes to quota in the undisputed areas?

[Senator MacEachen.]

If 3Ps becomes Canadian waters as a result of arbitration, we would then expect France to observe the same practice.

• (1500)

Mr. Peckford: It is true that in some of the other zones they have not overfished, but it is also true that they are a member of the E.E.C. who, through the long-term agreement on the nose and tail of the bank outside the 200-mile limit, have been raping that resource.

Senator MacEachen: That is a good additional point. It is true that France is overfishing in 3Ps—

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: —but in waters which France claims for itself and which we claim for ourselves. Based upon past behaviour of France, if those now disputed waters became Canadian waters, they would respect that and the fish quota, which would be a gain. That is the alternative point I am making.

Mr. Peckford: But you cannot allow a foreign nation, in order to have the area of 3Ps resolved, to move into an area which is now non-surplus. Is that a fair trade off—especially when it is adjacent to a province of Canada which has 20 to 40 per cent unemployment and whose whole existence depends upon that fish stock? We are being told that we have to fish less, but we can give more to France out of something which scientists have declared non-surplus. I do not think that that is a fair proposition. Is that fair?

Senator MacEachen: Well, I am not sure. It depends on the long-term gain for Newfoundland and Canada. If, by giving what has been described as a modest allocation of northern cod—

Mr. Peckford: We do not know how much it is; that is our problem. Once they get their foot in the door, it is too late.

Senator MacEachen: No we don't, but if it is a modest allocation which would be for a four-year term and then terminated, and in the meantime you achieve a good boundary settlement, wouldn't that be beneficial overall?

Mr. Peckford: We do not know how much northern cod they will have and we do not know whether it will only be until 1991. We do not know what will come after 1991 and whether they will still claim ongoing fishing rights in Canadian waters.

Senator Frith: And whether you will get the boundary settlement.

Mr. Peckford: The other point that Mr. Dean makes is that even after the boundary has been resolved, there will have to be some shared management of that stock; and that is another dispute.

Senator MacEachen: Do you believe that French fishing rights in Canadian waters should be extinguished?

Mr. Peckford: I don't know if they can be extinguished or not; that would be our preferred position, if it could be done. We are prepared, under the undefined right of 1972, which has to be defined, to acknowledge that that does exist and that, therefore, it has to be satisfied. We think it can be satisfied in a way which both meets our obligations under that treaty and yet protects the most valuable resource that we have, 2J+3KL, by offering them surplus fish, not non-surplus fish. Any arbitrator would see that that is a fair way to go.

The other point I have to reiterate over and over again—and I am glad that I have this opportunity to say it before as many national figures as I have today—unless and until the fishing industry is recognized not only by the Canadian body politic and the ordinary citizen who is writing me every day but also by the Government of Canada and the governments of the other provinces in the same way as the automobile industry, or the textile industry, or the agriculture industry is recognized and the full weight of Canada is brought to the negotiating table, as opposed to just looking at it in isolation, nothing will change. Nobody looks at the automobile industry in Canada as some kind of adjunct or as being isolated from everything else. It is extremely important to Canada. I only wish that the day would soon arrive when people looked at the fishing industry in the same way and saw it as a valuable national natural resource which has to be focused into all of the things that we do in our relationships with another nation when we are trying to negotiate something.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: It is the wish of the Leader of the Opposition that Senator Marshall commence questioning on behalf of the government. He will be followed by Senator Rowe, Senator Frith and Senator van Roggen.

Senator Murray: I second that.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I have one question to ask, if I may.

Mr. Peckford, when you were up at the large chart you said that either side can force the other to arbitration.

Mr. Peckford: On the fish.

Senator Frith: If the alleged advantage of this agreement was that the French were willing to arbitrate, but, if not, they could be forced to arbitrate without their agreement, then they have nothing. If the quid pro quo were an agreement to arbitrate, but at the same time you did not have to have the agreement to arbitrate because you could give notice to force arbitration, then there would be no “quid” at all for the “quo.”

Mr. Peckford: Yes, both sides have to agree to arbitration on the boundary. On the fishing rights, either can take the other to arbitration.

Senator Marshall: I want to welcome Premier Peckford here in the hallowed halls of the Senate.

I want to move away from the present situation and talk more about the global situation as it exists with regard to overfishing. We have to go back a few years, some of them covering my experience here on Parliament Hill. I would like to ask the Premier: What do you think has gone on since 1972, we will say, when you got into politics, with regard to the governments in power and the resolve to try to determine the best way to handle the boundary dispute between Canada and Saint Pierre and Miquelon?

Mr. Peckford: Well, there has been no resolution to it until this January 24, 1987 agreement, which set a process in place for dealing with the boundary and the fish. It is fair to say that through the whole bit and piece of the last ten or fifteen years, the External Affairs policy has been rather consistent. It has not changed all that much as it relates to how they approach the solving of this problem.

Senator Marshall: With what result? There never has been any result until now.

Mr. Peckford: No, there has not been any result. What I am saying is that the result that we have now is an unacceptable result.

Senator Marshall: Yes. Would you say that the announcement made by the Minister of Fisheries today with regard to closing the ports and other action he intends to take against French overfishing helps the situation from your point of view?

Mr. Peckford: I think it is a step in the right direction, yes. It sends a signal to the French government that the Canadian government is of strong resolve on this matter now. In the latter part of January we recommended that this was one action that the government could take.

The same week that they were signing this agreement on fish and boundaries as between Canada and France, External Affairs and France signed a five-year trade agreement. I do not know what is in that trade agreement, however—and that is why we keep coming to all the levers that should be used—but obviously this is a step in the right direction. We hope it also signals to us and to Canadians that the Canadian government is willing to use other levers, as they are now starting to do.

Senator Marshall: For the past 15 to 20 years, I have been very interested in the Saint Pierre and Miquelon boundary dispute. I even took this matter up quite forcefully in 1976. My interest in this subject led me to select three reports, one being the report entitled, “Challenges Facing the Fisheries Sector” prepared by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and which was presented to the Annual Conference of First Ministers in November, 1986. In that 156-page report, only vague reference is made to the treaty obligations with France and to the French problem. Those cover only half a page of those 156 pages.

Going back to August of 1986, the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador issued a very good paper on foreign overfishing which was accepted by the Fisheries Council of Canada. Only two weeks ago in the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, we heard of the same problem of overfishing, the straddling of stocks and how important that was, but there was no mention of Saint Pierre and Miquelon and the problem that that little blob of land is causing to the province of Newfoundland and to Canada.

Another report, entitled, "Report on challenges facing the fishery sector," to which I think you alluded, was presented to the Annual Conference of First Ministers in Vancouver, British Columbia on November 20-21, 1986.

Only in that one instance that I outlined is any mention made about the difficulty with the boundaries of Saint Pierre and Miquelon and all the trouble that is causing.

The point I am making is that over the past year nothing has been said about that Canada-France dispute in terms of resource considerations or in terms of any other consideration.

Mr. Peckford: That is because we had confidence in the federal government in the ongoing negotiations. There was meaningful consultation, meaningful discussion and negotiations taking place from 1978 up until January 1987. Both governments were seized of the matter.

It was not until September, 1986, that the federal government started to quantify the amount of overfishing outside of the Saint Pierre and Miquelon area which is just off 2J+3KL, the nose and tail of the bank. That was the first time the federal government really quantified the amount of foreign overfishing.

We had two things going on simultaneously. We did have an advisory committee involving industry, unions and all the governments of the east coast dealing meaningfully and faithfully with one another on the boundary and on the fishing rights of France. Everyone was seized of the matter and working through it.

We continued to argue on the subject of foreign overfishing exclusive of the Saint Pierre and Miquelon boundary, 3Ps and French fishing rights. We excluded those because the governments, industry and unions were dealing with those every day in negotiations.

We continued to highlight exclusively foreign overfishing because the federal government had not been seized of the matter and there was a process by which we were involved in it as we were in the French situation.

Senator Marshall: On May 6, 1976, I asked the then Government of Canada to lay before the House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters and telegrams pertaining to the negotiations which had taken place between the Government of France on the continental shelf boundary disputes with regard to the France-Canada boundary around the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. I said in my remarks, 11 years ago, that I, as well as every Newfoundlander, wanted to know, in view of the province's proximity to Saint Pierre and Miquelon, what Newfoundland's future would be with regard to its offshore resources, resources vital to its future economy. At that time I also wanted to know the position regarding the settlement of adjacent boundaries.

From 1968 until 1978 when I left the House of Commons, I posed various questions on the same issue, that is, the 200-mile limit. In 1976 I warned that if we did not deal with the Saint Pierre and Miquelon issue at that time we would get into trouble. My remarks were treated with complacency.

[Senator Marshall.]

Mr. Peckford: You say that you posed your question in 1976, but the first negotiations began in 1978.

Senator Marshall: Recently, in a newspaper article, Mr. Applebaum, Director General, International Directorate, Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and one of the Canadian negotiators, said that another factor weighting Canada's eagerness to settle the dispute once and for all is the possibility of oil and gas discovery in 3Ps. Is there any oil in 3Ps? Are you people looking at that resource with some seriousness? Is it a factor?

Mr. Peckford: The oil potential that we know of is outside of the disputed 3Ps zone. It is south of that area. From the best geological data we have available to us now, it is our understanding that the potential is not in the area in dispute. From all the data we have today, our best assessment is that the potential for hydrocarbon resources in that whole area lies outside the disputed zone, so this is not a major consideration.

In the area north of that, 180 miles offshore, the Hibernia, Joan of Arc Basin, there has been a fair amount of drilling right up along that area. Most of the hydrocarbon deposits are located in this Joan of Arc Basin area.

However, south of the 3Ps area there is a fairly gas-prone area where discoveries have been made. Those will be exploited some day. You have to go further south, outside of the disputed zone, before you come to an area with any potential in that regard.

Senator Marshall: I am not referring particularly to the issue at hand because I think that problem is only a part of the global problem we are facing. Two weeks ago representatives of the Fisheries Council of Canada appeared before our committee at which time they showed us a photograph of the area encompassed by the 200-mile limit. The photographs were taken from inside and from outside the area and on that particular day there were 164 freezer trawlers out there.

Mr. Peckford: The other part of our policy—and it has been for many years—is that Canada should extend its jurisdiction to the end of the continental shelf. As I understand it, there are two countries in the world which have continental shelves beyond 200 miles, one is Australia and the other is Argentina. We have been trying to ascertain whether any crucial fishing is taking place outside the 200-mile zone in those two areas and our understanding is that no important fishing activity is occurring.

Therefore, we would argue that if Canada advanced the view in the world community that we stand alone in this regard and that everyone else has their fishing resources protected because the continental shelves are 200 miles or less, and that we have a wider continental shelf than that and, therefore, we are not getting the same protection under the Law of the Sea as everyone else is getting, I believe there would be a fair amount of sympathy in the international community in favour of our argument. Of course, we could do what Iceland did to Britain 10 or 15 years ago, when they unilaterally extended their boundary 50 miles. Eventually, the British tucked their tails between their legs and went home; Iceland had its fishery protected.

● (1520)

Senator Marshall: Mr. Premier, with regard to the present situation, despite the furore that has taken place, do you agree that the French will be catching less cod in 1987 than they did in 1986?

Mr. Peckford: I hope so, because the previous agreement expired last year and there was no provision for renewal under that agreement. The point is not that we are getting more—we all knew that we would get more because the agreement was going to expire. But in getting more, we have, through the January 24 agreement, provided the potential to turn that more to less when the agreement is signed by September of this year. We need more and more and we are entitled to it because those fish are off our shores. So when people make the argument that we are going to have more, my response is that we hope so, in the same way that we would expect to have more cars if we built a new car plant.

Senator Marshall: Is there not a danger that foreign nations such as Spain, Portugal, West Germany and even the United States, which are short of cod, will be overfishing beyond the 200-mile limit, which will mean less for us in the future?

Mr. Peckford: There is no question about that. I think that is a good point, senator. Very soon, irrespective of the resolution of the boundary dispute and the matter of the fishing rights of France, we will have to address the matter of this foreign overfishing on the nose and tail of the bank which is outside the 200-mile limit. It could jeopardize all of the other positive things that are now happening—the agreements that are expiring and that will not be renewed—which could and should give us more fish.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Premier, I am sure that you are satisfied in that you warned of the dangers and the federal government agreed with you. In view of what has gone on, are you satisfied that we are now headed in the right direction? Do you think the meetings to be held on March 24 in Ottawa, at which your government will be represented, could be the beginning of better things for the fishing industry?

Mr. Peckford: I think that is possible. As a result of the closing of the ports and the adamant statement that the Burgeo Bank is off limits, that there is no provision under any treaty allowing France to fish the Burgeo Bank, it would seem that there is some hope for improvement in this situation over what we saw a month or so ago. But the outcome remains to be seen.

On the matter of foreign overfishing, if I may come back to it, the federal government has agreed with the other fishing provinces to establish a task force. One First Ministers' conference addressed the problem of overfishing and it was decided at that conference that a study be conducted. A study has been done and a task force now has to come up with measures that can be taken to reduce foreign overfishing.

The outcome of the Saint Pierre and Miquelon boundary dispute, however, is still unclear. I think that one of the internal problems of the federal government—if I may be so bold as to comment on this—is the differing points of view between the resource department and the trade and external affairs department.

Senator Marshall: Thank you, Mr. Peckford.

Senator Rowe: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to express my appreciation to the Premier of Newfoundland for his willingness to discuss with us today these problems which confront us and which are very serious, indeed. They are serious from Newfoundland's standpoint and from Canada's standpoint—I suppose that France can be left on its own.

Honourable senators, I have no axe to grind—perhaps I do not need to say that—in what I am about to say. Everybody knows where I stand and where I have stood all my life politically. I am not necessarily here, then, to support anything that Premier Peckford or Mr. Crosbie have said outside this chamber. I want to say this, that the treatment accorded Mr. Crosbie, the Premier, the Government and the people of Newfoundland by the Government of Canada is utterly stupid—that is the only word I can think of. It is stupid beyond belief to accord that sort of treatment to these people, in particular, of course, to Mr. Crosbie and to Premier Peckford.

Having said that, I simply want to go on to make another point. I must say, with all the emphasis I can muster, that I feel there is some ulterior motive, something that we do not know about or have not been told about, behind that sort of treatment. What it is I do not know; I can only guess. We have been told—I think the evidence is almost irrefutable—that France has been given too much of Newfoundland's fish and that there has been no return commitment made by France for the favours granted her. We have been told by the Premier himself that he knew nothing about this agreement up to the very moment it was signed. How could anybody expect to get away with that kind of action, politically or in any other way? I realize that I am using some strong language, but one reason for that is the ignorance that is extant right across Canada in respect of Newfoundland. We have always had to contend with this factor in one way or another. I cannot help but think that if Prime Minister Mulroney and Mr. Siddon were familiar with Newfoundland's history, they would never have allowed themselves to get inveigled into this kind of situation. They are in trouble; it is not just Newfoundland that is in trouble.

Yesterday in this chamber I spoke briefly about some of the historical factors that must be brought to bear in this situation. I made reference to the 1857 agreement between France and Britain—then the two greatest powers on earth—about which the government and the people of Newfoundland knew nothing. In taking that action, those two countries left out completely one factor—just as someone has left out that factor today—which is the people of Newfoundland. Make no mistake about it, honourable senators, the people of Newfoundland are not going to swallow this. They are not going to allow anyone to get away with that. In 1857 we symbolically brought Britain and France to their knees. We did the same thing in the year 1874 when Britain and France signed another agreement, again without any reference to the people or the Government of Newfoundland, which was totally discriminatory against Newfoundland; and again they left out an important factor, namely, that of the Newfoundland people. Newfoundland sent to the Parliament at Westminster a delegation of leading citizens of Newfoundland, mainly political figures, including the Prime Minister and other ministers. The delegates appeared before the bar of the House of Commons where they spoke to the members of the greatest Parliament in the world. They then conducted a campaign right across England, Wales and Scotland. The result was that France and Britain were again brought to their knees.

• (1530)

James Baird, a Newfoundland business fisherman, went to Westminster on two distinct occasions and won his case; and the action taken by Britain and France fell to the ground. Once again we had the spectacle of those two great nations trying to get away with something which was grossly discriminatory and unjust.

The Premier has answered most of the questions that I had planned to ask. However, I shall make one other point before concluding. The Premier referred to the application of levers. I was rather interested in the word "lever". This has happened before. From 1714, at the time of the Treaty of Utrecht, and through every major treaty right up to the 1890s—for 200 years—there was continual rowing and fighting between the Newfoundland settlers—or "livers", or whatever you wish to call them—those who had come out from England, Wales and Ireland and who had taken up residence in Newfoundland and said, "We are here; this is our property, this is our fishery, this is our harbour." I will leave that thought with honourable senators. Perhaps the Premier may wish to comment on that.

One has to be careful in giving dates. In 1904 there was a modus vivendi between Britain, Newfoundland and France, as a result of which France, for all practical purposes, moved out of Newfoundland waters and away from the French Shore completely. That modus vivendi operated until recent years. My point is that for 50 years that was satisfactory to both the Newfoundland and French people. What happened then could happen again. I am not an expert in this, but I do know that on a number of occasions the rights of Newfoundland have been acknowledged and restored. That has happened repeatedly in the past, it could happen again. If it does not, and the problem is not solved to the reasonable satisfaction of the Newfoundland people—I say this with all the conviction at my command—we can expect continuing trouble for both Newfoundland and Canada, because historically I do not believe that the character of the Newfoundland people has changed all that much. We can expect continuing opposition from Newfoundland in one form or another, because historically Newfoundland has never acquiesced in what it considered to be discrimination and injustice.

My family has been in Newfoundland for over 300 years—as, I believe, has the Premier's family. We are descended from the early settlers of Newfoundland and we know how much injustice Newfoundland has had to contend with and is having to contend with at this very hour.

The Chairman: Mr. Peckford, do you wish to comment?

Mr. Peckford: My only comment is to say that I appreciate what the honourable senator has said. I have said it many times myself, not only recently but over the past two or three decades, in various other forums. When the honourable senator talks about other instances in our history—when other countries signed something secretly about which we didn't know and then, through the reaction of the people of Newfoundland, it was overturned—I guess that one of the startling ironies of the present situation is that we are having to do that now as a province of Canada, whereas before we were a colony of England. One would have thought that being a province of Canada should guarantee us that certain things would not happen which could easily happen if one's country is only a colony of a larger nation.

Senator van Roggen: Coming, as I do, from the west coast of Canada, I too have a feeling for fish, for the need for conservation, for the special lifestyle of fishermen and the special character which they bring to our society. While the industry is of importance to my province of British Columbia, it is not nearly of the overwhelming importance that it is to the province of Newfoundland, in relative terms.

I should like to deal with two points only. In your opening remarks, Mr. Premier, you referred to the fact that they used your fish to buy an agreement from France to arbitrate the boundary. Senator Frith later made reference to an agreement to arbitrate.

As I read the agreement, I find that section 2 says:

Furthermore, the representatives of the Parties will meet before March 15, 1987—

I understand that that initial meeting took place in London:

—in order to initiate negotiations with a view to concluding, concurrently:

(a) a special agreement which shall submit to compulsory third party arbitration; and (b) establishment of annual fishing quotas.

When I was a young man studying law, I was taught that an agreement to agree was not an agreement, that it was not something that could be enforced by any court. I put it to you that what we have here is not an agreement to go to arbitration on behalf of France at all, but is simply an agreement to talk about arbitrating.

• (1540)

Mr. Peckford: That is right.

Senator van Roggen: If they want to insist that the only arbitrator they will agree to is the Minister of Fisheries of Mozambique, and we say that it should be the World Court and they do not agree that it should be the World Court, then there is no arbitration, and we have gained not even a tidbit from this trade of fish that has gone on. I suppose that France will be loath to go the World Court after the decision on the Channel Islands. If the same principle is applied to Saint Pierre and Miquelon, they will not have that enormous claim to territory that they have made by using the principle of the equidistant line. I want to make it quite clear for the record that you are not talking about France having agreed to arbitrate a boundary, but about it simply agreeing to talk about agreeing to arbitrate.

Mr. Peckford: Exactly.

Senator van Roggen: In other words, nothing?

Mr. Peckford: Exactly.

Senator van Roggen: I have one remaining point, which is one of clarification. You mentioned something which was of interest to me because I am not knowledgeable in this area. That is, on the question of actual fishing complaints or whatever they may be, either side can take the other to arbitration. That is strictly over fishing. I would like you to explain that point a little bit more, if you would. I assume that where you are both fishing the same waters, if there is a dispute as to what the agreement says about how many fish may be taken, you can, of course, take the other side to arbitration, if you are within Canadian waters. But surely Canada cannot take somebody to arbitration for fishing off the coast of, for example, New Zealand. What about the disputed territory here? Are we able to take France to arbitration for the overfishing that it does in the disputed area?

Mr. Peckford: First, one of the big criticisms that we had of the agreement right after we heard about it and read it was that for all we were giving up, all we were getting in return was France's agreement to talk about going to arbitration, not its agreement to actually go to arbitration, on the boundary. So you are right there. That is all we have. This is where the real inherent weakness of that January 24 agreement lies. We have given a commitment for a new interim fisheries agreement, which would include northern cod for the first time. We have given away some 2GH fish, and they are still overfishing in 3Ps with no guarantee there. In return for all that, France has said, "Now, we will talk to you." That is the inherent, blatant and terrible weakness—and there is no other emphasis I can put on it—of the agreement.

Let me now deal with some of your other points. With regard to France's ongoing fishing rights off Newfoundland, not counting Saint Pierre and Miquelon, 3Ps and the Gulf, under Article X of the 1972 treaty either country can take the other country to arbitration on undefined fishing rights outside these areas.

Senator Frith: For the fish?

Mr. Peckford: Yes. For the boundary in the disputed 3Ps area, both countries have to agree to proceed to arbitration.

Senator van Roggen: And both countries have to agree not only to arbitration on the boundary, but to arbitration relative to what they are doing about fishing within that area?

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator Olson: Premier Peckford, I am a senator from the prairie provinces. I want you to know that I think that we are fulfilling one of the main purposes of the Senate as part of the federal structure of Parliament in providing a forum, if you like, but also in searching for solutions when any region—in this case, it is the Atlantic region—has a severe problem. Therefore, we are highly supportive in trying to find a solution that meets with the approval of the people of Newfoundland.

In your opening remarks you said that the two main reasons that you reject the treaty are that it potentially gives away some non-surplus fish stocks and that you were not fully consulted in the final stages leading up to the agreement. If I understand you correctly there, would you give us a little better idea of what you mean by one of the solutions that you suggested—that is, concurrent control of the fisheries? I am not quite sure whether you would like such an arrangement to be on a consultative basis or whether you want to operate and administer some of the activities involved in controlling the fisheries offshore Newfoundland.

While you are answering that question, perhaps you could help me on another point. Have you had discussions on this matter with the other Atlantic provinces and, if so, do you agree where this concurrent jurisdiction in the right of each province would begin and end?

Mr. Peckford: Yes. We have been developing our position on this matter for many years. We presented a fairly comprehensive proposal to the previous federal government and to the present federal government on how this system could operate. Obviously, historic fishing patterns would have to come into play, and that is how you would establish a province's right to so much fish. The federal government would still establish the overall TAC's for the provinces, but the provinces would allocate the fish after the total allowable catch was determined scientifically. The province would have authority on some of the licensing and the allocation of the fish within its jurisdiction. Right now we do not have any such authority. What we are talking about is splitting the jurisdiction. Obviously some of the jurisdiction would still have to remain with the federal government, particularly as it relates to scientific research, total allowable catch and so on. Historic patterns would come into play, especially in the east because there are four provinces for which to determine the various shares of the various species. But after that total allocation, the province would have authority to use its fish for its provincial development as it saw fit.

Senator Olson: Do you believe that this proposal requires an amendment to the Constitution to give you what you require?

Mr. Peckford: Yes, we do. Otherwise, the process would be subject to change at the slightest problem or whatever. All the premiers have agreed. I can make sure that the honourable senator and anybody else who is interested receives a copy of our detailed proposal on concurrent jurisdiction.

Once again, it is not fair. The situation is similar to the one involving hydro transmissions, and I do not want to take up your time on that matter. However, it is in the bailiwick. I guess this is what Senator Rowe was referring to and what a lot of Newfoundlanders refer to from time to time; namely, that we are being unfairly treated, because all resources are under the control of the provinces except for agriculture, where there is concurrent jurisdiction, and fisheries. We are not asking for total jurisdiction of the fishery, but a concurrent one. We recognize the ongoing responsibilities of the central government. But with more say in management, in the same way we now have a say in offshore resources, both the needs of the central government and of the provincial government can be met. In such a system, this kind of agreement would not happen because, as in any kind of concurrent jurisdiction, there is not total control and the central government would be obligated to consult with the province.

Senator Olson: Will this proposal be going before a First Ministers' conference? I am not talking about the conference with regard to native rights, but the one after that.

• (1550)

Mr. Peckford: Yes. After the Quebec proposals are dealt with—and we hope that within the next couple of months they will be dealt with one way or the other—the next round of constitutional discussions between the federal government and the provinces will concern itself with property rights, fisheries and Senate reform. That has been agreed to by all of the provinces.

Senator Olson: Thank you, Mr. Peckford. I have one other question. You talked about the problem with respect to non-surplus fish. You mentioned one species that was a valuable stock.

Mr. Peckford: Yes, Greenland halibut, and that is surplus.

Senator Olson: Greenland halibut is in surplus as far as Canadian fishermen are concerned?

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator Olson: Do you know of any reason why either the French or Canadian negotiators did not use this stock instead of northern cod? I think you said it was a valuable stock.

Mr. Peckford: The French argued that they were not familiar with the species, but that has nothing to do with how their right is defined. The sad part about it is that when France said they were not interested, that meant that Canada decided that they could not be interested either, rather than saying: "France, we are here to define and eliminate the fishing rights that you had and it is for Canadian fish. It has nothing to do with cod or squid or capelin in particular, or mackerel or herring or anything else. It has to do with Canadian fish, and therefore we insist that if you are fishermen and you want to continue to fish and you do have a right, this species satisfies that right just as well as the non-surplus cod that you insist on getting, which is very important to Canada, especially that part of Canada called Newfoundland."

If and when this matter goes to arbitration, we can say to the arbitrator that he cannot in any way arbitrate that undefined right, nor can that right be defined by taking fish that is not available to give to France when we do have fish that we can give them. We do not understand why Canada was not stronger at the table in using those arguments and why

Canada capitulated to the pre-determined interests that France had.

Senator Olson: This Greenland halibut would be taken inside the 200-mile zone that lies within Canadian jurisdiction?

Mr. Peckford: It could be inside and outside.

Senator Olson: Then France would not have to ask our permission to fish outside the 200-mile zone?

Mr. Peckford: It is in NAFO.

Senator Olson: I see. Are there any other stocks that you know of that could have been negotiated, other than this non-surplus northern cod stock?

Mr. Peckford: Silver hake on the Scotian shelf and redfish where there is a surplus in our waters are two other species that could have been proposed. There are others, but those are the two that come quickly to mind.

The other thing about it, of course, is that the right to fish is Canadian, and yet it is all coming off Newfoundland.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Mr. Chairman, I hope Premier Peckford will forgive me for making a few remarks before I ask him some questions. We seem to make a number of speeches at each other in this chamber all the time, so I am sure that the Premier will allow me to make a few comments.

I have expressed my views on the process which appears to have broken down or to have been suspended for the January 23 and 24 session in Paris. I remain convinced that the Department of Fisheries was overruled and, of course, solidarity prevents them from so stating publicly.

Senator Marshall raised issues in 1976 which, of course, would have to be the object of negotiations after January, 1977, when we extended the 200-mile limit. However, the France-Canada relationship tended to be left on the back burner since the question of Saint Pierre and Miquelon had been settled not only generally but in terms of boats and the length of these fishing vessels. Also, France's right was, of course, to be phased out in 1986 which, I suspect, triggered a good part of the present crisis.

In 1972, an agreement was signed which I personally have defended to some extent although it was signed by my predecessor. I compared that agreement to the 1904 agreement which my colleague, Senator Rowe, is familiar with. The 1972 agreement was signed some years before the establishment of the 200-mile limit and there had been a degree of foresight, but of course it was not perfect.

I must attack one of Mr. Peckford's points on the 1982 long-term agreement with the E.E.C. I know that the industry is now saying that that was a very serious mistake, and by hindsight we always have much better vision. However, I would have to remind this house that in 1981 prices were dropping pretty dramatically on the U.S. market and warehouses were filling up and the industry was in pretty serious crisis. In fact, it was at the door asking to be bailed out. The European Community represented a market of 250 million consumers, a great many of them good fish consumers. At that time it appeared that, with respect to cod, we were looking at a stock which was undergoing dramatic expansion and we could make a modest effort to try to penetrate the markets of Europe with that stock. I suspect that when the dollar varies again, the good days of 1986 and 1987 in the U.S. Markets will come to an end, and with a return to a weak market our warehouses will again fill up with surplus stock and we will see governments trying to deal with another cyclical crisis.

Mr. Chairman, the map that we are looking at is somewhat misleading because it does not have a line showing the fishing limits of what I would call the small community fisherman as opposed to a line showing the large Canadian vessels, the offshore trawlers that have replaced the foreign vessels. The 200-mile limit was not argued on behalf of the businessmen of Halifax and St. John's; it was argued on behalf of the isolated communities of Newfoundland and the inshore fishermen. It was on their behalf that we went to the international community and asked the foreign fishing fleets to leave our shores.

We had Mr. Bulmer before us the other day reflecting some preoccupation on the overfishing. We have very conveniently forgotten that we had to pay those large offshore vessels; we had to share the risk of their fishing off Hamilton Inlet because traditionally they had not fished there. Therefore those who proclaim historical rights from the boardrooms of the two major companies might want to look at the history of their fishery.

That concludes my remarks and I would now like to ask Mr. Peckford a few questions. I regard the Gulf and 3Ps as a fully-exploited—if not an over-exploited—area with, in fact, some over-capacity. I wonder if Canada could have achieved a disciplined fishery in 3Ps and the Gulf—and by that I mean an orderly quota-controlled fishery—by making available a modest amount of northern cod to be traded off in order to achieve a period of serenity while the negotiations with respect to the boundary question were continuing.

● (1600)

Mr. Peckford: How can you defend giving something that is non-surplus for that kind of peace? How can you defend taking fish from your own people because it is non-surplus, and then turning around and giving some of what is not there to a foreign nation?

Why preoccupy ourselves with northern cod, which is so valuable to Newfoundland and to Canada? Why not preoccupy ourselves with putting forward the best case we can on defining the undefined right for Canadian fish and direct our minds to trying to satisfy that French right with surplus fish?

I should like to make a couple of comments on your observations. First of all, the problem we have with the 1972 treaty is its perpetuity clause. That is what we find most distasteful.

You talked about the long-term agreement with the E.E.C. countries. We would make two points, which we made at the time. First, there was an erroneous scientific projection made regarding an expansion of the northern cod stock. You talked about a "dramatic" expansion in that stock. That did not occur. That is why we have had a reduction of 10,000 tonnes this year. The policy was based on an erroneous assumption of dramatic expansion of stock.

Second, we believe that fish should never be traded for market access. We do not do that in the forestry industry, in the mining industry or in other industries. Why, in the name of all that is good and holy, should we do that with fish?

You talked about the inshore fishermen and why Canada went to international politics to get the 200-mile limit. I agree with that. I think that was a strong card in our favour at that time. We have, as you know, an inshore allowance each year to ensure that the inshore fishery is taken care of.

Over the past few years we have not caught that because there have been biological problems, mainly because of cold water or dirty water, as the scientists have said, but nevertheless the inshore fishery has been protected in the overall regime of fishing on the east coast.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): I do not think we could agree on the issue of whether there was a dramatic increase unless we had before us the pattern of the catch of Canadian fish from 1977 to 1987. Perhaps I should not have used that word; perhaps I should have said a "substantial" increase of Canadian catching of that stock. I say that because we did replace the large overseas trawlers with offshore vessels.

Regarding the discussions on fishing zones outside the 200-mile limit, where some 10 per cent of Canadian fish is normally caught—and I would have to check on that, but my memory is that 10 per cent of Canadian fish was caught outside the 200-mile limit—the Premier advocates that to protect these stocks we should use other instruments or other means. We have resisted linking one industry to another, or one resource to another, because we would not want to see fish traded for automobile protection one day. That has been a consistent policy of Canadian governments.

If we are looking for leverage with foreign nations fishing outside the 200-mile limit, what measures does the Premier suggest that would prevent misbehaviour outside the 200-mile limit where we have no internationally-recognized policing authority, except that in the NAFO Treaty?

What does the Premier advocate to prevent interception of Canadian salmon, both on the east coast and the west coast, which in fact are far-ranging and go well beyond the 200-mile limit, because they, too, are subject to international misbehaviour?

I should like to know what measures the Premier suggests that would give Canada the leverage necessary to impose discipline outside the 200-mile limit.

Mr. Peckford: We would propose, first of all, going to the international community, through the United Nations, or whatever other forum is available, to indicate that we are the only country where there is a vital fishery outside of the now 200-mile zone, as agreed to at the Law of the Sea Conference, and if that failed, we should unilaterally declare our jurisdiction over it for the purposes of managing fish, not for the purposes of extending it beyond that for hydrocarbons or minerals on the ocean floor, but for the management of the fish resource because that is just as much a part of the continental shelf as is 50 miles out, 20 miles out or 100 miles out.

So, we would take the peaceful, diplomatic, civilized, reasonable route of going to the international community, but if that failed, we would have to protect ourselves. It is as much a part of the continental shelf as the rest of it, and it is very important to us. We would then advocate more drastic action and unilaterally declare our management of that fish resource on the nose and tail of the bank.

Senator LeBlanc and I have been part of this business of northern cod in our various capacities over the years. Let me say to the senator that when he talked about a dramatic increase, it was projected to increase to allow a total allowable catch of 450,000 tonnes by 1985-87. That was the projection. We are now into almost five years of 266,000 tonnes as a total allowable catch. In other words, we were away out on the predictions that were made. We are out almost 200,000 tonnes. We are now at a TAC of 286,000 tonnes, and according to the projections that were made at the time, the basis of which was part of the long-term agreement, we should have been at 450,000 tonnes. It is at 256,000 tonnes this year because we just received a 10 per cent reduction, even though there are all kinds of fish out there to give to France.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): With the long-term agreement concluding this year, you will have an additional 10,000 tonnes this year and more in 1988.

Mr. Peckford: Yes, when the long-term agreement concludes this year, there will be 9,500 tonnes in the 2J+3KL area which we will have in addition to what we have this year.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Perhaps we should both check our arithmetic on this. I am functioning from memory here because I do not follow this on a detailed daily basis. When we have checked, perhaps we should put before the Senate the figures as we discover them to be so that honourable senators can compare those figures.

On the issue of jurisdiction, Senator Olson has asked most of the questions I had in mind, but I have one simple question for the Premier. Has consultation taken place between biologists and the fishermen, or has the issue been discussed mainly with lawyers?

Mr. Peckford: On the question of jurisdiction?

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Yes, particularly in the Gulf, which is a more complex area, including that part in the Prime Minister's riding, by the way.

Mr. Peckford: No, we have not discussed the proposal of concurrent jurisdiction widely, if that is what you are talking about. That would be based on historical patterns; whatever the historical pattern of fishing was in the Gulf for the various provinces, it would be split along those lines in the future. But the federal government biologists and the federal government would still be the paramount research agency in determining the biomass and how much is available to be taken out of any one area and from any one species.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): In that case, we had better consult biologists and historians, because I suspect that the historic capture may be the subject of a great deal of debate. It will be interesting television when it comes about.

• (1610)

Senator Petten: Mr. Premier, I welcome you here this afternoon. As a Newfoundlander, thank you for your detailed explanation of Newfoundland's position.

I understand that recently a group from Saint Pierre and Miquelon met with you in St. John's. Would you care to comment on that meeting and how it went, Mr. Peckford?

Mr. Peckford: Yes. They were concerned about the factory freezer trawlers in the 3Ps area and how this would impact on their ongoing fishing activity. They now have a right to ten trawlers of 150 metres maximum—150 feet approximately—in perpetuity in the Gulf. So they are very concerned about that whole fish stock being protected. They believe that they are somehow being jeopardized for Brittany and metropolitan France and are being left out and not being considered as much as they think they should be. So they wanted to hear how the Government of Newfoundland felt about it.

Our response was the same as made in our presentation, namely, that if the right management and conservation methods are used, there is the reality that Saint Pierre and Miquelon will have sufficient resources of fish to maintain its society as it has done in the past, and we in no way want to interfere with that.

So we both have the same people as our targets: The French government and the unreasonable way that they have been overfishing the 3Ps stock.

Senator Petten: If I could speak as a Newfoundlander, in our view we would make a distinction as between the fishing vessels from Saint Pierre and Miquelon and those from metropolitan France.

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator Godfrey: I am asking this question out of complete ignorance. You talk about a surplus of fish like Greenland halibut and you suggest that France should have been allotted it. Why is it surplus? Why aren't the Newfoundlanders catching it? Is it because it is uneconomic? If it is uneconomic for them to catch it, then why would France be interested in it? I am a little confused.

Mr. Peckford: Primarily, our fishery is an inshore fishery, although we have some offshore fishery as well with certain trawlers. We are into wet fish trawlers and some freezer trawlers, but we are not into the large factory freezer trawlers as are the metropolitan French fleet and some other countries around the world. There is a debate going on as to whether that technology is really a modern technology or an old technology. So you have to look at the history of the Newfoundland fishery.

[Mr. Peckford.]

A lot of the fishery on the Labrador coast and down the northeast coast is the inshore fishery. "Inshore" means that the northern cod swims from offshore to inshore—right up on the rocks—and the fishermen trap it and net it. The boats used are anywhere from 19 to 40 feet long—an open boat type with perhaps a little cabin on it—which would be a small inshore boat for some trap and net fishery—and then there are longliners, which get into far more nets, and so on. They range in size from 45 to 65 feet, but they are all that size of boat. The Greenland halibut are further offshore and have not the same biology of swimming from offshore to inshore, so you have to use a large offshore fleet.

Our fishery is based on lobster and crab—which are right by the rocks—and codfish, which are caught using small-to-medium sized boats; herring and mackerel, which also swim in schools in the bays around Newfoundland, and which are, therefore, easily accessible by small- and medium-sized boats; the squid, when they come every seven or eight years, or two, three, or four years, which also come inshore; and the capelin in the springtime, which are driven in by the cod. These were and still are fished for by isolated communities that are far away from major urban centres, and they rely upon a zero to ten-mile offshore fishery. The sixty-five foot boats would fish in the ten-mile zone, but some of them would go out further than that. That is the traditional fishery which involves many species. Early in the spring there is the capelin; then those who have lobster licences can fish for lobster and those who have crab licences can fish for crab; then there is some turbot fishery in various parts of the island as well. The main cod fishery is in July and part of August; then herring and mackerel fishery is in the fall; and there is also some squid fishery, if the squid are in in that particular year. It is a fishery historically based upon a biology which says: These species are either spawned in the bays or swim into the bays to the shore and make possible a viable fishery in small boats.

Now we get into offshore fisheries. We now have Fishing Products International and National Sea Products which catch not only codfish offshore but also grenadier, halibut, perch, redfish, and all of these others. It has been concentrated mainly in the Gulf and south parts of the island and on the Scotian shelf, but, as technology has improved, fishing boats are going further and further north at the right times of the year. Even when there is ice, they can be ice reinforced. The Greenland halibut is a valuable species. It is located up north, but with factory freezer technology, and so on, countries can fish it and make money on it. It is a profitable business.

Senator Marshall: Despite some of the controversy we went through in the past couple of months, for some reason or other the fishery has never been better. The total landed value is the highest on record, $196 million, and the catch was up to 500,000 tonnes, which is nice to hear and nice to see. We who are connected with the fishery in some way wonder why all of sudden, after so many bad years in Newfoundland, the FPI, for example, is making a tremendous profit and National Sea are making bigger profits than they ever did. What is the reason?

Mr. Peckford: The offshore fishery has been highly successful the last couple of years, but this success disguises the disastrous inshore fishery.

If I can take Cape John as my mark here, the cod fishery south of Cape John this year was a disaster. The capelin fishery was good, but the cod fishery, which is still the staple species, was not. There are not as many licences issued to fish the other pelagic species but there are a lot of people who are allowed to catch codfish.

● (1620)

From Cape John south, the unions argued that the situation was bad because the two offshore companies which are doing well had concentrated their efforts as close as they could to where their plants were. They were only fishing in 3L and 3K. If you look at the locations of 3K and 3L, and if you consider the fish being moved inshore parallel, you will see that south of Cape John there were very few fish. However, north of Cape John the situation was quite different because very little had been taken by the offshore fleet.

Now the federal government has put observers on our own domestic offshore fleet so that they disperse their effort, because it is still economic for them to catch the fish this far north and bring them down to the plants. They are doing that now. I would compliment Mr. Siddon on his initiative in that regard as I have done on other occasions. As of the last couple of weeks there was excellent fishing offshore in 2J. As I said, we have observers on our own ships to make sure that they spread their effort so that when they are finished in the spring there will be sufficient biomass left to swim inshore to ensure that the inshore fishery is good all along the coast and not just on the north coast.

Perhaps I could just mention one other matter which is very important to me. Since 1949 our per capita income has remained stable. We are still at 54 per cent of the Canadian average per capita earned income. It is below our net income, our gross domestic product and all the rest of it. Therefore, whilst the offshore fishery is good, we hope that the inshore fishery will get better and that may improve our situation.

Senator Marshall: Are you speaking of this on a provincial basis?

Mr. Peckford: Yes. That is why the fishery is so important to us. We cannot allow one pound to be taken by others because our economic situation has not improved since 1949.

Senator Marshall: You had some hesitation in supporting the application for three fish factory freezer licences. Are you referring to the factory freezer trawlers of National Sea?

Mr. Peckford: No.

The other point I would like to make is that Saint Pierre and Miquelon has ten factory freezer trawlers. Obviously, how much fish they catch will depend on the state of the stock at any time. That would have to be reasonably determined. In other words, Newfoundland has not taken the position that Saint Pierre and Miquelon can, over time, fish indiscriminately. On the other hand, we cannot guarantee them a certain poundage or tonnage. They do have, in perpetuity, those ten trawlers of approximately 150 feet each. We have to be careful how we split up the whole stock to make sure that we are protected.

Senator Frith: In a sense, do they compete with metropolitan ships?

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator Frith: The agreement of January 24, 1987, has been explained and clarified a good deal by you today. I get the impression—and this is probably putting it mildly—that you do not think it was a very good deal.

At the same time, you said that you could not understand why such a deal was made but you wondered about the fact that there was a trade agreement made with France at the same time. This raises the question—which is also implicit in another point you make—that there was a certain linkage there. I take it from reading the papers that you have had that suspicion for some time, and I wonder if you have more information to the effect that there was, in fact, some linkage and that the bad deal made with France was to encourage them to make a deal on another subject that was more advantageous to Canada.

Mr. Peckford: It is difficult to make the linkage. It all happened in the same department.

In their newsletter, the Department of External Affairs has lauded this very historic trade agreement between the two countries for five years. It commenced in the same month the fishing agreement started.

However, I cannot establish any evidence to demonstrate that they were linked except that both agreements were negotiated by the same department.

As I said earlier, one of the problems that I think Senator LeBlanc would, perhaps, tend to agree with me on, is the fact that, in some cases—and this is a prime example—the resource department is overridden by the Department of External Affairs. I think, in fairness to Mr. Siddon and his people, from all the information we have been able to gather, that is quite likely what happened.

It is somewhat unusual that in the same month, almost in the same week, we were excluded for the first time after nine years, and that, knowing our position on northern cod, they were able to commit it in one agreement and, at the same time, laud an historic trade agreement with France.

Senator Frith: I read your position as being that it is a reasonable inference that there was some connection, is that correct?

Mr. Peckford: Yes.

Senator Frith: Is it correct that nothing that has happened in the meantime has made you think that that inference is less reasonable than it was in the first place?

Mr. Peckford: I would only qualify that to the extent that the announcement yesterday would tend to indicate that Canada may be firming up its position, but whether that is, in fact, true or not, or whether it is just a number of symbolic gestures, I do not know.

If, in fact, the Canadian government is saying, “We are taking this very seriously because we are very worried about the concerns Newfoundland has had and we are now firming up our position. We are doing these two things to demonstrate to France that when we sit down the next time we are going to be tougher,” then that is fine but the proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Senator Frith: That would seem to me to be further evidence that you were right in the first place.

I must say, Mr. Premier, that this has been a very educational experience for me and, I believe, for many of my colleagues.

I thought I heard you mention something about Senate reform. While we have you here, it might be interesting to hear how you think the Senate might be better reformed to deal with problems of this kind and other Newfoundland problems. Do you have any such views?

Senator Marshall: Mr. Peckford is keeping them to himself.

Mr. Peckford: In the last year or so, there has been a lot of pressure from the west as it relates to this whole question of the role of the Senate.

To this point in time we have not taken a strong position to disturb the status quo. We have always expressed a concern that an elected Senate, almost by definition, would tend to diminish the powers of the provinces.

Therefore, we have always argued that that is not in the best interests of the kind of federation that we have—as was witnessed by what happened recently. We maintain that position and we have not advocated an elected Senate.

However, additional pressure will be put on all the provinces by three or four who are strongly in favour of that. Provinces in the west feel that this is an avenue by which they can have a greater voice here at the centre. By the same token, I think that will diminish the federation as we know it.

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Honourable senators, just to leave no shadow on the record, I believe the premier used my name in order to borrow my support for the argument of linkages. The fact is that I wanted to be very clearly understood that, although it can be tempting at times to use the advantage of another department to sustain your own, I think it is very bad policy. It also opens the door to some very dangerous precedents when there is geographic competition. I have in mind one instance when the west coast fishermen proclaimed that we had made a deal with the U.S. on Georges Bank which weakened their hand. In reality, we treated both coasts completely and absolutely separately, for obvious reasons.

● (1630)

I can think of no case when I was in that portfolio of my being overruled by my colleagues. I never wanted the job enough to stay with it under conditions that would allow my colleagues from another department to overrule my decision.

[Mr. Peckford.]

That doesn't mean that you do not fight within the system, but, at one point, if you cannot stand the heat, you get out of the kitchen.

Mr. Peckford: I intend to stay in the kitchen for a long time to come, senator.

Senator Bosa: My question has nothing to do with the Canada-France fishing agreement. It follows up on the question put by Senator Frith as to the role that the Senate should play in its relations with provincial governments in this and similar matters.

When the Senate was created in 1867, it was given two specific areas of endeavour, one of which was to represent and protect regional interests; the other was to act as a counterweight to the popularly elected House of Commons. I do not want to analyse these two areas to determine how effectively the Senate has fulfilled those objectives. Recently there has been a suggestion that a cross-party committee be formed to interface with provincial governments. At the present time, there is no mechanism for this process.

Premier Peckford may be aware that there are now in existence some 1,000 agreements between the federal and provincial governments. These agreements are not scrutinized or analysed by any one political body. I think that the Senate would like to do something in that area. Does the Premier have any opinion on this suggestion? If he does not wish to answer my question now, perhaps he could take it under advisement—

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

The Chairman: Senator Bosa, I permitted a question, you are making a speech.

Senator Bosa: I am asking a question. Mr. Chairman. If you analyse what I have said, you will find that it was the preface to my question. I had to preface my remarks in that way in order to put my question. Others have made speeches today and they were not interrupted, so I do not see why you should interrupt me at the very moment I am making my point.

Senator Marshall: It is a little fishy, though.

Senator Bosa: If the Premier does not wish to answer my question now, perhaps he could take it under advisement and let me know his opinion later.

Mr. Peckford: I would like to respond to your question, senator, by saying that I think there are areas like the one you have mentioned which could strengthen the role of the Senate. As you articulated, one of the primary objectives of the Senate under the Constitution of 1867 is to protect regional interests. A committee such as the one you have suggested would, in my view, be given serious consideration by all of the premiers.

Senator Bosa: Thank you, Mr. Peckford.

The Chairman: On behalf of honourable senators, I would like to thank the Premier and his aides for their very good presentation.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I rise on behalf of senators on both sides of the chamber to extend our thanks to Premier Peckford and to his officials. It has been a very useful afternoon. I think the position of Newfoundland and, indeed, of eastern Canada has been pointed out graphically and I am sure that many of my colleagues gained a lot of insight this afternoon.

I should also mention in passing that Senator Murray and Senator MacEachen had to leave during today's proceedings because both of them must attend an important function in Atlantic Canada. That made it necessary for them to depart early. I am sure they were disappointed at having to miss some of today's proceedings.

Senator Frith: There was no discourtesy intended.

Senator Doody: Absolutely not. Once again, Premier Peckford, thank you very much for attending.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peckford: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would read one more thing into the record. Whatever is said here and in other places is extremely important. I would like it clearly read into the record that future allocations of fish in Canadian waters to Saint Pierre and Miquelon would have to reflect recent catches made by fishermen of Saint Pierre and Miquelon in these waters. I trust that there is no misunderstanding about our position.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Canada-France Fisheries and Territorial Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that the committee have leave to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE (PROHIBITED DEGREES) BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for the second reading of the Bill S-5, An Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons.—(Honourable Senator Neiman)

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I defer to Senator Hicks.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I will speak only briefly on this subject. I want to make the point again I made here on a previous occasion, that I do not think it is necessary to include in this legislation adopted children. This legislation has to do with consanguinity, with the genetic effects of marriage between persons who fall within certain relationships within the family. I do not think that an adoptive relationship should be the subject of legislation of this kind. I am not debating the desirability of what I am sure some social workers would call the traumatic effects upon some young girl, for example, who had been adopted and later was to be married to her adoptive father. There may be all kinds of reasons against this. I urge that the committee to which this bill is referred should study this question carefully, including perhaps a reference to some expert witnesses such as Professor Hubbard from the University of Ottawa who gave evidence on this specific subject. It may very well be that this legislation would be improved if we took out the reference to adoptive children or adoptive persons in a lineal relationship to the other partner to the proposed marriage.

● (1640)

On motion of Senator Neiman, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 19, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE DOUGLAS CHARLES ABBOTT, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, two days ago, on behalf of all of us, Senator Murray expressed regret at the passing of Mr. Justice Abbott. At that time nothing was added to what Senator Murray said. On my own behalf, I should like to say a word or two now.

Douglas Charles Abbott served with great distinction for many years in Canadian public life. As I recall, he began his career with Prime Minister Mackenzie King. In 1945 he was appointed Minister of National Defence and later Minister of National Defence for Naval Services. In the administration of Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent he served as Minister of Finance, a portfolio—one of the most difficult in all of Canadian politics—he survived successfully. His reputation, in fact, grew rather than diminished as the result of his performance as Minister of Finance. He is remembered as being the epitome of a gentleman and a statesman.

Honourable senators are aware that he was also a distinguished judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. On one occasion my friend Tony Abbott, his son, related a quotation that I believe has been attributed to others—on one occasion it was incorrectly attributed to me—when in reality it originated with Doug Abbott and his friend “Chubby” Power. Honourable senators will remember that he went to the Supreme Court and that “Chubby” Power came to the Senate. Tony Abbott told me that on one social occasion Chubby said to Doug, “You know, Doug, the Senate is a wonderful place. The sweetest sound in all Canadian politics occurs on the morning after one’s party has lost a general election and one hears the words “Good morning, senator.”

Judge Abbott had another connection with the Senate. He was the chairman of a commission on parliamentary facilities. He had a lot to do with the Senate in the sense that he made what were, for that time, very far-reaching proposals for better facilities for senators. As a matter of record, many of his suggestions were put into effect by the government and by the Senate administration. His connection with the Senate, then, was not limited to his relationship with “Chubby” Power.

Honourable senators, he was a great man and a great Canadian—something we often say on these sad occasions but, in this case, something well worth repeating. I take this moment to express a deep regret at the passing of someone whom many of us are proud to have known and all of us are proud to have admired.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words to those expressed by Senator Frith. Senator Lefebvre and I, and perhaps other members of this house, had the unique opportunity of serving with the late Mr. Justice Douglas Abbott on the advisory commission looking into parliamentary facilities. It will remain in our minds and hearts as a really unique experience because of the particular qualities of the person who presided over the work of that group, namely, the late Mr. Justice Abbott.

We did indeed make a number of recommendations to improve the day-to-day work of members of Parliament in this city and on the Hill. A number of them have been implemented. It was our hope that the government would rapidly put most of those recommendations into effect. In fact, great progress has been accomplished on the Commons side of Parliament, but since my coming to this august house I have noticed that we are seriously dragging behind in terms of contemporary, modern, efficient facilities which would allow senators to play a greater, if not a full, role in the nation’s parliamentary life.

I say that as an aside. My purpose now is to extend to Mrs. Abbott and her family our heartfelt condolences. I personally regret very much the passing of Mr. Justice Abbott who was not only a real business type, a no nonsense man, but also a real gentleman.

OFFICIAL REPORT

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT BY DEPUTY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before dealing with the Presentation of Petitions, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to an error in the Debates of the Senate for Tuesday, March 17, 1987, at page 638. In the course of my remarks on the borrowing bill I said:

The terms and conditions of those treasury bill auctions are always announced a month ahead of the actual auction itself.

I should have said “a week”. I suspect the error is mine and not Hansard’s. I did not pick it up. However, it is a substantial error and one that really needs correction. To announce a weekly treasury bill auction a month ahead of time would take a little bit of doing on the part of anyone!

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FOURTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Fourth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 679.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

FIFTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Fifth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "B", p. 682.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, the Standing Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its Fifth Report respecting its examination of the expenditures proposed by Supplementary Estimates (A), laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "C", p. 693.)

[Senator Doody.]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I was about to ask for leave for the report to be considered now. Since the report is now being distributed to honourable senators, I should ask the question: Is that an appropriate suggestion?

Senator Olson: No, it is not.

Senator Kelly: Senator Olson says that it is inappropriate. Perhaps the report could be considered later this day.

On motion of Senator Kelly, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(e), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, March 19, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee recommends that each Senator be allocated $3,077 in the next fiscal year to be used at his or her discretion for research assistance and that senators be allowed to pool their amounts with other senators if they so wish.

Your Committee also recommends that a proportional amount of these funds, in the current year budget, be made available starting immediately. Senators wishing to use these funds should contact the Director of Personnel by letter regarding contracting arrangements.

Respectfully submitted.

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the report be adopted now. I shall give an explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this is a question that has been before the Senate, before the Internal Economy Committee and before the caucuses for some time.

Senator Nurgitz: Is it being distributed now?

Senator Frith: I believe it is. In the meantime, let me remind you that in the last fiscal year there was an allocation in the budget that would average out to approximately $3,000 per senator. However, the plan as it was originally introduced was based on a division of research funds to be allocated to the two caucuses, then sub-allocated within each caucus. Both caucuses spent a good deal of time with subcommittees or representatives attempting to work out a system, and we were not successful. The system we have come up with here is far from perfect and has been around for a long time. What we are suggesting is that we give this system a try to see how well it works. Of course, it implies an allocation between caucuses because of the allocation to each senator, and the idea is that senators will be credited with an amount for research assistance. Obviously, at these figures, it will not be used to pay salaries but perhaps to fund contract research assistants. There is also permission to pool the amount so that there can be an assignment. Senator Doody, do you have the wrong one?

• (1410)

Senator Doody: Yes, the one that has been circulated deals with dental care.

Senator Nurgitz: We were thinking of mental care.

Senator Petten: The other one is on the way.

Senator Frith: You are looking at the next report and, as we say in court, "I am coming to that, My Lord!"

Senator Doody: Do you suggest that we study this one now while we wait?

Senator Frith: It would not be a bad idea.

Senator Flynn: When you say that, you do not usually have a good argument, anyway.

Senator Frith: As Senator Flynn says, when you use that expression it is not so much that you do not have a good argument, but rather that you have nothing to say on the subject and you hope that the judge will not remind you of your promise that you will come to that point.

In any event, that is the essence of this report. The only thing that takes me a little by surprise is that it says:

... be allocated ... in the next fiscal year ...

The committee itself was prepared to allow for some allocation this year, provided a system of partial allocation could be arranged within the guidelines of the Treasury Board, the Financial Administration Act and the Auditor General. Therefore, if I understood correctly the view of the committee, the wording should be:

... be allocated $3,077 in each fiscal year to be used ...

I doubt that anyone will find a way to use that money this year, but I assure you that the money is there in the budget and, in a case like that, it is amazing what genius can suddenly appear when there is money to be spent!

Senator Simard: Senator Frith, the second paragraph of the report covers the current year.

Senator Frith: Senator Simard has answered the point. It is covered in the second paragraph:

Your Committee also recommends that a proportional amount of these funds, in the current year budget, be made available starting immediately.

Therefore, "available" means that there is a way of doing it within those guidelines.

Senator Flynn: Does that mean that the whole amount can be allocated for the remainder of the fiscal year?

Senator Frith: Not practically, no. In practical terms, I think it would be difficult for any of it to be allocated.

Senator Flynn: I do not want it to be difficult; I want it to be impossible.

Senator Frith: It is close to that, I think. Honourable senators, for those reasons, and because this matter has been around so long, I am asking that we deal with it today and dispose of it.

Senator Denis: As there are many old senators, I would like to know if the dental care plan deals with false teeth costs.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we are not yet at the report dealing with dental care. As Thursdays sometimes do, this is turning into a sort of "happy hour". We have not yet reached the report dealing with dental care. "I am coming to that, My Lord!"

Motion agreed to.

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, March 19, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee recommends that Senators agree to join the Public Service Dental Care Plan, effective March 1, 1987, on the same terms and conditions as the Management Category of the Public Service, namely, compulsory membership, monthly contributions shared 50-50 by the Senators and the Government, and voluntary spousal and child coverage.

A description of the benefits available is found in the document entitled "The Public Service Dental Care Plan" published by Supply and Services Canada, 1987.

Respectfully submitted,

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am going to move that this report be considered at the next sitting of the Senate, but would ask leave to give a brief explanation of the report at this time.

Senator Flynn: Is it that urgent?

Senator Frith: It would appear to be urgent, but let me explain.

Senator MacDonald: Nothing dentured, nothing gained!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, yesterday we heard about how Senator MacDonald's bons mots invariably get him into trouble, and since I love to see Senator MacDonald in trouble, I want to be sure that the Hansard reporter caught his bon mot. It was "Nothing dentured, nothing gained!"

Honourable senators, the Internal Economy Committee has examined this dental care plan. It appears to be an excellent plan and the committee recommends the Senate take advantage of it, but to understand the proposal I think we should ensure that the document entitled "The Public Service Dental Care Plan", is circulated to all honourable senators so they can study it.

As I stated in connection with the previous motion, the plan is not perfect. I have compared it to two other plans and have found it very advantageous as far as premiums are concerned. I have not made a detailed comparison of the benefits except in one instance, and these benefits are roughly parallel to the benefits found in the one I have examined.

You will notice in the report that reference is made to the date of March 1, 1987. If we approve this, coverage will be retroactive to March 1, 1987. Of course, and understandably, we will have to pay the premiums from March 1, 1987. However, the premiums are attractively low.

There are two other features honourable senators might want to consider. They were brought up at the committee meeting held earlier today. I, naturally, focused on the premiums for single persons, since those are the ones that would apply to me, being a widower. Premiums for couples are higher, as are those that cover children.

On the subject of children's coverage, I understand that in the province of Quebec children are automatically covered if the parents reside in the province of Quebec. We were told earlier today that if a person is in that position, as I know some honourable senators are, that would not create a problem because they would simply not have to cover the children. In other words, one can obtain single coverage, or coverage for a spouse as well, but not necessarily coverage for children.

Those are the factors I suggest honourable senators take into account when studying this report. We will try to get a copy of the plan to every senator so we can deal with it some day next week, or whenever we think it appropriate.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. What about those of us who are covered under another plan, and I must say a somewhat more generous plan since there are no contributions involved. That plan is with my old law firm. I ask that bearing in mind that this is to be compulsory.

Senator Frith: If an honourable senator is already covered by another plan, I believe that is an acceptable exemption, but I am not certain. That is something we will have to look into. That is an important question.

● (1420)

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Frith a question? I would like to know what the definition of the word "children" and the the word "child" is, and at what age does the definition cease to apply?

Senator Frith: I don't remember; you will have to look that up in the booklet. I do not have a copy of the booklet setting out the plan, but I believe it has the answer to that question. I am sorry, honourable senators, I do not know the answer.

Senator David: Because, Senator Frith, in Quebec there is a limit—I think the age is 14—for the coverage of children. Therefore, I would like to know if the coverage will be the same in this program.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it would be helpful to all of us if colleagues who live in the province of Quebec could tell us about that when we return to the item when it next appears on the order paper.

On motion of Senator Frith, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO ENGAGE SERVICES— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel Hays: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matters of bills and estimates as are referred to it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, does this now go under the annex to our rules? Before we vote on it, do we get a budget?

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, if I might comment on that, the answer is no. My understanding is that this reference must be in place before we, as a committee, can proceed to send our budget to Internal Economy. Accordingly, the budget will come before the Senate in due course.

Senator Frith: Well, I thought that the idea was that before we granted the authority to hire we wanted to have an idea of what it would cost. If we pass the motion, then it goes to the Internal Economy Committee; then Internal Economy simply says "yes" or "no" to the amount, but it is already passed. I am getting close to giving up on this one, I must say.

Senator Flynn: Well, you fought a good fight!

Senator Frith: Let the record show that my comment was greeted with great applause.

Senator Flynn: I will give you my $3,000 for this year.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, as is?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to say one word on this before we go any further. I would like some clarification either from the Rules Committee or from the Internal Economy Committee, because every time a motion is brought in by a committee we go through this same ordeal. It is important that we know exactly what the procedure is. If we are going to accept the motion as it stands—and that is fine; that is certainly within the authority of the Senate—so be it. But if the Senate wants Internal Economy to have some control over the budgets and what the amounts are to be spent for, and so on, then it should be referred to the Internal Economy Committee. Speaking for myself, the less work you give the Internal Economy Committee, the less time I will have to spend there—and that is fine—but let us get it straight. Let us find out if there are to be some financial controls on committee budgets or not. Obviously, we cannot have it both ways.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to check this, but I think the mistake we made in the rules is that we distinguished between standing committees and special committees.

Senator Doody: And also special projects for standing committees.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, since I am new to this place, perhaps I do not understand the niceties of how the budgeting process for committees works.

However, I did review this fairly carefully before bringing the motion and, as I understand it, before the committee that I chair has its budget approved it must go to the Internal Economy Committee with its budget and have it approved. It is also my understanding that the practice has been to bring this type of motion so that it is clear as to what its reference is, before the matter of budget goes to the Internal Economy Committee.

I do not see any impairment of the Internal Economy Committee's right to scrutinize and pass a budget by passing this motion at this time.

Senator Doody: Senator Hays really need not feel that he is not as familiar with this subject as the rest of us. I have been here a little longer than he has and have been involved in this discussion for nearly eight years, but I am every bit as much in the dark as he is.

The only point I was trying to make is that someone should clarify the situation so that we do not have to go through this every time a budget is brought in.

What baffles me is that if we give authority here today to the proposition that has been put forward by Senator Hays, then there is really no point in bringing the matter before the Internal Economy Committee because the Senate, which is the governing body, will already have authorized the committee to hire whoever it wants to do whatever it wants to have done. That is what the motion sounds like.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I do not think that passing this motion impairs the ability of the Internal Economy Committee to carry out its function. The Agriculture Committee needs authority from the Senate to hire staff. The Internal Economy Committee, in its discretion, can decide whether that will be one person or any other number.

I attended the meeting this morning and there is a proposed budget of around $20,000, which is really a guesstimate, and some of the money will be spent for travelling purposes that are not even in the planning stages at this point in time.

I do not think Senator Doody's argument that somehow you have to make that decision now is valid. I think that the Internal Economy Committee retains its power to decide whether it will be $1, or $100,000 or any amount in between.

Senator Flynn: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Frith: Just before we do that, may I draw the attention of senators who might find the subject less than esoteric, not worrying about those who find it very esoteric, to Appendix III which is entitled, "Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees." This is to be found at page 77 of our rules.

Honourable senators, I think it is clear from those guidelines—or perhaps it is not so clear; it is a nice point—that Senator Hays needs to present a budget before there is a vote on the motion. As you will see the subject is dealt with under two headings. Upon reading the information under "Committee Budgets for Work relating to the Study of Bills and Estimates" there is no doubt in my mind that if the budget is for work relating to the study of bills and estimates, that is, the work of a standing committee on that subject, then under the present rule you do not have to present a budget or the report of the Internal Economy Committee before the vote on that budget.

If, however, it is for work relating to special studies by standing or special committees, according to the rules you have to present the budget before you ask the Senate to vote on it.

Honourable senators, I think we should adjourn the debate but I thought I would draw your attention to those two situations.

I think there is some real work here for the Rules Committee because I notice that on page 79, under "Committee Budgets for Work relating to Special Studies by Standing or Special Committees" item 2:06 states:

A committee that has received a report from the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration pursuant to guideline 2:05 may present a report to the Senate requesting the authorization that the committee requires to incur the special expenses that it anticipates.

● (1430)

Unless I am mistaken, there are these two divisions and the proposal before us falls within the first and not the second. However, I still think we should adjourn the debate on this motion.

Senator Doody: Before doing so, I have just one question. Presumably, the motion before us deals with the legislative activities of the standing committee. If that committee were to take up a special study, then none of the staff that has been approved in the prior reference would be allowed to work toward this end. It is extremely difficult to get a straightforward interpretation of these rules, so I agree with Senator Flynn on the matter.

Senator Hays: I would like to share with honourable senators one concern. I do not believe that the adjournment of the debate on this motion will impair our ability to hear witnesses next week, but if that were the case, I would be concerned that we proceed as quickly as possible to determine the outcome of the issue. The committee has had referred to it this week the subject matter of Bill C-43, which deals with forestry matters. I understand that the government is anxious to have this bill passed by the Senate before the end of the month. If the adjournment of the debate on this motion does not impair our ability to hold hearings, then it will not delay our dealing with that bill. The committee proposes to meet next Tuesday and, if I am wrong in my impression, I would ask honourable senators to correct me.

Senator Flynn: There is no problem with that.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO HEAR WITNESSES

Hon. Daniel Hays: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That, for the duration of the present session, the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized, on its own initiative, to send for, hear and consider the evidence of a person or persons on matters which are within the Committee's mandate as described in Rule 67(1)(n) of the Rules of the Senate.

If necessary, I would be pleased to give a brief explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Hays: I have put this motion, honourable senators, because from time to time the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has received requests from witnesses—as I am sure it will continue to do—who wish to appear on matters on which they would not otherwise be able to appear because we have no legislative mandate under which to hear them, nor do we have a special reference from the Senate. Next week, for example, the Manitoba Pulse Growers Association will visit Ottawa. Representatives of that association wish to appear before the committee. We would like to hear them but are unable to do so without a specific reference.

Further, during the Soil Conservation Week in April, we hope that the Minister of Agriculture will appear before the committee to give us a status report on matters on-going within the Department of Agriculture with respect to soil conservation. Again, we would not be able to hear him without a special reference. This motion, then, provides to the committee a general power to hear such witnesses, the first of which we anticipate next week. That is the reason behind the motion.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION YUKON ASSETS DISPOSAL AUTHORIZATION

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-45

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-45, An Act to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 24th March, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wish to inform the house that Senator Murray is absent this afternoon. I would be pleased to take any questions as notice and will do my utmost to give the appropriate answers as soon as I possibly can.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

ACID RAIN—DECLARATION BY U.S. ADMINISTRATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would the Deputy Leader of the Government ask the Leader of the Government to inform the house as to exactly how the recent declaration by the United States administration on the subject of acid rain really advances the cause? The Congress of the United States would have to approve the amount of $2.5 billion to this end. Many congressional representatives seem to feel that, to quote one of them, "... the second time around, the prime minister should see through the president's hocus-pocus. . . This is a betrayal of our common environment."

Although we must give credit, as the Prime Minister has done, to President Reagan for requesting the $2.5 billion, it seems that because of the view expressed in Congress, it will not advance the cause. Congressmen do not feel that that amount of money will be granted, nor do they think that the amount being asked for will really go towards solving, or even making a significant step towards the solution of, the acid rain problem.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it seems to me that the reiteration of the President's dedication to the matter would be of some satisfaction to all of us.

Senator Frith: The reiteration?

Senator Doody: Reiteration, yes. Nevertheless, I will certainly pass the message on to the government leader.

THE CONSTITUTION

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENT TO IMPLEMENT CONCURRENT JURISDICTION OVER PROVINCIAL RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, can the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us when the government will introduce a motion in this chamber to initiate an amendment to the Constitution so that the argument made yesterday by Premier Peckford can be accommodated under the Constitution, that is, for concurrent jurisdiction over the fisheries, which, according to him—and I have heard it expressed by other Newfoundlanders—is the most important natural resource which the province has. The argument was advanced in the chamber yesterday that it would be a solution to, or would go a long way toward redressing, the problem he described, and would also provide a solution for the future. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government tell us when such a motion will be initiated in this chamber?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had no idea that the Canadian government was going to introduce such a motion. However, I am pleased indeed to hear the honourable senator refer to that resource as Newfoundland's resource. I am sure that Premier Peckford and many honourable senators will be pleased to hear the honourable senator say so, and we look forward to his support.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Then I take it that the government has not considered that request, and, so far as the Deputy Leader of the Government knows, there is no action being planned with respect to the representation made by the people of Newfoundland through their Premier.

May I ask him if the government is considering an alternative, namely, to bring forward a bill, such as Bill C-6 now before the Senate, dealing with petroleum resources rather than fishery resources. That bill provides for shared or concurrent jurisdiction with respect to the petroleum resources. That is done by way of an agreement between the two governments. Is the government considering bringing forth such an agreement to take care of and accommodate the request of the Premier pending an amendment to the Constitution that will do what I described a moment ago and what Premier Peckford agrees is the long-term solution to the problem now faced by Newfoundland?

Senator Doody: I am sure it will come as no surprise to the honourable senators that the government has not taken me into its confidence as to what it is considering in terms of legislation at this point. However, I wish to point out to the honourable senator that making an agreement with regard to petroleum resources is somewhat different from making an agreement with regard to a fishery resource. Petroleum seems more inclined to stay in one place and to respect territorial boundaries, whereas fish seem to be under no such constraints and seem to move from provincial waters to provincial waters; and despite the best intentions in the world, it is very difficult to get the fish to go along with such agreements. But I understand completely what the honourable senator is saying, and I hope that the Canadian government will find a way to accommodate our provincial aspirations.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Does the Deputy Leader of the Government believe that it is beyond the ingenuity of this government to devise an agreement between the two governments to accommodate the request and to provide for a long-term concurrent jurisdiction by the province and Canada over what was described as being by far the most important natural resource of that province?

Senator Doody: After sitting on the opposite side of the house and listening to the ingenious plans brought forward by the then economic czar of the preceding government, I am convinced that nothing is beyond the imagination of any government, and I am sure that if it is possible for this particular government to accommodate the province of Newfoundland, it will do so.

Senator Frith: Is that what you might call a heavy duty response?

Senator Doody: If it fits.

Senator Frith: It is uncharacteristically heavy duty.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not find a lot of levity in this. Senators may think that coming from the prairies I should not take an interest in this; but, as I said yesterday, I believe that the Senate was fulfilling one of its greatest functions, which is to come to the defence of a region that believes it has been aggrieved by a government which came into office under the "rep by pop" formula. I take it very seriously. I think the Deputy Leader of the Government should give us a reply. Does the government intend to do anything about the grievance that was laid before us in this chamber yesterday by the Premier of Newfoundland, by either one route or the other?

Senator Flynn: You are making one point and your neighbours are not in agreement with you at all. Let us debate it.

Senator Olson: There was a time when I used to direct all of my questions to Senator Flynn, because he had some authority to deal with them. I am still interested—

Senator Flynn: I had less patience than Senator Doody, that's all.

Senator Olson: I had a great deal of respect for his opinion then, and I do so now. What I am inquiring about is the government's position. Senator Doody said that he is not taken into the confidence of the government. I find that a very strange reply. I would think that when he has the responsibility of answering for the government in this place, the government should take him into its confidence. I also believe that he is capable of representing on this floor some of the hopes and aspirations of the people in Newfoundland. So I have asked those questions, and I am interested in what he has to say and not what may be Senator Flynn's opinion.

Senator Flynn: And I am not interested in what you have to say.

Senator Olson: I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government—

Senator Flynn: I would—

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. We have been attempting to follow the question put by Senator Olson, and repeatedly, someone on this side—I do not know who, but I hear voices—interrupts that presentation of Senator Olson. It seems to me that the honourable senator should be given a fair opportunity of putting his questions to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: I could also raise a point of order on the way he puts his questions.

Senator Frith: We still hear voices.

Senator Corbin: Senator Flynn, are you the guilty party?

Senator Flynn: If you did not recognize me, then it is about time that you looked around.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not want to repeat what I have said. Senator Flynn has some interesting rules that he applies unilaterally whenever it is convenient. I would like the Deputy Leader of the Government to tell us whether or not the government intends to take any action on what I considered to be a very reasonable argument that was put before us yesterday, along either one route or the other. The agreement could perhaps accommodate it more quickly than the other route, but the permanent solution that Senator Peckford was looking for was a constitutional amendment.

Senator Doody: I do not know whether Premier Peckford will be flattered or chagrined to be referred to as "Senator" Peckford. It was probably meant as a compliment and I accept it as such. The honourable senator says he is surprised that I have not been taken into the confidence of the government. I am sorry to have shocked him, but in all humility I have to say that they have not consulted with me at this point. I am sure, that when this exchange has been read in today's Hansard, things will change.

With regard to the honourable senator's interest in Newfoundland's present and future, I am refreshed and delighted and absolutely pleased. Saul on the road to Tarsus was never overtaken by such a conversion as the honourable senator has shown today. In all my years in this place this is the first time that I have heard him mention Newfoundland, or the fishery problem, or the jurisdictional problem, and indeed I had some suspicions about his willingness to turn over the hydrocarbon resources during the last administration. I remember very well the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, arriving at Memorial University and standing on the stage and saying that as long as he was Prime Minister of this country and as long as his party ruled this country, that resource would be a natural resource of Canada's and the people of Newfoundland would get out of it what they got through equalization payments and nothing else. The government of today has shown a very significant change from that attitude and the Newfoundland people are very much the better for it. If the honourable senator wants to try to help out on the fishery question, we will be pleased to accept that kind of help; but please don't talk about all the years that have passed, about Newfoundland's position, and so on.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to tell the deputy leader that there has been no change in attitude on the road to Damascus or to any other place. I have expressed in this chamber on a number of occasions,—

Senator Doody: You wouldn't know a capelin from a puffin!

Senator Olson: —when I had some authority, an interest both in the fisheries and, indeed, in the well-being of Newfoundland and that is still the case as far as I am involved. So I resent the implication of the honourable senator's last statement, while I appreciate that he is now grateful for some support that I gave willingly.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON LYELL ISLAND LOGGING ACTIVITY

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I have some temerity in asking it, being a prairie person about to ask a question that relates to a coastal region. My question is prompted by the lyrical article by Cameron Young in the Globe and Mail of Monday of this week with regard to the logging on Lyell Island in the South Moresby region of the Queen Charlotte Islands off the west coast of Canada. Mr. Cameron points out that, although the federal government is in negotiations with the government of British Columbia to establish a national park in South Moresby, although all three federal political parties support the preservation of the region, which has unique global ecological and cultural significance, and although this is crown land on which the commercial timber represents only about one fifth of 1 per cent of all commercial timber in British Columbia, logging is proceeding currently at a pace which may soon eliminate the wilderness environment of a national park.

My question is: What steps is the federal government taking to have a moratorium imposed on logging activity on Lyell Island while negotiations for a federal park in South Moresby proceed, so that this unique and beautiful Canadian "Galapagos" can be preserved?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank the honourable senator for her question, and I will see that it is brought to the attention of the government leader at the first possible opportunity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSAL TO CLOSE CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI, FINLAND—DECLARATION OF SUPPORT

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, since the Government of Canada does not take the Deputy Leader of the Senate into its confidence, I would like to tell the deputy leader that I take him into my confidence.

Senator Petten: A mixed blessing!

Senator Bonnell: So, by taking the deputy leader into my confidence, I would like to express a thought to him that I would like him to take back to that government. The thought I would like to express to him comes from what I read in a news item in the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, March 18, 1987, where it says that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, has decided to keep Canada's embassy in Helsinki open while he reconsiders his decision to close it. Apparently it was to be closed on March 31. I want the deputy leader to tell him that he has my support for doing that, and I hope that he will reconsider for some time and continue to keep that embassy open. Finland is a country that is very favourable to Canada. The growth in trade between our two countries is increasing tremendously. We have a lot of Finns in this country who benefit greatly from this embassy and, if no other, we have that great hockey player on the Edmonton Oilers, Mr. Jarri Kurri, who is scoring a lot of goals for us.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Absolutely.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE, MARCH 26-27, 1987—TREATY INDIAN REPRESENTATION

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. Senators will know that very shortly there will be a First Ministers' Constitutional Conference on aboriginal issues. There are still some outstanding questions that should be settled before the meeting takes place. I am speaking in particular of the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance request for two seats at the conference. To illustrate the importance of the issue, I want to put into the record a copy of a telex to Mr. Hnatyshyn from Mr. Horsman, who is the Attorney General of Alberta. It is dated March 17, 1987. It reads:

Dear Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Recently, Premier Getty and I met with Mr. Gregg Smith, President of the Indian Association of Alberta. We discussed representation of Alberta treaty Indians at the First Ministers' Conference, March 26-27, 1987. As you are aware the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance, of which the Indian Association of Alberta is a member, has insisted that the Assembly of First Nations does not represent prairie treaty Indians at the aboriginal constitutional discussions.

The Alberta government is of the view that the aboriginal constitutional process will be seriously flawed if it excludes approximately one-third of Canada's treaty Indians. In support of the Indian Association of Alberta and on behalf of the Alberta government, I would request that the federal government, which has a primary responsibility for Canada's Indian people, consider providing the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance with appropriate representation at the upcoming First Ministers' Conference. You will recall that during the course of our recent meeting on March 13, I raised this issue and requested that you undertake to raise it with the Prime Minister, who is responsible for inviting representatives of the aboriginal peoples [to] the conference.

A response on this issue by the end of this week is important to our preparations for the First Ministers' Conference. I look forward to hearing from you.

I understand also that similar representations have been sent from the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Could the deputy leader enlighten me on this matter, please?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I cannot. I should say that I was given notice of this question earlier this morning, for which I am grateful. I immediately forwarded the material to the office of the Minister of Justice. I understand from his staff that they are trying to get an answer for me, and as soon as one is available, I will see that it is provided.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Given the deputy leader's reply, does it mean that the government has not yet replied to Mr. Horsman's telex?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I am afraid that I do not know. I sent the material up to the office of the Minister of Justice and asked them to get an answer for me. I have not been in communication with them since that time, but as soon as I hear, I will certainly let the honourable senator know.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. In view of the fact that this First Ministers' Conference involving the Constitution and aboriginal issues will take place next week, and in view of the importance of having one third of the treaty Indians represented officially in a manner which they recognize, would the deputy leader assure us that every effort will be made to get a decision before the time expires and it is too late? We are running out of time, and I think this is a very important issue. I have a feeling that it is just going to be allowed to drift, as the government sometimes has a habit of doing. I would like to be assured that there will be a response at the very earliest moment.

[Senator Marchand.]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I appreciate the honourable senator's concern. I have passed that sentiment on to the minister on behalf of several other senators. I will certainly reinforce that sentiment this afternoon if an answer has not been received by that time. Certainly, I am sure that, as I say, given the seriousness of the situation, there is a real concern and the minister is aware.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPOSITION OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO INDIA— EXCLUSION OF SENATORS

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to raise reluctantly a matter which I find rather irritating. On one occasion in the past, I brought this same matter to the attention of honourable senators and of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Again, it concerns the Department of External Affairs, which put out Communiqué No. 049 of March 18, 1987 which is entitled, "Parliamentary Visit to India." I will be brief and read only part of the first paragraph:

The Department of External Affairs is pleased to announce the visit to India by a group of five Members of Parliament from March 22 to April 4.

I will skip stating who is going and who is not going. It has always been my impression that the Parliament of Canada is composed of the Senate and the House of Commons. In this instance the so-called parliamentary delegation is made up exclusively of members of the other place, namely, the House of Commons. I did some checking into the constitutional arrangements of the Union of India and found out that the Parliament of the union is equally made up of two houses, an upper house and a lower house. The upper house is called the Council of States, and the lower house is referred to as the House of the People.

● (1500)

When the arrangement was made to have a delegation from the House of Commons visit their parliamentary counterparts in India, I would like to know who decided that the delegation would be called a delegation of members of Parliament, and yet be composed only of members of the House of Commons. I think we ought to bring this whole matter to a head. It has happened again and again. I am not saying that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is to blame in this instance. However, this communiqué is issued by the department; it is announced by the department. Do those people know that the Senate exists and that it would be mutually beneficial for members of the two houses of the Canadian Parliament to exchange views with their counterparts in India? I put the question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in the hope that he can find out why it has been done in this fashion. Is it the wish of the Indian government or of the Indian Parliament that the group be composed exclusively of members of the House of Commons, or did they expect a joint delegation of the two houses of the Canadian Parliament to visit them?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank the honourable senator for his question. I will take the matter up with the department concerned and try to get an answer for him as soon as possible.

INVITATION TO ATTEND BRIEFING ON COUNTER-TERRORISM MEASURES—ORDER OF PRECEDENCE—PROPRIETY OF INCLUSION OF STAFF

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to raise another matter involving the Department of External Affairs. This time, it is an invitation we received from the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself. It is a notice to all members, dated March 16, inviting—and I quote:

Members of Parliament and Senators and their staff . . .

We can consider ourselves lucky that they did not name the staff before the senators this time! However, in all propriety, it seems to me that whoever is responsible for these matters ought to know better. These people in the Department of External Affairs are supposed to be steeped in protocol and diplomacy. They ought to know that you always refer to the Senate first, regardless of the opinion people up there may have of us. That is the way the Canadian Constitution is written, and someone ought to tell them that you just do not do things in this fashion. It is sloppy work and I resent it, and I think it offends all of us in this house.

Honourable senators, the point I would like to make is that I am prepared to go to a briefing of "Members of Parliament and Senators and their staff" so that the officers in the Department of External Affairs can outline measures of counter-terrorism and what-have-you. However, I do not think it will be a very open and candid meeting if it is opened up to all staff. Those people in External Affairs ought to take us into their confidence, and that should be a private meeting of the members of both houses, period. That is the point I want to make and I hope the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government will be in a position to report back to us before the fact. This meeting is to take place on March 24, which is next Tuesday.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it will be difficult to get a report back to this chamber before the fact. However, I will certainly try my best to get a report for honourable senators.

In the meantime, the Senate may deem it appropriate to send a message of concern through our own Speaker to the Department of External Affairs and to ask for an explanation, if that is what honourable senators wish to do. In the meantime, from my position here, I will certainly attempt to get an answer from the government.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE, MARCH 26-27, 1987—TREATY INDIAN REPRESENTATION—STATEMENT BY DEPUTY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, while I am on my feet, I would like to report that I have just received a copy of a telegram sent by the Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn to the Honourable James D. Horsman, Q.C., Attorney General and Minister of Federal and Intergovernmental Affairs for the province of Alberta, dealing with the question asked a few minutes ago by some honourable senators here. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Horsman:

Thank you for your telex of March 16 concerning representation of the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance at the First Ministers' Conference next week.

The Honourable Bill McKnight and I will be meeting with representatives of the alliance on March 20 in Saskatoon to discuss the options for PTNA participation at the conference. I am advised that Gregg Smith and Peter Manywounds of the Indian Association of Alberta will be attending. I am looking forward to these discussions and I hope they will prove beneficial.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

The Honourable Ray Hnatyshyn, P.C., Q.C.

Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada

A copy of that telegram has been sent to the Honourable Don R. Getty, Premier of Alberta.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AVAILABILITY OF WHITE PAPER ON DEFENCE POLICY

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I have one more question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. There are a number of questions that I could ask and would like to ask about defence matters. However, some of them might be rendered much more useful if we saw the white paper on defence which has been referred to many times but more recently in the budget speech of the Honourable Michael Wilson in February of this year.

Therefore, instead of asking those questions today, I will just ask one question and that is: Could we have some indication as to when the much talked about white paper on national defence is apt to be made available to us?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have an answer to that question but I will certainly make an inquiry on behalf of Senator Hicks.

Honourable senators, while we are still in Question Period, I would like to make a correction. I was attempting to answer a question posed by Senator Olson a few moments ago and I spoke of Paul's conversion on the road to Tarsus. I apologize to him; I should have said Damascus. I want the record to be completely accurate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSAL TO CLOSE CANADIAN EMBASSY IN HELSINKI, FINLAND—STATEMENT OF APPRECIATION OF MINISTER'S ACTION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with respect to the closing of our embassy in Helsinki, I want to add something further to what Senator Bonnell had to say.

On March 10, 1987, I asked a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the closing of our mission in Helsinki. At that time, I listed a number of reasons why I thought that was not a good idea. Now I want to add my congratulations and encouragement to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on his taking into account the observations that were made. I do not flatter myself that my representations moved him, but I know that many representations were made to him and I think he should be congratulated on being so statesmanlike in reconsidering his decision.

As they say, it takes a big man to admit that he may have been wrong in the first instance!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND ATLANTIC ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved third reading of Bill C-6, to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on off-shore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

RADIO ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard moved the second reading of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words regarding Bill C-3. First of all, those of you who followed the pre-study on the content of this bill in committee, will remember that the matter made news and received attention from a number of people since at least 1984. It was mentioned in the report of the Auditor General, where recovery of cost was envisaged.

The Minister of Finance, in his first policy statement, in 1984, mentioned cost recovery for some services, this one in particular. Naturally, the Nielsen task force also dealt with the subject and warned all the people who could be affected. The 1985 budget of Finance Minister Wilson specifically mentioned a recovery of that nature. Clearly, the public, regional district offices and other clients who could be affected had been consulted while the budget was being prepared in the fall of 1986.

This to say that the subject is not new. The measure is part of a move to reduce the deficit. This amendment to the Radio Act is a step toward a gradual elimination of inequalities between the various users of the radio spectrum.

As you know, that spectrum is a limited natural resource which must be managed with great care if we want the public, broadcasters and industry to use it to their advantage.

When communications are quick and efficient, we can compete and offer a better service. Even if the radio spectrum is invisible, its impact is very much noticeable.

● (1510)

[English]

Honourable senators, Canadians across this vast country enjoy radio and television. We communicate via satellites and mobile radios. In short, the radio spectrum is the highway for our voices and messages, but it is a highway which must be carefully managed. In a way, its management is like the regulations we have to guide aircraft safely across our country. It is only right that the cost of maintaining our "highway" be borne by those who use it.

The government is committed to fiscal responsibility and prudent management. By removing public sector preferential treatment, the government is living up to its commitment.

Through this bill, fairness and equity will be restored in the radio licensing system. For the first time, both public and private sector users of radio services will bear a fair share of the costs of managing this national resource—the radio frequency spectrum.

This legislation will eliminate the exemptions from licence fees that public sector spectrum users now enjoy. These exemptions are unfair, since those who enjoy them are often in competition with private sector users who must pay licence fees.

By way of example, let me refer to some of those inequities. Alberta Government Telephone does not pay such a fee, while one of its competitors, Cantel Cellular, does. Ontario Hydro, P.E.I. Electric, Maritime Electric, Alberta TransAlta Utilities, Alberta Power Corporation, all pay radio licence fees, while Hydro-Quebec, the hydro companies located in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Newfoundland do not. Because these are provincial government companies, they do not pay licensing fees, while private sector companies pay the fees. This is the type of inequity we want to remove.

In the communications area, CNCP pays radio licence fees while the CBC does not. In communications, Manitoba Telephone is not paying, nor is Saskatchewan Telephone, while Bell Canada and B.C. Tel are paying these.

Senator Thériault: It is a tax.

Senator Simard: Senator Thériault keeps saying that it is a tax. Senator Thériault and I have debated this in New Brunswick in the past. I am sure he has support for his interpretation, as I do for mine. I received a letter from the Government of Saskatchewan this morning admitting that this is a user fee and not a tax, but perhaps that is a matter of semantics.

Private oil companies pay these radio licence fees while Petro-Canada does not. I am sure all honourable senators and members of the other place have received letters from the private sector advising of these inequities and asking that more equity be brought in to the system.

There are other examples, but suffice it for me to leave it at that for now.

This measure will bring in $10.4 million, of which $3.3 million will be from the federal departments and agencies. Provincial government departments will contribute to the extent of $4.4 million, and provincial government agencies will contribute some $2.7 million.

I have read the representations made by the Honourable Robert B. McCready when he appeared before the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. He said that it was wrong for the federal government to identify the provincial government as the user, while it was the public at large who benefited from the services. That may be so. But at the same time he registered his approval of the principle of cost recovery measures. The Government of New Brunswick has, on many occasions, taken steps to recover some of its costs. I think the federal government's wisdom and fairness was demonstrated last week in the way the Minister of Finance announced some positive decisions for those five or six provinces that had negative adjustments in their equalization payments because of the population figures. Thus Mr. Wilson again demonstrated that there are many ways that you can help and on this measure I believe that he is right. I am not minimizing the amount that it will mean for the Province of New Brunswick, some $240,000, but I am sure that Mr. McCready and the people of New Brunswick when they are made aware of that and when they have time to reassess this, will know that this is the cost of doing business. In the name of equity, I think they will rally behind that.

• (1520)

In summary, I refer to how the private sector lent their support to the way the federal government introduced those changes. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters supported this bill, as did the Canadian Radio Common Carriers Association, CNCP Telecommunications, and many others. Apart from the Province of New Brunswick, I know of three or four provinces that have sent telegrams registering their opposition. However, they have not appeared before the committee. I am not saying that they were not serious about it, but they could have come before the committee. I am talking about the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Those provinces submitted a number of arguments in support of their opposition to it.

All in all, I believe that this new measure, if passed by both houses, eventually will mean fees and taxes for the federal and provincial governments, starting April 1, 1987, and is a step in the right direction. The federal government has recognized the pleas of many members of Parliament as well as other people, including members of the Senate, when they decided to continue the exemptions in the municipal sectors. At one time it was thought that the municipal sector should be brought under this new legislation also, but I think that the government demonstrated some flexibility there, and they are to be commended.

Honourable senators, I hope that the majority of members of this house will want to support Bill C-3, and I urge all members of the house to consider it favourably.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, will the honourable senator allow me to ask a couple of questions before he adjourns the debate?

Senator Thériault: Well, honourable senators, I am not in a position to answer any questions. You should ask the mover of the bill.

Senator Frith: Ask Senator Simard.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: Senator Simard, would you entertain one question?

Senator Simard: No problem, Senator Gigantès.

Senator Gigantès: Unless I am mistaken, the government will raise about $10 million more of which some $3 million will be paid by government agencies?

Senator Simard: Go on, Senator Gigantès.

Senator Gigantès: This is a cut, if you like, in the operating fund of those government agencies such as CBC.

Is the government going to compensate government agencies for the new cuts it has just imposed on them.

Senator Simard: Honourable senator, first it is true that an amount of $3.3 million will be raised from the budgets of government agencies including CBC.

I think that if we consider the size of those budgets, for example the budget of CBC, you will admit that it represents only a tiny part of the problems which CBC must face when the time comes to make do with less money, considering that the federal government asked CBC last year and again this year to control their expenditures.

I do not think this to be dramatic in the case of CBC. This is the amount I would like to know. You will agree that this is not a large amount. If I cannot find this information immediately, I will pass it on to you later but take my word that it is not a large amount.

Senator Gigantès: I would like very much to know what the figure is, for example, in the case of CBC because I know that some people do not find CBC very useful.

On the contrary, I find it is an extraordinary weapon to reinforce our Canadian identity. I see good programs on CBC which I do not want to see on another channel, and which I would like to be able to continue to watch.

I would like to know where this cut will be made, no matter how small it is. What salary will be cut? What production value will be cut? This is important.

Senator Simard: I think Senator Gigantès does not really expect me to indicate to him which program or what salary will be cut. Will it be Mr. Juneau's salary or another—

I think it will be up to Mr. Juneau to make the decision, considering the services he wants to continue to give and his other revenues. Unless I am mistaken, the budget of CBC may be of some $1 billion, and I think—

Senator Gigantès: It is not even half a billion.

Senator Simard: I believe it has to be more than that.

Senator Gigantès: $480 million.

Senator David: $900 million.

Senator Simard: If you say the total is $3.3 million for all federal agencies, the amount for the CBC cannot be very big. I will get the information for you.

Senator Gigantès: It is a matter of principle. It is a way of cutting a government subsidy to an agency. I would like to know, senator, if it is a principle and if the corporation will be bailed out. That is my question. Thank you.

Senator Simard: I do not know. It will be up to the government to decide whether to bail out the CBC. I doubt that it will. It has asked the corporation to tighten up one more notch. I have just found here what is the amount for the CBC. It will be $132,000 in the next year.

There is a point I wanted to make earlier. I would like to remind you now that for the years 1985 and 1986, all users, all private sector radio permit holders were charged an increase of 125 per cent. We can say they have done more than their share, and speaking of equity, perhaps that is normal.

The minister assured us there will be no rise next year for those new taxpayers.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I intend to speak on the content of the motion after my colleague Senator Thériault.

I would like to ask Senator Simard if he would be agreeable to a motion that the bill be referred to the committee for further study.

Senator Simard, you said in your comments that three or four provinces expressed their opposition to the bill, but that they did not take the trouble of appearing before the committee.

Would the government on whose behalf you are speaking today agree to refer the bill to a committee to give the spokesmen for those provincial governments a chance to come and explain the reasons for their opposition to the bill?

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, I am personally at the mercy of the Senate majority. It is certainly not for the government to decide. I believe you were referring to the Conservative senators in this chamber. They are free to express themselves but I have no objection.

I must remind you that since December, 1986, those provinces had voiced their disagreement and that apart from one telex they did not appear.

I would not want to indulge in speculation, but they may have been invited to tone down their opposition. Given that so many private concerns had to keep on footing the bill, while this was not the case for the federal and provincial governments, perhaps they decided, after having made their opposition known, to carry the matter no further.

If the Senate so wishes, we might consider inviting them again, but I have no problem with that.

On motion of Senator Thériault, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 24, 1987 at 2 p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FOURTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, March 19, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT
(Report No. 38)

In accordance with its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Joint Committee draws the attention of both Houses to various orders made pursuant to the Customs Tariff, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-41.

Many of the tariff items set out in Schedule A to the Customs Tariff provide for the duty-free entry of fruit and vegetables imported into Canada except during any period or periods when an order is in force pursuant to paragraph 15(1)(a) of the Tariff. This paragraph provides that:

"15. (1) The Minister or Deputy Minister may order

(a) that the specific rate of duty, or ad valorem minimum rate of duty, as the case may be, provided for in tariff items [tariff item numbers] shall apply in lieu of the free rate of duty, to goods described in the order imported through a Customs office in a region or part of Canada during such period or periods as may be fixed by the Deputy Minister."⁽¹⁾

(b) ...

In early 1985, the Joint Committee informed the Department of National Revenue that many of the orders reviewed by the Committee provided for the imposition of duties as of a time prior to that of the coming into force of the relevant order.⁽²⁾ The Committee noted that subsection 15(2) of the Customs Tariff specifically exempts from the payment of duties goods that are in transit to a bona fide purchaser in Canada at the time an order made under paragraph 15(1)(a) comes into force. Even if it were not for the regular presumption against the retroactive application of legislation, your Committee considers that this provision indicates that it was never intended by Parliament that duties should be imposed on goods imported before the coming into force of an order made pursuant to paragraph 15(1)(a) of the Tariff.

The Department of National Revenue agreed that it had no authority to impose duties on a retroactive basis and originally proposed: "to advise importers of the situation through a departmental memorandum and invite them to file claims for refunds of erroneously collected non-public monies." While this proposal was acceptable, counsel to your Committee, in a letter dated June 7, 1985, suggested that:

"... it may be simpler to validate the collection of these duties by means of a legislative provision. This would allow the Crown to retain the monies received by it and eliminate the administrative costs of the refund process. [] Validating the collection of these duties by legislation also appears to be a more equitable solution insofar as it would avoid the receipt, by importers, of monies representing costs they have likely passed on to the purchasers of their goods".

By that time, it had also become apparent that orders made under paragraph 15(1)(a) of the Tariff prior to June of 1984 had not been registered as required by section 5 of the Statutory Instruments Act.⁽³⁾ The consequence of this failure to register orders made after the enactment of the Statutory Instruments Act is that they never came into force, and duties collected under those orders were collected without legal authority. In his letter of June 7, 1985, our counsel pointed out that: "Legislation will be required to regularize the situation".

Following a number of inquiries as to the acceptability of this proposal to the Department of National Revenue, the Joint Committee received a letter dated May 26, 1986, from Mr. Giroux, then Deputy Minister for Customs and Excise. In that letter, the Deputy Minister concluded that:

"After a review of all of the considerations, it is the Department's position that remedial legislation is not required at this time nor would it appear that refunds would be justified".

The Deputy Minister also stated that: "it is unfortunate that certain of these orders were technically defective in that they were made without statutory authority" but that, ultimately, it was not likely: "that the validity of the orders would be challenged in a court of law".

Your Committee considers these remarks disclose an unacceptable disregard for the principles upon which our system of government is founded. That the lack of proper legal authority for the collection of thousands of dollars in duties could be characterized by a senior public servant as involving no more than a "technical defect" shows contempt for the rule of law and for Parliament. For the Executive to refuse to seek parliamentary sanction for the illegal actions of its officers on the ground that citizens are unlikely to challenge those actions in a court of law, would be a serious breach of the high standards of constitutional propriety that ought to govern the relationship between the Crown and the people at all times.

Following the receipt of this letter, the Joint Committee instructed its Chairmen to write to the responsible Minister. In their letter to the Honourable Elmer MacKay, the Chairmen recalled that:

"Customs duties have been imposed and collected since 1972 without proper legal authority: orders made prior to 1984, pursuant to Section 15 of the Customs Tariff were not registered as required by the Statutory Instruments Act and must consequently be considered never to have been in force, while orders made since have provided for the imposition and collection of duties prior to the coming into force of the relevant orders."

Referring to the position set out in the Deputy Minister's letter of May 26, 1986, the Chairmen went on to state:

"The reasons advanced in support of this position do not convince the Committee that remedial legislation is not required. In particular, we disagree most strongly with the proposition that the imposition of import duties without proper legal authority amounts to a mere "technical defect". It is an essential proposition of our legal system that citizens are not to be deprived of their property except in accordance with the law. The public interest requires this aspect of Canadian legal policy be adhered to by the Crown at all times."

On January 14, 1987, the Minister of National Revenue replied to your Committee in the following terms:

"I wish to assure you that I am in complete agreement with your statement that citizens should not be deprived of their property except in accordance with the law. I note that you have suggested that remedial legislation should be introduced that would validate the imposition and collection of the duties in question. [] In the near future, I will be recommending to my colleagues that they approve the introduction of remedial legislation to validate the collection of duties made under these orders."

The Joint Committee wishes to commend the Minister of National Revenue for this satisfactory response to the concern of your Committee. The Minister's decision to recommend to Cabinet the introduction of validating legislation, notwithstanding the position taken by his departmental officials, is both proper and in keeping with the best traditions of parliamentary government.

Your Committee recommends to the Houses the adoption of the legislation that will be introduced to give effect to the Minister's undertaking.

NOTES

- (1) Until May 24, 1985, the Customs Tariff empowered the Minister alone to make orders pursuant to paragraph 15(1)(a). By S.C. 1985,

c. 42, s. 3, a new subsection 15(1) was enacted which provided for the exercise of that power by the Deputy Minister for Customs and Excise. On June 27, 1986, S.C. 1986, c. 37, s. 1 came into force; this enactment substituted the phrase "The Minister or Deputy Minister may order" for the phrase "The Deputy Minister may order". However, the English version of this enactment failed to amend the last portion of subsection 15(1), as enacted by S.C. 1985, c. 42, which refers to the application of an order "during such period or periods as may be fixed by the Deputy Minister". The French version of the amended subsection 15(1) does not present this problem and the usual rules of legislative interpretation will allow the courts to supply to the omission in the English version of subsection 15(1).

- (2) Section 9 of the Statutory Instruments Act prescribes that no regulation may come into force on a day earlier than the day on which it is registered pursuant to sections 5 and 6 of the Act. Section 9 provides for two exceptions to this general rule: 1) a regulation belonging to a class of regulations legally exempted from the registration requirement on the ground that registration is not reasonably practicable due to the number of regulations of that class, may come into force on the day on which it is made or a later day stated in the regulation and 2) a regulation may also come into force on a day earlier than that of its registration, but no earlier than the day it is made, if the regulation expressly states that it comes into force on a day earlier than that of its registration and if the regulation-making authority advises the Clerk of the Privy Council in writing of the reasons why it is not practical for the regulation to come into force on the day it is registered. It should be emphasized that even a regulation that falls within one of these two exceptions can never come into force earlier than the day it is made by the regulation-making authority.

Of the orders scrutinized by your Committee, some 23 purported to impose duties on a retroactive basis. Three orders (registered as SOR/84-517, SOR/84-518 and SOR/84-519) provided for the imposition of duties as of a day prior to that of the making of the order, while 20 orders (registered as SOR/84- 548, SOR/84-549, SOR/84-550, SOR/84-551, SOR/84-552, SOR/84-553, SOR/84-554, SOR/84-555, SOR/84-574, SOR/84- 575, SOR/84-613, SOR/84-653, SOR/84-673, SOR/84-674, SOR/84-675, SOR/84-677, SOR/84-768, SOR/84-816, SOR/84- 977 and SOR/85-74) provided for the imposition of duties as of a day prior to that of the registration of the order. The extent to which these orders were retroactive varies from one to six days.

- (3) Your Committee has been unable to ascertain the exact number of orders involved. For 1986-87, approximately 70 orders were adopted under paragraph 15(1)(a) of the Customs Tariff. Assuming the need for these orders to have been constant throughout, we estimate that since 1972, more than 800 orders made after the coming into force of the Statutory Instruments Act were not registered.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Joint Chairman

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

THURSDAY, March 19, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT
(Report No. 39)

Pursuant to the general Order of Reference approved by the Senate on November 27, 1986 and by the House of Commons on December 17, 1986, and its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, S.C. 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Joint Committee wishes to draw the attention of the Houses to the making of subordinate legislation pursuant to the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-6.

The Indian Act authorizes Indian band councils to exercise law-making powers for a wide range of purposes related to local government on reserves. These powers are detailed in sections 81, 83 and 85.1 of the Act (See Appendix 'A'). The legislative measures which a band council is authorized to enact range from zoning and property taxation to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants and the prescription of penalties for breach of certain by-laws. Although by-laws made by a band council concern local government on the reserve, they nevertheless have a decided impact on the daily lives of those to whom they apply and Indian band councils have a duty to ensure their by-laws are fair, reasonable and authorized by law. The importance of the legislative function of band councils is shown by the fact that more than a thousand by-laws have been adopted from 1975 to 1986.

The Statutory Instruments Act subjects all by-laws made under the Indian Act to review and scrutiny by your Joint Committee in accordance with the statutory reference set out in section 26 of the Act. From 1982 to 1985, the Joint Committee examined by-laws made pursuant to sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act on a regular basis. The Joint Committee's general findings as to the degree of conformity of many by-laws to its scrutiny criteria are recorded in the correspondence reproduced in Appendix 'B' to this report. Your Committee concluded that its scrutiny of by-laws made under the Indian Act serves a limited practical purpose at best, and that it would not henceforth review these on an individual basis.

Scrutiny by the Joint Committee may not even be entirely appropriate when one considers that these by-laws are made by band councils whose members are democratically chosen by the people they represent. In this respect, the Committee draws a parallel between by-laws made by Indian band councils and those made by other local authorities such as municipal corporations. In many of the Provinces that have enacted general legislation governing the making of subordinate legislation, regulations or by-laws made by elected local authorities are exempted from the requirements which apply to subordinate legislation made by the Executive and executive agencies. We believe this approach respects the fact that these legislative decisions are those of democratically elected representatives (See Appendix 'C'). Consequently, your Committee recommends that the Statutory Instruments Act be amended so as to expressly exclude by-laws made by Indian band councils from the application of the Act.

In principle, all of the requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act apply to by-laws made under the Indian Act. A by-law made pursuant to either of the sections mentioned earlier is a "regulation" within the meaning of this Act and, subject to prescribed exemptions, must be examined, registered and published in accordance with the Act. Such exemptions have been prescribed in relation to by-laws made pursuant to sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act. Section 15 of the Statutory Instruments Regulations provides that "by-laws made by the council of a band under section 81 or 83 of the Indian Act" are exempted from the requirement that they be published in the Canada Gazette. Section 3 of the Regulations provides that the same by-laws are exempt from the examination required by section 3 of the Act. These by-laws, however, are required to be registered by the Clerk of the Privy Council in accordance with sections 5 and 6 of the Statutory Instruments Act. In effect, the majority of by-laws made by Indian band councils have been exempted from both the examination and publication requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act while by-laws made under section 85.1 are to be similarly exempted in the near future. The Joint Committee sees no merit in maintaining the registration requirement alone and has accordingly recommended to the responsible Minister that this requirement be abandoned.

This suggestion has been accepted by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, in a letter dated December 19, 1986, he informed the Joint Committee that:

"... we are presently seeking an amendment to the Statutory Instruments Regulations, [] to exclude all by-laws passed under sections 81, 83 and 85.1 of the Indian Act from the requirement of examination, registration and publication."

While the Joint Committee recognizes the desirability of the proposed amendment, it remains of the view that the Statutory Instruments Act should be amended so as to specifically exclude by-laws made by Indian band councils from its application. In the alternative, we recommend that the Indian Act be amended to that end.

The Joint Committee wishes to emphasize that this recommendation and its decision not to exercise its statutory mandate in relation to by-laws made under the Indian Act, are not to be construed as an endorsement of the manner in which some band councils exercise the legislative powers delegated to them by Parliament or of the adequacy of the regulatory control requirements now in place.

The Indian Act subjects the exercise of the legislative authority of band councils to different control mechanisms. These differ according to the particular powers that are exercised. By-laws made under section 81 of the Act can only come into force 40 days after a copy of the by-law is forwarded to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development unless the Minister declares it to be in force before the expiration of that period. Within this period of 40 days, the Minister has the power to disallow any by-law made by a band council. This procedure does not extend to by-laws made pursuant to either section 83 or 85.1 of the Act. In the case of section 83, the powers set out in this section may only be exercised by a band council if the Governor in Council has previously declared the band to have "reached an advanced stage of development" and are subject to the approval of the Minister. As for the powers given by section 85.1 of the Act, their exercise is subject to the prior approval of a majority of the electors of a band.

Your Committee's scrutiny of by-laws made under the Indian Act leads it to doubt that existing procedures, and disallowance in particular, are effective to ensure that those living on reserves are governed by laws "that are fair, reasonable and valid". In their letter of September 30, 1985 the Chairmen of the Committee stated that:

"Based on the experience of the Committee in the three years during which it did scrutinize band council by-laws, we can not but come to the conclusion that they too often disclose a lack of awareness of the principles governing the exercise of delegated legislative powers and that an inordinate number are seriously flawed. While we do not disagree with your Department's declared policy of encouraging band responsibility for self-government, we also believe that native persons living on reserves, no less than other Canadians, have the right to be governed by laws that are fair, reasonable and valid. The protection and enhancement of this right is not only the concern of the courts but should also guide the exercise of the power of disallowance conferred upon you by section 82 of the Indian Act".

The Committee has suggested to the responsible Minister some improvements of the disallowance procedure (See the Chairmen's letter of September 30, 1985, in Appendix 'B'). The Committee has also suggested that the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs might:

"... undertake, in consultation with representatives of the native people, an in-depth examination of the legislative powers of band councils and of the appropriate control mechanisms that should exist with respect to the exercise of these powers. Such a study may possibly identify control mechanisms other than disallowance which will strike the proper balance between the goal of self-government and the protection of the rights and liberties of those subject to laws made by their band councils".

The Joint Committee has since received assurances from the Minister that his officials are developing a by-law disallowance policy and that a review of the jurisdictional scope and administrative treatment of by-laws is being conducted by his Department. The Joint Committee supports these initiatives and hopes that they will lead to the adoption of improved procedures which will reflect a proper balance between the collective right of Indian peoples to self-government and the equally important right of individuals to protection of their rights and liberties as citizens of Canada.

Your Committee also wishes to report to the Houses its concern that subordinate laws made by band councils be adequately publicized and accessible to those affected by them. If publication in the Canada Gazette, as required by section 11 of the Statutory Instruments Act, is not the most effective means of achieving this purpose in the case of by-laws made by band councils, we believe that alternative publicity and access requirements should be developed. If the Statutory Instruments Act is amended as we have recommended, the Indian Act should also be amended to prescribe appropriate publicity and access requirements.

The need for such provisions is all the more important in that the penalties attached to a breach of by-laws are substantial. For example, section 85.1 of the Indian Act provides that a person convicted of contravening certain of the by-laws made under that section is liable to a fine of one thousand dollars or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months or to both. Section 81 also empowers a band council to impose a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding thirty days. The importance of these penalties makes it imperative that those living on reserves not be convicted for violation of a by-law without reasonable notice of the by-law and its content having been given.

Such protection is now guaranteed by section 11 of the Statutory Instruments Act. Section 11 provides that no person shall be convicted of an offence consisting of a contravention of any by-law that was not published in the Canada Gazette unless "it is proved that at the date of the alleged contravention reasonable steps had been taken to bring the purport of the [by-law] to the notice of those persons likely to be affected by it" and the by-law was legally exempted from publication in the Canada Gazette. In the event the Statutory Instruments Act is amended in accordance with your Committee's recommendation, the Indian Act should include a similar requirement.

The Joint Committee recommends that:

1. The Government consider the introduction of legislation to amend either the Statutory Instruments Act or the Indian Act so as to exclude by-laws passed by elected Indian band councils from the application of the Statutory Instruments Act.

2. That the Government also consider amending the Indian Act to provide guarantees of the rights to notice of delegated legislation and to access to such legislation.

3. That the Government further consider amending the Indian Act to guarantee that no person is convicted of a violation of any by-law made under the Act unless it is proved that reasonable steps have been taken to bring the by-law to the notice of those persons likely to be affected by it.

4. That the disallowance policy of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, together with a report of its review of the jurisdictional scope and administrative treatment of by-laws made pursuant to the Indian Act, be tabled in both Houses of Parliament and referred to the appropriate standing committee of each House.

As noted earlier, by-laws made under section 85.1 of the Indian Act are at this time subject to the full requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act (For an example of the by-laws enacted pursuant to section 85.1, see Appendix 'D'). Notwithstanding that these by-laws do not benefit from any exemption, they have not been published in the Canada Gazette. The consequence of the failure to publish these by-laws is that no person may be convicted of a breach of the by-laws. For a person to be convicted of a breach of an unpublished by-law, the by-law must both have been legally exempted from publication, and steps taken to bring it to the notice of those likely to be affected by it. The first of these requirements was not met in the case of some one hundred by-laws made under section 85.1 of the Act. Your Committee is given to understand that convictions have nevertheless been entered for violations of some of these by-laws and penalties imposed. These convictions, in your Committee's view, were unlawful and in direct contravention of the public interest rule enacted by Parliament in section 11 of the Statutory Instruments Act. These illegal convictions also appear to us to contravene certain of the rights guaranteed by our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Therefore, your Committee further recommends that the Government give urgent consideration to the adoption of appropriate remedial measures, including:

5. The grant of a free pardon to any person convicted of a violation of a section 85.1 by-law that was not published, pursuant to section 683 of the Criminal Code.

6. The remission of the fine imposed on any person convicted of a violation of a section 85.1 by-law that was not published, pursuant to section 685 of the Criminal Code.

7. The adoption of remedial measures with respect to any individual that may have been unlawfully imprisoned for contravention of an unpublished by-law made under section 85.1 of the Act.

8. The withdrawal of all pending charges against persons accused of contravening an unpublished by-law made pursuant to section 85.1 of the Act.

9. That the necessary measures be taken to ensure the enforceability of by-laws made under section 85.1 according to the terms decided upon by band councils.

The Joint Committee assures the Houses that while it will not henceforth scrutinize individual instances of subordinate law-making by Indian band councils, it will continue to monitor the overall exercise of legislative powers by band councils, as well as the implementation of its recommendations. Your Committee reserves the right to report further to Parliament on these matters.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) of the House of Commons, the Joint Committee requests the Government to table a comprehensive response to this Report.

APPENDIX A

POWERS OF THE COUNCIL

81. (1) The council of a band may make by-laws not inconsistent with this Act or with any regulation made by the Governor in Council or the Minister, for any or all of the following purposes, namely:

(a) to provide for the health of residents on the reserve and to prevent the spreading of contagious and infectious diseases;

(b) the regulation of traffic;

- (c) the observance of law and order;
- (d) the prevention of disorderly conduct and nuisances;
- (e) the protection against and prevention of trespass by cattle and other domestic animals, the establishment of pounds, the appointment of pound-keepers, the regulation of their duties and the provision for fees and charges for their services;
- (f) the construction and maintenance of water courses, roads, bridges, ditches, fences and other local works;
- (g) the dividing of the reserve or a portion thereof into zones and the prohibition of the construction or maintenance of any class of buildings or the carrying on of any class of business, trade or calling in any such zone;
- (h) the regulation of the construction, repair and use of buildings, whether owned by the band or by individual members of the band;
- (i) the survey and allotment of reserve lands among the members of the band and the establishment of a register of Certificates of Possession and Certificates of Occupation relating to allotments and the setting apart of reserve lands for common use, if authority therefor has been granted under section 60;
- (j) the destruction and control of noxious weeds;
- (k) the regulation of bee-keeping and poultry raising;
- (l) the construction and regulation of the use of public wells, cisterns, reservoirs and other water supplies;
- (m) the control and prohibition of public games, sports, races, athletic contests and other amusements;
- (n) the regulation of the conduct and activities of hawkers, peddlers or others who enter the reserve to buy, sell or otherwise deal in wares or merchandise;
- (o) the preservation, protection and management of fur-bearing animals, fish and other game on the reserve;
- (p) the removal and punishment of persons trespassing upon the reserve or frequenting the reserve for prohibited purposes;
- (p.1) the residence of band members and other persons on the reserve;
- (p.2) to provide for the rights of spouses and children who reside with members of the band on the reserve with respect to any matter in relation to which the council may make by-laws in respect of members of the band;
- (p.3) to authorize the Minister to make payments out of capital or revenue moneys to persons whose names were deleted from the Band List of the band;
- (p.4) to bring subsection 10(3) or 64.1(2) into effect in respect of the band;
- (q) with respect to any matter arising out of or ancillary to the exercise of powers under this section; and
- (r) the imposition on summary conviction of a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not exceeding thirty days, or both, for violation of a by-law made under this section.
- (2) Where any by-law of a band is contravened and a conviction entered, in addition to any other remedy and to any penalty imposed by the by-law, the court in which the conviction has been entered, and any court of competent jurisdiction thereafter, may make an order prohibiting the continuation or repetition of the offence by the person convicted.

(3) Where any by-law of a band passed is contravened, in addition to any other remedy and to any penalty imposed by the by-law, such contravention may be restrained by court action at the instance of the band council.

82. (1) A copy of every by-law made under the authority of section 81 shall be forwarded by mail by the chief or a member of the council of the band to the Minister within four days after it is made.

(2) A by-law made under section 81 comes into force forty days after a copy thereof is forwarded to the Minister pursuant to subsection (1), unless it is disallowed by the Minister within that period, but the Minister may declare the by-law to be in force at any time before the expiration of that period.

83. (1) Without prejudice to the powers conferred by section 81, where the Governor in Council declares that a band has reached an advanced stage of development, the council of the band may, subject to the approval of the Minister, make by-laws for any or all of the following purposes, namely

(a) the raising of money by

(i) the assessment and taxation of interests in land in the reserve of persons lawfully in possession thereof, and

(ii) the licensing of businesses, callings, trades and occupations;

(b) the appropriation and expenditure of moneys of the band to defray band expenses;

(c) the appointment of officials to conduct the business of the council, prescribing their duties and providing for their remuneration out of any moneys raised pursuant to paragraph (a);

(d) the payment of remuneration, in such amount as may be approved by the Minister, to chiefs and councillors, out of any moneys raised pursuant to paragraph (a);

(e) the imposition of a penalty for non-payment of taxes imposed pursuant to this section, recoverable on summary conviction, not exceeding the amount of the tax or the amount remaining unpaid;

(f) the raising of money from band members to support band projects; and

(g) with respect to any matter arising out of or ancillary to the exercise of powers under this section.

(2) No expenditure shall be made out of moneys raised pursuant to paragraph (1)(a) except under the authority of a by-law of the council of the band.

84. Where a tax that is imposed upon an Indian by or under the authority of a by-law made under section 83 is not paid in accordance with the by-law, the Minister may pay the amount owing together with an amount equal to one-half of one per cent thereof out of moneys payable out of the funds of the band to the Indian.

85. The Governor in Council may revoke a declaration made under section 83 whereupon that section no longer applies to the band to which it formerly applied, but any by-law made under the authority of that section and in force at the time the declaration is revoked shall be deemed to continue in force until it is revoked by the Governor in Council.

85.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the council of a band may make by-laws

(a) prohibiting the sale, barter, supply or manufacture of intoxicants on the reserve of the band;

(b) prohibiting any person from being intoxicated on the reserve;

(c) prohibiting any person from having intoxicants in his possession on the reserve; and

(d) providing for exceptions to any of the prohibitions established pursuant to paragraph (b) or (c).

(2) A by-law may not be made under this section unless it is first assented to by a majority of the electors of the band who voted at a special meeting of the band called by the council of the band for the purpose of considering the by-law.

(3) A copy of every by-law made under this section shall be sent by mail to the Minister by the chief or a member of the council of the band within four days after it is made.

(4) Every person who contravenes a by-law made under this section is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction

(a) in the case of a by-law made under paragraph (1)(a), to a fine of not more than one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both; and

(b) in the case of a by-law made under paragraph (1)(b) or (c), to a fine of not more than one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to both.

86. A copy of a by-law made by the council of a band under this Act, if it is certified to be a true copy by the superintendent, is evidence that the by-law was duly made by the council and approved by the Minister, without proof of the signature or official character of the superintendent, and no such by-law is invalid by reason of any defect in form.

APPENDIX B

September 30, 1985

The Honourable David E. Crombie, P.C., M.P.
Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development,
House of Commons,
OTTAWA, Ontario
K1A 0A6

Dear Mr. Crombie:

Re: By-Laws made Pursuant to Sections 81
and 83 of the Indian Act

By-laws made by Indian band councils pursuant to section 81 of the Indian Act have been reviewed by our Committee since 1982. For reasons we will explain later, the present committee decided, on January 22, 1985, that it would not henceforth scrutinize these by-laws or those made pursuant to section 83 of the Act.

Based on the experience of the Committee in the three years during which it did scrutinize band council by-laws, we can not but come to the conclusion that they too often disclose a lack of awareness of the principles governing the exercise of delegated legislative powers and that an inordinate number are seriously flawed. While we do not disagree with your Department's declared policy of encouraging band responsibility for self-government, we also believe that native persons living on reserves, no less than other Canadians, have the right to be governed by laws that are fair, reasonable and valid. The protection and enhancement of this right is not only the concern of the courts but should also guide the exercise of the power of disallowance conferred upon you by section 82 of the Indian Act.

By letter dated March 18, 1983, the Committee was informed that "the power of disallowance has been reserved for cases where the by-law in question is clearly ultra vires, and has not been applied to by-laws that are merely formally deficient, or where the validity of a by-law is at worst uncertain, given a broad construction of band powers under the Act". At another time, this approach was described as "the Department's policy of non-intervention unless absolutely necessary". On the basis of the by-laws which have been reviewed by the Joint Committee, we feel your Department's policy of "non-intervention" has been implemented in such a manner as to come dangerously close to an abdication of your responsibility to ensure the proper administration of the Indian Act. Whatever the defects of this Statute, it is an Act of the Parliament of Canada and until such time as it is replaced or amended by Parliament, it must be administered by the Executive on the same footing as all other Acts of Parliament. Non-interference in band affairs is not a policy that ought to be pursued to a point where it excuses or allows for breaches of the Rule of Law or results in an interpretation of band powers under the Act that makes a mockery of the limits set by Parliament on these powers. A number of the by-laws reviewed by the Committee are, in its judgment, "clearly ultra vires" of the Act. Your failure to disallow these by-laws leads us to the conclusion that your Department's interpretation of the powers conferred by section 81 of the Act is overly liberal and not in keeping with the principles that govern the interpretation of enabling powers. In reaching decision as to whether a particular by-law should be disallowed, consideration ought to be given not only to the sensitivities of elected band council members, but also to the situation of those that will be subject to the by-law. As we said earlier, native persons have a right to be governed by laws that are proper and fair. To suggest that those affected by a by-law that is illegal, discriminatory, or unreasonable, can seek redress in the courts is to ignore the very real limitations of the judicial system as a means of redress in these situations. If anything, the usefulness of judicial redress mechanisms is more limited in native communities than elsewhere. We believe it is in recognition of this that Parliament conferred upon you the power to disallow by-laws made under section 81 of the Act.

As for the disallowance procedure itself, we think it could be improved in a number of ways. The time provided for disallowance should be extended from 40 days to 90 days; in correspondence with your Department, instances have come to light of by-laws that would have been disallowed but were not because they were not received and reviewed in good time. We feel a 90 day disallowance period is more realistic and would give your officers the time necessary to formulate a recommendation for your consideration. Secondly, we recommend that the Act allow for the disallowance of only part of a by-law. At present, the Act requires you to disallow a by-law in its entirety even though only one provision of the by-law may be objectionable. It would be preferable if, in these circumstances, you could disallow only that provision of a by-law that is defective provided it is severable. Finally, we think it would be of benefit if you were under an obligation to submit to the appropriate band council and within a prescribed period of time, detailed reasons for your disallowance of a by-law. We feel these changes, if implemented, would improve the disallowance process and, by making it somewhat more flexible, might help alleviate what we perceive to be a definite reluctance to use disallowance in appropriate cases. More generally, we wonder whether the time has not come for your Department to undertake, in consultation with representatives of the native people, an in-depth examination of the legislative powers of band councils and of the appropriate control mechanisms that should exist with respect to the exercise of these powers. Such a study may possibly identify control mechanisms other than disallowance which will strike the proper balance between the goal of self-government and the protection of the rights and liberties of those subject to laws made by their band councils.

Insofar as the Joint Committee is concerned, we have, as stated earlier, reached the decision that by-laws made pursuant to sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act should not be reviewed by the Committee. In fact, we think such by-laws should not be subject to the Statutory Instruments Act and we recommend that section 2(1)(d) of this Act be amended so as to exclude these by-laws from the definition of "statutory instrument". It is anomalous that subordinate legislation of a local character made by elected representatives of a community should be treated in the same manner as subordinate legislation made by the Governor in Council or by regulation-making authorities that are not directly answerable to the people but to Parliament. Our recommendation is consistent with the situation that prevails in most Provinces that have adopted legislation such as the Statutory Instruments Act and where delegated legislation made by local authorities such as municipal corporations or school boards is excluded from the requirements that govern the regulation-making process. We feel that the position of Indian band councils is at least comparable to that of these local authorities and the delegated legislation made by them should be exempted from the examination, registration and publication requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act, requirements which are of little practical value insofar as band council by-laws are concerned. Until such time as the Statutory Instruments Act is amended, we recommend that band council by-laws be exempted from the examination and registration requirements of the Act by means of an amendment to the Statutory Instruments Regulations made pursuant to section 27(a) of the Act. The amendment to section 2(1)(d) of the Act, excluding by-laws made under sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act from the definition of "statutory instrument", could conveniently be proposed in the next Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Bill.

We would appreciate your views on these matters. The Committee intends to make a report to the Houses setting forth the reasons for this last recommendation and for its decision not to exercise its mandate in relation to band council by-laws. Should you support our recommendation, we would be pleased to so indicate in that report.

We look forward to hearing from you and remain,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Senator:

Thank you for your September 30, 1985 letter concerning by-laws made pursuant to sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act.

I have noted your recommendations and have instructed my officers to investigate your concerns. My officials are currently working on a by-law disallowance policy and as soon as I receive their report, I will be in touch with you and the committee.

Hope all is well. Take care.
Sincerely,

David Crombie

Dear Senator Nurgitz:

I refer to your letter of April 3, 1986 addressed to my predecessor, the Honourable David Crombie, respecting Indian band council by-laws and their review by your committee.

For the reasons given in your letter, I agree with, and support, the recommendation that your committee not scrutinize by-laws made by band councils under sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act, and would add to this the recent authority for by-laws under section 85.1 of the Act.

Furthermore, as you recommend, we are presently seeking an amendment to the Statutory Instruments Regulations, section 7 and paragraph 15(2)(e), to exclude all by-laws passed under sections 81, 83 and 85.1 of the Indian Act from the requirement of examination, registration and publication.

Finally, with respect to the other matters raised in your letter, I am pleased to advise that a review of the jurisdictional scope and the administrative treatment of by-laws is underway which will strike a balance between self-government and the protection of the rights of individual band members from by-laws which might be unfair, unreasonable or otherwise invalid.

Yours sincerely,

Bill McKnight

APPENDIX C

Provincial statutes of general application governing the exercise of regulation-making powers usually exclude by-laws or regulations made by local authorities. See the Regulations Act, R.S.A. 1980, c. R-13 (Alberta); the Regulations Act, R.S.B.C., c. 361.1 (British Columbia); the Regulations Act, R.S.M. 1970, c. R-60 (Manitoba); the Regulations Act, R.S.N.B. 1973, c. R-7 (New Brunswick); the Statutes and Subordinate Legislation Act, S.Nfld. 1977, c. 108 (Newfoundland and Labrador); the Regulations Act, S.N.S. 1973, c. 15 (Nova Scotia); the Regulations Act, R.S.O. 1980, c. 446 (Ontario); the Regulations Act, S.Q. 1986, c. 22 (Québec); the Regulations Act, R.S.S. 1978, c. R-16 (Saskatchewan);

By-laws, regulations and other instruments of delegated legislation made by local authorities are not subject to parliamentary control in the following jurisdictions which have established committees for that purpose: Manitoba, Ontario and Saskatchewan.

APPENDIX D

The By-law (SOR/85-1005) made by the Split Band Council on September 13, 1985, is fairly typical of those enacted pursuant to section 85.1 of the Indian Act. The operative provisions of this by-law are as follows:

"Definitions"

1. In this by-law,
 - (a) "Band" means the Split Lake Band;
 - (b) "Reserve" means the Reserve or all of the reserves set aside from time to time for the use and benefit of the Band, and includes any special reserve;
 - (c) "Band Member" means a member of the Split Lake Indian Band;
 - (d) "Intoxicant" means any intoxicating substance which is capable of human consumption and contains either more than 1% by weight or more than 1% by volume of any alcohol or alcohols;
 - (e) "Residence" means any building which is situated on the Reserve and is actually in use as the residence of any person.

Prohibitions

2. (a) Every person who is found intoxicated or found with any intoxicants in their possession or who keeps or causes intoxicants to be kept in their dwelling-house, building, tent, or place, or supplies an intoxicant to any person on the reserve is guilty of an offence and is liable in a summary conviction to a fine of not more than one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or both a fine and imprisonment.
- (b) Every person who by himself (or) any other person on his behalf;

- (1) sells, barter to any person on the Reserve,
- (2) makes or manufactures intoxicants on a Reserve, is guilty of an offence and is liable in a summary conviction to a fine of not more than one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment.
- (a) which was manufactured for medicinal purposes, is in a container labelled so as to indicate that it is for medicinal purposes only;

Effective Date

4. This bylaw shall come into effect on the 23rd day of September 1985."

Exceptions

3. Notwithstanding anything in this bylaw, no person commits an offence under this bylaw by the possession, or by the supply to another person, of an intoxicant,

Respectfully submitted,

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

FIFTH REPORT

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1988

THURSDAY, March 19, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, March 10, 1987 submits its report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses:

From Agriculture Canada

Mr. Jean-Jacques Noreau, Deputy Minister;
Mr. Terry Pender, Coordinator,
Special Grains Program.

From the Treasury Board:

Mr. William Crandall, Director,
Estimates Division

Supplementary Estimates (A), totalling $700 million is the first supplementary estimate for the 1987-88 fiscal year. The entire amount is being requested as new spending authority by Agriculture Canada to augment the $300 million already received through Supplementary Estimates (B), 1986-87 for its Special Canadian Grains Program (SCPG) announced in the debate following the Speech from the Throne.

When the initial $300 million for this program was granted in December 1986, officials from Agriculture Canada indicated that a request for the remaining $700 million would be presented as part of the Main Estimates for 1987-88 to be dealt with even before the Main Estimates. Treasury Board however, chose to request this $700 million through a special supplementary estimate for 1987-88. They asserted that this was appropriate for the following reason: when Main Estimates are tabled, three-twelfths of the total amount normally is provided to departments by the end of March through an interim appropriations bill. The remaining amount is provided by the end of June after House and Senate committees have reported and the appropriations bill is proclaimed. Because the money for this program is required before the end of June, this normal procedure would not be adequate. The full amount could have been provided through the interim appropriations bill by the end of March, but this would have precluded a review of the request by parliamentary committees. Accordingly, Treasury Board chose to put forward this request as a special supplementary estimate for the 1987-88 fiscal year.

The Committee understood the need to provide the money prior to the end of June, but some Senators felt that it was inappropriate to consider a supplementary estimate before the review of the Main Estimates. It is suggested that the proper procedure would have been to have included the $700 million request in the Main Estimates, with entire amount, less $1, being provided through the interim appropriations bill. In this way the principle of the request would continue to be before Parliament until the Main Estimates are reported and the appropriations bill proclaimed by the end of June.

In the Special Canadian Grains Program Guidebook, the introduction states that the Special Canadian Grains Program (SCGP) was introduced to reduce the effects of American and European export subsidies on Canadian grain and oilseed producers. The program provides $1 billion in supplementary income to those Canadian producers most seriously and directly affected by this trade dispute. Yet the formula used to determine payments to producers takes into consideration only the estimated effects on individual commodity prices brought on by changes in the U.S. Farm Bill. No consideration is given to the specific actions of the European Economic Community. For example, if excess supplies in Europe of specialty crops such as mustard seed, safflower or lentils leads to dumping in the international market and results in falling incomes to Canadian farmers, no action under this program will be taken unless the United States takes prior remedial action. This led Senators to believe that intent of the program risked being thwarted by the specific mechanisms intended to provide relief to Canadian farmers. The Senators recognized, however, that the purpose of the advisory committee was to guard against inadvertent unfairness in the application of the program.

The Committee encouraged the Deputy Minister of Agriculture Canada to consider the plight of specialty crop farmers in Canada and requested that he advise his Minister to amend the program to supplement falling farm incomes brought on by actions not only of the United States but of the European Community as well.

Respectfully submitted,

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

HOUSE OF COMMONS
CANADA

Wednesday, March 18, 1987

ORDERED,—That the Third Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Thursday, February 19, 1987, be referred back to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments for further consideration; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours.

THE ESTIMATES, 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its Sixth Report respecting its examination of the expenditures proposed by supplementary estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 725)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, before I respond, I should like to draw your attention to something that occurred last week with regard to a similar matter, which left me somewhat puzzled. Last week I presented the committee's report on Supplementary Estimates (A). It was a simple report, and, bearing in mind that I am still very new to the Senate, I asked whether it would be appropriate to have the report considered at that time. Guided, as many of us are, by Senator Olson, the response was that it would not be appropriate; whereupon I then asked that it be considered at the next sitting.

Immediately following my rather poor performance, Senator Frith rose in his place and presented two reports, and received permission to have them considered that same day. All that I am trying to suggest is that somewhere along the line I do not think that I am being advised very accurately.

However, notwithstanding that, I ask that the committee's report on Supplementary Estimates (C) be considered at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: My door is always open, senator!

An Hon. Senator: It depends on who you are.

On motion of Senator Kelly, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL SYSTEM AND INSTITUTIONS

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION—FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXTEND PRESENTATION DATE OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. George van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 24, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on November 4, 1986, to examine Canada's participation in the international financial system and in particular the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank Group and the regional development banks, including the debt repayment problems of developing countries, respectfully requests that the date of presenting its final report be extended from 31 March 1987 to no later than 31 May 1987.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE C. VAN ROGGEN
Chairman

Senator Frith: As they say in court, subject to further order.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be adopted now.

By way of quick explanation, the committee hopes to conclude its drafting of the report at a meeting this afternoon, or, at the latest, next week. The reason for the extension is simply the matter of time necessary for translation and publication.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

SENIOR CITIZENS

OBSERVATION OF SPECIAL WEEK IN TRIBUTE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, March 31, 1987, I will move:

That the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada and to individuals and organizations in Canada that, in honour of the senior citizens of this country, the last complete week of August of this year and of each and every year thereafter, be kept and observed throughout Canada as "Senior Citizens' Week" as a way of paying tribute to the diverse contributions being made to Canada by the older citizens of our society.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, March 26, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[Senator van Roggen.]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, March 26, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms or contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:

"9. REGULATIONS

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

(1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.

(2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:

(a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;

(b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;

(c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;

(d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;

(e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;

(f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;

(g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of regulation;" and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Third Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, tabled in the Senate on 10th March, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-242) be referred back to the said Committee for further consideration; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE HONOURABLE WALTER LOCKHART
GORDON, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we proceed to Question Period, I would like to take this opportunity to express my sorrow at the passing of the late Walter Gordon and also to pay tribute to his memory and to the outstanding career of a former colleague and friend. The details of that outstanding career have been well publicized for all of us in the last day or so. Therefore, I will make some observations in the way of a more personal appreciation.

Mr. Gordon's presence became increasingly evident in policy and organization as the election of 1962 approached. He entered Parliament himself in that election and had a brief period of parliamentary seasoning before he entered cabinet in April 1963. It was during this period that I made for the first time the acquaintance of Mr. Gordon. During our period together in the cabinet, our relations were always cordial and, indeed, we worked closely together on a number of public questions, including the comprehensive reforms that were made in the labour field and are to be found in the Canada

Labour Code. Subsequently, when Mr. Gordon retired from public life, I was the frequent recipient of his advice by phone and by letter, particularly when I was Minister of Finance and, later, Secretary of State for External Affairs.

● (1410)

Obviously, I treated his views with the respect owing to a friend, a former colleague, and a wise man. Even though one could not always accept his advice, he was always gracious, and returned to re-assert his views at the first opportunity.

Mr. Walter Gordon's career, to some extent, exemplified the dictum of the late President Kennedy when he said that "all politics is not fair." One illustration in Mr. Gordon's career followed the publication of the Report of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects, which he chaired, when he was accused of describing depopulation as the solution to the economic development problems of the Atlantic region. A reading of that text, of course, does not support that criticism; nevertheless, it received a firm place in the political mythology of Canada. The fact is that Mr. Gordon was always sympathetic to the problems of the Atlantic region and showed unending concern for the workers and those in need of social benefits in the country.

Of course, he was not a populist, either in personal appearance or background, certainly not a populist like Mr. Diefenbaker, and perhaps that is why Mr. Diefenbaker became one of Mr. Gordon's arch critics. While not a populist, Walter Gordon certainly had the zeal of a true reformer for social justice. Around the cabinet table he expressed his views forcefully and with great clarity. One evident characteristic was that he expressed his views with such authority and confidence that he was somewhat surprised when they were not fully and immediately accepted, which did not always happen. Another characteristic of his personal style was that he seldom engaged in detailed explanations and defences when his views were challenged, as they frequently were.

Much has been said about the relationship between Mr. Gordon and the late Prime Minister Pearson. There is no doubt there was a close personal relationship as well as a political relationship, and both have, in subsequent writings, lamented about their drifting apart. My observation, of course, was that as the Prime Minister grew in his job, he became less dependent upon personal advisers, and seemed to exhibit more than slight relief when their influence on his political decisions became less direct.

Not every account one reads about those days is complete. I was about to say, "is correct." What one reads about those days may be correct to a point, but it does not always capture the full colour of the events of those days. One article in today's papers said that Mr. Pearson had persuaded Mr. Gordon to return to the cabinet. That may have happened, honourable senators, but certainly a group of Mr. Gordon's former colleagues, who had very much missed Mr. Gordon's presence in the cabinet, persuaded the Prime Minister to persuade Mr. Gordon to return. Therefore, his return, which was a very short visit, so to speak, was sought by a number of his colleagues who had appreciated the particular role he played in cabinet and in caucus.

But it is always impossible to recapture the old days, and Walter's return never did quite recapture the old days for him or for his colleagues, nor was the Prime Minister ever able to live up to the expectations Walter had upon his return.

We all know what happened to Walter Gordon following his departure from political public life. He continued his active interest in public affairs and commented with enthusiasm and sagacity upon public questions, particularly in the areas of Canada's economic independence and disarmament, for which he developed a real interest in his later life.

I regret Walter Gordon's passing. It seems that we have frequently been obliged to pay tribute to former colleagues and politicians, including the late Don Jamieson and the late Doug Abbott. Now, most recently, we pay tribute to the late Walter Gordon. Honourable senators, he was a force in our Canadian public life for the impact which he had upon our institutions, but I think he will be remembered by his friends particularly for his warm personality and for his gentleness, which he blended skilfully with authority when required.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, there is not one of us here today who is not saddened by the news of the death of Walter Gordon.

He was one of the most potent men of government of our time. We cannot think of the Pearson era without thinking of him—either to credit him or to blame him for policies or innovations that impact upon us to this very day. But his influence on Canadian affairs predated his time with government and continued long after he left it.

This morning I saw his picture and read his obituary in the Globe and Mail, but I noticed, too, that his name was prominent in a full page advertisement calling attention to the Council of Canadians, a group dedicated to the defeat of a free trade agreement with the United States. The great nationalist was active to the very end.

Thirty years ago, when I was editing the old Globe Magazine, we featured a profile of Walter Gordon. While preparing the article, we obtained a colour transparency of the natty and cheerful Mr. Gordon. It was sitting on my viewing machine one afternoon when a colleague from the editorial board dropped in and said to me, "What in hell have you got that for?" I said, "As a matter of fact, it is going to go on the cover of an early issue of the magazine." He then asked, somewhat dumbfounded, "Why?" I replied, "Because we think that the report on Canada's economic prospects is going to be important—big stuff. It is going to have a great impact on Canadian affairs." That is what we believed; that is what we said; and we were right.

● (1420)

Perhaps the best confirmation of that came from the editorial board, which paid a great deal of attention to Walter Gordon after that.

[Senator MacEachen.]

It was Senator Davey who introduced me to Mr. Gordon. As a matter of fact, we referred to the two of them as "Tweedle-Dum and Tweedle-Dee" in matters of political machination.

But our basic differences with Finance Minister Gordon were philosophical. We clung to Senator George Brown's espousal of sovereignty. He worried that Canadians might become tenants in their own country. We both believed—to quote today's advertisement over his name—that "the future of Canada is on the table."

I have rarely known a more genial adversary. While we praised him for criticizing U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War, we laughed at his membership of the Committee for an Independent Canada, and called the outfit "The Company of Old Canadians."

What was not known was the fact that over the years Walter Gordon continued to meet with the editors and with the editorial board of the Globe and Mail. We had long and useful discussions with him when he formed The Canadian Institute for Economic Policy. In these encounters, time was never wasted on what had been said. He was always cheerful and was always looking ahead.

I know, honourable senators, that whatever our persuasion, we will miss the pleasure of his company.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable Senators, one test of political greatness is the ability to change conventional wisdom and to transform political values. Walter Gordon changed Canadian values and, in the process, became the political conscience to a generation of Canadians.

I first met Walter Gordon in 1961. At that time my belief in Pearsonian internationalism collided with Walter Gordon's belief in nationalism. I feared nationalism. I failed to see how one could ignite nationalism for Canada and yet deny the nationalist impulses of Québec, a nationalism, I believed, that would divide rather than unite. Yet, I came to see that Walter Gordon's brand of nationalism was different; it was a self respecting nationalism; a caring nationalism; a humane nationalism; a nationalism that could unite.

Sometimes leaders contribute less than their followers. History has yet to measure fully Walter Gordon's contribution to what we and historians now refer to as "Pearsonian Liberalism." Yet, for me, Walter Gordon was a quintessential Toronto liberal, engaging, enraging, envied, even reviled, but never ignored.

Walter Gordon was a Toronto Liberal, a true believer who, in turn, gave birth to an entire generation of true believers. He was a Toronto Liberal who believed in regional equality—ask Maurice Sauvé or my leader in this place, Allan MacEachen. He was a Toronto Liberal who believed in medicare—ask Mitchell Sharp; a Toronto Liberal who believed in bilingualism—remember, kindly, Senator Maurice Lamontagne, his true friend.

Walter Gordon was a Toronto Liberal who believed in closing the gap between the rich and the poor—ask the Toronto business establishment. He was a Toronto Liberal who believed in enlightened state enterprise—remember the Canada Development Corporation. He was a Toronto Liberal who believed in nationalism—ask Pierre Trudeau; a Toronto Liberal who believed in an independent Canada—ask Mel Hurtig today; and a Toronto Liberal who hid his personal generosity behind a self-deprecating mask—ask his legion of friends.

Walter Gordon was a gentle man who did not go gently into the night. He raged against the coming of the night and, in turn, became a source of light for all Canada. We shall mourn him and we shall never forget him.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I also would like to pay tribute to an old friend, Walter Gordon. Walter had an amazing network of friends across this country, including waves of young Liberals from the last several decades. He not only saw the special character of Canadian nationhood as something worth fighting fiercely for but for him it was a joyous campaign which he carried right to the end. Indeed, his love of country was equalled only by his commitment to peace and disarmament, and he goaded us constantly—indeed, relentlessly—to pursue those objectives. We will miss that commitment; we will miss his warm humour and his special friendship.

I would like to extend my sympathy to his wife, Liz, and his three children.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I would like to associate myself with the remarks that have been made by honourable senators who have preceded me, and to express my sadness at the passing of the Honourable Walter Gordon on March 21, 1987.

I first met Mr. Gordon in 1961 when he announced his candidacy in the federal riding of Davenport in Toronto. I was a member of the executive of that constituency and I served as such throughout the period during which Mr. Gordon represented that constituency from 1962 to 1968. The executive of that constituency had a great deal of affection for Mr. Gordon, because he was an inspiration to us, and we had a great deal of admiration for his policies and for his integrity.

Mr. Gordon had a great influence on my life. In fact, it was he who recommended that I be appointed as special assistant to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the Honourable Guy Favreau, and Mr. Favreau accepted his recommendation. I had the distinction of being the first non-British, non-French Canadian to occupy the position of ministerial aide at the federal level. Mr. Gordon wanted to send a signal to the hundreds of thousands of immigrants who had come to Canada up to that time that there was a role for them to play in the decision-making process in Canada.

In addition to having recommended me for that position, Mr. Gordon continued to keep in touch with his friends, even after he ceased to be a member of Parliament. I would receive an invitation from time to time to meet at his home or in some restaurant. The last time that I had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Gordon was about a year and a half ago, together with his former executive assistant, Professor Brian R. Land, when we had lunch together.

In concluding, honourable senators, I would like to express my sincerest condolences to Mrs. Gordon and the rest of the family.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is with mixed emotions that we must react daily to the saga of Canadian-U.S. relations. We talk free trade and we get countervail. We talk reduction of acid rain, and we hear from a U.S. cabinet minister that it is a Canadian plot in order to sell more electricity in the United States!

• (1430)

Another Shamrock Summit will be held in a relatively few days, and again we are likely to hear what wonderful progress is being made in our harmonious relationship; and then we will probably read the next day of another United States trade action against Canadian industry. Senator Flynn will be pleased to know that I am getting to the question.

Senator Flynn: I thought you were doing pretty well.

Senator Buckwold: The Leader of the Government will know what the question is. It will involve the recent decision of the U.S. International Trade Commission regarding a proposed duty on Canadian potash.

I first asked this question of the leader on February 12 and, in raising the issue, I said that it was a real concern to the industry, particularly to Saskatchewan, which is the major producer of potash; and, as I look back, interestingly enough, his first reaction was:

—the basis of my friend's question is still quite hypothetical. What has happened is that a United States senator from New Mexico has been pressing strongly for action for either anti-dumping duties or countervail against imports of Canadian potash.

He took it very lightly, although later on he was perhaps impressed that maybe there was more to it.

Today there is a headline in the Toronto Star:

Canada loses on initial vote in potash fight

The quotation, which originates from Washington, says:

Canada has lost the first round in a trade dispute over potash with the U.S. International Trade Commission's unanimous vote that imports from Canada are injuring the U.S. industry.

The 5-0 vote yesterday was a preliminary victory for U.S. potash producers from New Mexico. They seek a 43 per cent penalty duty on Canadian potash imports on grounds they are being dumped on the U.S. market at less than fair value.

We are talking now of big business. It is an export industry valued at $270 million, and, in my opinion, it would be really disastrous if we found ourselves being drawn inexorably into that same situation which seems to have prevailed when we were dealing with lumber and some of the other items under discussion today.

It is almost like a Greek tragedy. We seem to watch it occur, and yet we are powerless to interfere with the flow of what in the end results in disaster for a Canadian industry.

Senator Barootes: The Greeks had a word for it.

Senator Buckwold: Yes, I fear that, senator. They had a word for it. My question is: What has the federal government done in order to assist the industry in its fight so far? Is there any plan of defence? Are we again going to hear the platitudes that "we will do all that we can"? Is it going to be the subject of discussion at the forthcoming Shamrock Summit? Can the Leader of the Government enlighten us as to what he sees forthcoming in the nature of Canadian action of a preventive nature to keep this from getting further down the road?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I despair of enlightening the honourable senator, but I may be able to make him somewhat better informed on the subject. Canada already has 80 per cent of the potash market in the United States. American reserves are dwindling, and it is my information that their mining costs are something like twice as high as ours.

In the current protectionist climate in the United States, I suppose the preliminary finding—and it was a preliminary finding—while disappointing is hardly surprising. I wish to emphasize that the anti-dumping investigation and finding are not directed at the policies of the federal or provincial governments. In that respect, as in a number of other respects, the situation is quite different from that which we faced with regard to lumber.

So, it is a preliminary initial determination. No duties have been imposed on imports of potash from Canada, and the honourable senator will know that the next step will be the Commerce Department's preliminary dumping determination, which must be made by July 20.

As for the federal government, we have been working closely with the provinces concerned and with the industry to ensure that the American investigation is carried out in conformity with that country's obligations under the GATT; and we will continue to do so.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, can the Leader of the Government assure the Senate, and through it the potash industry, that it will allow the potash industry to fight this battle to a conclusion and not assist it in the disastrous manner in which it assisted the softwood lumber industry in connection with its problem with the United States?

Senator Murray: With regard to the softwood lumber issue, I have already explained the difference to Senator Buckwold. It appears that I must now explain it to Senator van Roggen. Let me simply say that the action which the federal government took had the support of nine provinces and the workers involved in that industry, and I would have thought that it might have had the support of the honourable senator.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government assist us by telling us what he has in mind when he says that there is nothing in the potash situation that parallels the situation with regard to softwood lumber and actions of provincial governments? What does he have in mind—stumpage versus what? Would the Leader of the Government mind telling us what he had in mind when making his statement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the softwood lumber dispute was directed at alleged provincial government subsidies of that industry. That is not the case, as I understand it, with the potash anti-dumping investigation in the United States.

Senator Sinclair: One of the factors, surely, is what one pays the Crown for the right to mine potash. That is a cost factor which has to be taken into account, just as stumpage is taken into account in determining the cost of the tree at the mill.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the anti-dumping investigation is against companies and, as I understand it, is directed against all nine Canadian potash producers. The basis of the complaint was that there was reasonable cause to suspect or believe that Canadian potash imports were injuring the United States industry. As I have pointed out, we believe that there were insufficient grounds for the initiation of that investigation, and we so said; but the fact of the matter is that Canada now has 80 per cent of the market, that U.S. reserves are dwindling, and, as I have said, public information indicates that their mining costs are twice as high as ours.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, what is bothering me is the bringing in of the softwood lumber issue and saying that it is different, because one of the issues in the softwood lumber dispute was an allegation that it was harmful to the American producers. That was an issue in the softwood lumber findings—which, according to the industry, was badly flawed—of the U.S. government.

Senator Murray: I understand that; but the point that I am trying to convey to the honourable senator and to all of our colleagues is that the investigation in the United States did not concern itself, and did not purport to concern itself, with the policies of the federal or provincial governments.

● (1440)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But, honourable senators, if the proceedings in the United States on anti-dumping are roughly parallel to ours, then the result was more than a preliminary finding of margin of dump. In our system the Department of National Revenue makes the finding of the preliminary dumping margin and then the case goes to the anti-dumping tribunal for a finding as to material injury. That finding of material injury is more advanced than the preliminary finding of dump margin. The Leader of the Government is quite right that it is not final, but it is more advanced than the preliminary finding.

Senator Murray: Well, I beg my honourable friend's pardon. My information is that what we have had is a preliminary injury finding.

Senator Frith: Injury. That is better.

Senator Murray: The next step will be the Commerce Department's preliminary dumping determination, which must be made by July 20.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, the very fact that it is an injury finding is why I was asking the honourable Leader of the Government how it differed from the first finding in the softwood lumber dispute which, again, was a preliminary finding of injury.

Senator Murray: In that respect I suppose the honourable senator is right. My point, again, is that the anti-dumping investigations, which are quasi judicial proceedings, are directed against individual companies and examine the pricing practices of those companies. They do not concern themselves with the policies of governments vis-à-vis those companies.

Senator Frith: They are usually against the importers, I would think.

Hon. Efstathios W. Barootes: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Will he inform the house what might or would have been the effect of this particular situation, which threatens Saskatchewan potash today, if some kind of trade treaty or agreement of the type we are talking about existed at this time, together with some kind of solution which is being appended to help with these "border skirmishes," if I may use that term?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that would depend on the type of agreement that we had, and I would not like to try to reply to a hypothetical question.

I will, however, say in response to the general statements made by Senator Buckwold about countervail and various trade disputes between the United States and Canada that the purpose of the trade negotiations which are now under way is to obtain a trade treaty with the United States which will secure our access to that market into the twenty-first century and will create a satisfactory dispute settlement mechanism between the two countries.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, is the honourable senator suggesting, by chance, that these negotiations in their finality will have the Americans give up countervail?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hope that we will find an adequate dispute settlement mechanism between our two countries on trade matters.

Concerning the use of countervail by either side and other contingency protection measures by either side, that is one of the matters that is being discussed by our negotiators now.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, when we negotiated the reduction of tariffs on wood products through GATT, the United States undertook, under GATT, to lower the tariffs. Our companies improved their production techniques and captured a large part of the American market. The Americans cried foul, but the government did not use its recourse under GATT in order to get redress. Instead, it surrendered.

I have two questions for the Leader of the Government.

Senator Murray: I do not know what you are talking about.

Senator Gigantès: Are we going to see another surrender? To make things easier for him, he said that he had to explain first to Senator van Roggen and then to Senator Buckwold. Would he like to explain to me once more? Maybe he will get it right this time.

Senator Murray: I am sorry; I do not understand the premise of the honourable senator's question.

Senator Gigantès: The premise, sir, is that I do not understand—and I think many of us do not—what you are driving at. We do not understand the logic in what the government is doing. You are telling us—

Senator Murray: In what respect?

Senator Gigantès:—that you are seeking an agreement with the Americans to settle a dispute, yet, when we have agreed with the Americans, through GATT, how to settle a particular dispute, you do not use the avenue that already exists there to deal with the lumber and shingles situations but you let the Americans do anything they like, and you surrender. Are we about to see another surrender in the case of potash?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must confess that I do not know what the honourable senator is talking about, and I do not think that he does either.

Senator Gigantès: Sir, would you be prepared to give me some documentation on what you are doing, and answer some of the questions that I was asking you last week on what the trade negotiations are about and what our aims are in those trade negotiations, instead of keeping them secret?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I found the honourable senator's contention the other day, that an increase in exports does not increase employment and that we should beware of exports, because when we begin to export we are also required to import, especially interesting. I am having these issues analyzed closely with the view of bringing in an adequate response to the honourable senator.

Senator Gigantès: I regret if I misled the honourable Leader of the Government. I did not say that we should try to avoid exports, I was simply saying that exports are not net creators of jobs. That does not mean that we should not export and import, but we should not convey the idea that there will be a net increase in jobs due to increased exports; this has not happened anywhere in any country.

Senator Murray: That is a big statement.

Senator Gigantès: That statement is backed by the OECD statistics; it is backed by the statistics of Canada and of the United States, and of any other country that you care to look at. In economics, exports and imports are an identity and there is nothing you can do about it. What jobs you will make on the one you will lose on the other.

Senator Murray: I accept that if you start to export, pretty soon you might have to import; that is what trade is all about.

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT
MECHANISM—DETERMINATION OF SUBSIDIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to the dispute settlement process.

Is it a fact that one of the main purposes of a dispute settlement mechanism would be to determine the admissibility or non-admissibility of subsidies which might be granted to Canadian industries?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there would have to be some prior definition of the admissibility of various subsidies—whether they are to American or Canadian industries and whether they are from federal or state or provincial governments. I suppose that on the basis of whatever criteria were agreed to by the two countries, yes, a dispute settlement tribunal, if one existed, would be the arbiter under that law of the admissibility of particular subsidies.

● (1450)

Senator MacEachen: I agree with the Leader of the Government that if one is intending in the negotiations to deal with subsidies, one has to define a list of subsidies—some acceptable, some unacceptable, and some in the uncertain zone—which would form the subject of a dispute settlement mechanism. The raising of the subject of a dispute settlement mechanism impels me to ask this question: Is it true that at present the Canadian negotiators have on the table a proposal that would prohibit entirely Canadian subsidies which are targeted directly to particular Canadian industries? For example, is there a proposal from the United States which would eliminate the possibility of targeting subsidies or of targeted industrial assistance, the results of which would be that plants like those of Michelin would otherwise never be located in a province like Nova Scotia?

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator MacEachen: Because that firm received assistance that was tailor-made for it and was not generally available. I am asking whether this is one of the items under negotiation; namely, whether certain forms of assistance, particularly if it is targeted to a particular firm, would be prohibited under our proposed agreement.

Senator Frith: That is a good question.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator Murray: I would think—and I am speaking hypothetically here—that the discussion would be about subsidies on items that are targeted for export. However, the important question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is whether Canada has a proposal to that effect on the table, and my answer is that I would be very surprised if that were the case.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, perhaps Canada did not put the proposal on the table, but is there not a proposal now under discussion that would prohibit targeted subsidies and that would impair or impinge, if I may use that dreadful word, on industrial development policy? I am just asking whether it is a fact that if an agreement were concluded, a certain category of subsidy would be beyond the reach of even the Canadian government. The reason that we have these troubles with the United States and the only reason that the United States would ever agree to limit countervail would be if there were some definition of subsidies. They have alleged in the softwood lumber case the use of subsidies. That is why it is so critical that, as has been said by members of the government, if we had a trade agreement with the United States, we would have a way of dealing with these irritants. It follows from that point of view that the only way to deal with the matter is through the control of subsidies, defining or not defining them, and prohibiting some of them. That is what I am asking the Leader of the Government, and I apologize for what is a very long question. Can he throw any light on the attitude of the government toward the question of subsidies? Is the subject now being discussed? Is there a proposal that some subsidies would be prohibited and, if so, what kinds of subsidies? That is what I am asking.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is no secret that for our part the Canadian government is attempting to obtain secure access to the American market and a dispute settlement mechanism. The honourable senator is suggesting that the quid pro quo for such a measure is that we would have to accept certain, even drastic, controls over subsidies. We do not accept that there is a quid pro quo of that kind involved here.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not asking for the bargaining parameters; I am really asking a factual question. Is this matter on the table, and is it being discussed by the negotiators? Let me tell you in the most polite way that if the United States is to agree to one of the Canadian objectives, namely, a limitation on contingency protection, then it will want something in return.

Senator Murray: Right.

Senator MacEachen: I am suggesting that what it wants in return is a definition of subsidies which would exclude some of them from use by the federal government or a provincial government, and which would have a direct bearing on industrial development in the various regions. The Leader of the Government may say that we are not trading off this particular aspect against another aspect of the subsidies that I mentioned, but surely the United States has asked for consideration of subsidies and has asked for certain ones to be prohibited. I want to know if that is true, and where Canada stands on the matter. That is all.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have detailed information as to what is being discussed at the bargaining table. Again, I would be very surprised if the United States had not raised the matter of subsidies.

Senator Frith: Now you're talking! We are closing in now!

Senator MacEachen: Then, is it true that there is a proposal on the table that divides subsidies into three categories, and that one category is a total prohibition on targeted subsidies? Is that subject being discussed?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I tell my honourable friend that I do not know the answer to that question.

Senator MacEachen: I would be glad to have the answer in due course.

Senator Murray: In due course?

Senator Frith: No, whatever you do, ask for sooner than "due course."

Senator MacEachen: In due course, because it is futile to talk about the question of current trade irritants and to project a solution through a potential trade agreement unless we know what is on the table. If Senator Barootes was serious about his question, what he meant was that we will have a way in the trade treaty, if it comes, of dealing with these irritants, and, if we had a way, we would have a means of dealing with subsidies and countervail. That is what the honourable senator meant, if I may re-interpret his question.

Senator Murray: There are subsidies on both sides of the border.

Senator MacEachen: Of course. And if the same rule were to apply, we have to ask ourselves whether we are ready to swallow the total prohibition of targeted subsidies.

Senator Flynn: I don't know. What about the U.S.?

Senator MacEachen: I cannot ask that of the President of the United States, who, I am sure, would be more generous in his answers than the Leader of the Government.

Senator Frith: As a matter of fact, you can't even ask Senator Flynn, although he is prepared to answer.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT DUTY—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FOR MARITIME PROVINCES

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, could I perhaps focus the attention of the Leader of the Government on one aspect of the problem we have with respect to softwood lumber. He will not be surprised to learn that it is an aspect that affects the maritime provinces. Before the action was taken between the governments of our two nations, representations were made by the industry of the maritime provinces to the industry on the American side that the maritime provinces had not contributed in any sense to the problem that the Americans considered to be vexatious, and the American industry was prepared to exempt totally the industry of the maritime provinces from any ensuing imposition of a tax, or whatever. Then the negotiations took place, and a 15 per cent export duty was agreed upon.

● (1500)

The export of the maritime provinces in this field is some 2 per cent of the national figure. Bearing in mind that 90 per cent of the companies in the maritimes have been exempted, that leaves 10 per cent not exempted.

That brings it down to .2 per cent of the national total, but that .2 per cent represents approximately 100 mills located in my province, in Nova Scotia, and, to a lesser extent, in Prince Edward Island. These mills for the most part are family-operated mills. They are not big nor are they efficient in terms the industry uses in describing efficiency but in most cases they are the sole industry in a village. Many of these small mills are seriously endangered by this export tax. I say that because stumpage is the factor most considered. Stumpage in New Brunswick, for example, runs from $46 to $57 a thousand whereas on the west coast it is as low as $1 a thousand. When one tacks 15 per cent on to the costs of getting raw wood, it is a serious factor.

I apologize for being so long, but I think it is useful for the record.

The industry in Canada has now said, "exempt the maritimes." The Americans were prepared to exempt the maritimes—

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): What is the authority for that? I am not sure the Americans were prepared to exempt the maritimes. The honourable senator has said twice that the American industry was prepared to exempt the maritimes. My understanding is that the companies that have been exempted in the maritimes are those companies that were exempt from the countervail finding and from the complaint. I am not at all sure that the honourable senator is correct in saying that the Americans were prepared to exempt the industry in the maritimes. My understanding is that the Americans were prepared to exempt more than 90 per cent of the industry, but that the countervail action was going to be taken in respect of the others.

Senator McElman: The information I am now relating is information that has been publicly expressed by the industry in the maritimes, and that is that the American industry was prepared to accept that the maritimes should have a total exemption. That has been stated repeatedly by the industry.

I hope there is no question in the leader's mind that the industry in Canada has said, "exempt the maritimes".

That testimony was given to the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce by official representatives of the industry.

I apologize for taking the roundabout route in this question, but the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) has stated on several occasions that perhaps this can be arranged sometime in June, but not before. Is there an impediment that we do not know about preventing an early solution to this so that this can be put in place before many of these small mills go under, as they are likely to do at the end of the spring season of milling?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will undertake to make inquiries of my colleague. Again, my understanding up until this moment has been that the action that has been taken is applicable in the same way and to the same companies as the threatened countervail action would have applied.

Senator McElman: I do not want to belabour it, but the minister, Mr. Merrithew, a minister from my province, as the leader is aware, has stated that he is sympathetic to getting an absolute total exemption for the maritime provinces, that he is working on that.

What is the impediment? Can this be shoved ahead? Can this be a separate negotiation? Since there appears to be sympathy on the Canadian side and on the American side for such a proposition, why can it not be accomplished before there is destruction in the industry?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will make inquiries as to the honourable senator's question and, if I may say, as to the premise to the question.

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

TRADE ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA—SUGGESTED JOINT COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to trade, but not trade with the United States.

I read this morning in the latest edition of Maclean's magazine an article about the Turks and Caicos Islands and the matter of a trade agreement with Canada. That article states that a group of Conservative members of Parliament—it did not indicate the number—has received permission from the Prime Minister's Office to study the potential of a trade agreement between Canada and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

I have always been intrigued by the tourist potential that exists, particularly between the maritime provinces and that part of the world as well as the whole of Canada. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would not agree that it takes more than permission from the Prime Minister's Office to make a study of the intricacies involved in that. Would the leader not favour a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate studying the pros and cons of a trade agreement between the two countries?

The person in the Prime Minister's Office who gave that permission may not be in the Prime Minister's Office today. The article does not state that. This is not political by any stretch of the imagination, but I wonder if the leader would not favour the study of such an association by a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate.

[Senator McElman.]

In this place, as a result of speeches made recently by Senators Argue and Macquarrie, the question of our relationship with those islands has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I would suggest that the honourable senator speak to the leader of his party or to the whip and attempt to become a member of that committee, or, in any case, attend those meetings, as all honourable senators are free to do.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION THE CONSTITUTION

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENT TO IMPLEMENT CONCURRENT JURISDICTION OVER PROVINCIAL RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 19 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding The Constitution—Introduction of Amendment to Implement Concurrent Jurisdiction Over Provincial Resources—Government Action.

Should I read it?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No. (The answer follows:)

A constitutional amendment respecting jurisdiction over the fisheries would require the consent of Parliament and of at least two-thirds of the provincial legislatures representing at least fifty per cent of the population.

That is to say that only an amendment proposal that had been developed in consultation with the provinces and had broad provincial support would be a likely candidate for proclamation. No intergovernmental discussions on such a constitutional amendment are now under way.

The Premiers agreed unanimously at their annual conference in Edmonton last August that bringing Quebec back into the constitutional fold was their top constitutional priority. Premiers also indicated that once the Quebec round had been completed, other questions, such as Senate Reform, the fisheries and entrenched property rights, could be pursued.

RADIO ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Simard, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-3, An Act to amend the Radio Act.—(Honourable senator Thériault).

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, my comments on this bill will be brief, since it contains only one paragraph. I must say I have the impression that where we happen to be, the time of the year and our political vicissitudes seem to affect our perception.

When I was a member of the Legislature of New Brunswick, at the same time as Senator Simard, if the government at the time which in Ottawa was practically always a Liberal government, had dared to suggest that we levy a tax on the people of New Brunswick, I can imagine how shocked Senator Simard would have been and how enthusiastically he would have defended the people of New Brunswick.

However, I understand the situation. In fact, I have on occasion been in the same predicament Senator Simard was in last week and still is today. He has my sympathy.

Honourable senators, I must say I find it unacceptable that for financial reasons, the Government of Canada feels it has to pass on its deficit to the provinces, and especially when it is the province of New Brunswick.

To summarize what Senator Simard told us last week, this measure would bring $10 million into the treasury of this country. He forgot to say that the CRTC is already recovering more than its operating costs and that there is no immediate need to increase taxes or levy new ones on the provinces to balance CRTC spending and revenue.

I want to take this opportunity to say that as a senator from the province of New Brunswick, I formally object to a practice that apparently is becoming increasingly widespread at the federal level and which consists in making people pay directly for the services they receive.

When I was a member of the New Brunswick Legislature, I remember certain measures that gave us the impression the federal Government was moving in this direction, especially in connection with the cost of marine, rail or highway transportation of goods.

Since the Conservative government came to power, we have seen that increasingly this government's philosophy is to make people pay up front for the services they receive from their government.

[English]

As a senator from New Brunswick, I must say that I am totally opposed to a philosophy that looks to charge user fees. If this sort of philosophy were to be accepted totally, then there would really be no need for government. I believe that the government has a duty to provide services and spread the costs of those services equally among the people of the nation. That has been done in the areas of medicare and education. Although the public as a whole has not yet accepted the idea, I believe that communications is one other area in which this should be done.

I want to say briefly that I think the best argument I could use to support my view is that used by the New Brunswick Minister of Transport, Mr. Bob McCready, when he appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on its study of the subject matter of Bill C-3. Mr. McCready—who at one time sat in the same legislative assembly as I did—said, in part:

The proposal by the Department of Communications to charge the provinces for radio licence fees has serious implications for the Province of New Brunswick and its citizens. I do not believe that the implications of the proposed changes have been fully considered.

Honourable senators, I agree with him. I do not believe that the elected representatives of the Atlantic provinces have really examined this problem seriously. If they had, I think we would have seen our colleagues from all parties rise in their places to object to this sort of legislation.

I realize that the amount of money required of the province of New Brunswick is only $250,000. But this government is proposing to collect an extra $10 million in taxes so as to provide services that are already provided to the people of Canada by the CRTC. As was indicated by officials from the department and by the parliamentary secretary to the minister when they appeared before the committee, the CRTC is already collecting more than its costs to operate, yet the government wants an extra $10 million. Of that $10 million, $3 million will come from federal agencies and $7 million will come from the coffers of provincial governments and provincial agencies. In my view, this government has accepted a policy such as this in order to try to keep the cost of its budget down, even if it means imposing more taxes on the provinces and transferring the problem of the deficit—which is really a national responsibility—to the backs of the provinces.

Honourable senators, right now the province of New Brunswick has the second highest rate of taxation in the country, with a sales tax of 11 per cent, and has the second highest income tax in the country, while the average income of the people of that province stands at about 70 per cent of the national average, as it did 20 years ago. In spite of those facts, the federal government has decided to impose $7 million in new taxes because it needs to reduce the deficit. Honourable senators, I think that is wrong. I feel that this has not been taken into consideration by the members of the House of Commons who belong to the party which forms the Government of Canada.

I can tell my colleagues, Senator Simard, Senator Robertson, and my other colleagues from New Brunswick of the same persuasion, that when this comes back for judgment to the people of New Brunswick, their party will pay dearly for it.

• (1520)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have no intention of unduly delaying the progress of this bill. I might say at the outset that I fully endorse the remarks of my colleague Senator Thériault who followed closely—more so that I had the opportunity to do—the proceedings of the Transport Committee when it considered the subject matter of this legislation.

Still I was pleased to take part in the proceedings when New Brunswick Minister McCready appeared before the committee. For all practical purposes, he urged the federal government not to impose user fees in the Province of New Brunswick. Perhaps this is what alerted me, and I too suggest it is an overly strong measure. The other day when I asked Senator Simard whether he would agree to refer the bill to committee for further study, it was because Senator Simard had pointed out that a few western provinces have indicated their opposition to the bill by simply sending a telex to convey their opposition.

After due consideration, I have the impression that nobody would win even if those provinces were to send representatives to appear before the Transport Committee and give us more details concerning their reasons for being opposed to the measure recommended to us.

Rightfully, I think, Senator Simard drew our attention to the fact that certain public utilities companies, like Alberta Government Telephone, Ontario Hydro and probably New Brunswick Hydro, are exempt from fees generally paid by private sector users. I have no quarrel with that. I believe we are often in business to make money, to compete against the private sector. It seems obvious to me that we ought to be subject to the legislative provisions like everybody else. Senator Thériault may not fully endorse what I am saying now, but we do see eye to eye when it comes to imposing fees on the provincial government as a supplier of public services.

Considering that municipal governments will now be exempted from paying user fees, I think we should go one step further and exempt provincial departments that provide a service that is not only useful but often essential to the general public. I know for a fact that in New Brunswick, especially during the summer season, more people using our highways come from outside the province. A large part of New Brunswick's income is derived from the tourist industry. Whenever the Department of Highways uses its radio-telephone to communicate with its units, it is not doing so to make a buck. It is doing this to provide a useful and often essential service, just like the provincial police. Some people say that in New Brunswick, the provincial police is an indirect source of income. In any case, when you travel in New Brunswick, you hardly ever see police cars that are idle. More often than not, the red light on the roof of the car is flashing while the police officer is busy giving warnings or writing speeding tickets.

However one may perceive the role of the provincial police, I am referring generally to what I call a public service, including the Highway Department, ambulances, game wardens and the rest, otherwise the list would get too long. We are talking about essential services that the people of New Brunswick have already paid for through their provincial taxes, even though these are collected by the federal government for the province. So why come back and impose a tax again? In the case of public services, I consider this an indirect tax. Why not set a limit that would exempt all provincial services that provide public and essential services? Why not set a general limit of $100,000 or $150,000, and develop a formula that would recognize what is essentially useful and necessary and beneficial, as the telephone companies, hydro and the rest? I was a little shocked to discover how reluctant the government was to accept this proposal.

Senator Simard informed us that collecting these fees would help pay for the administration of the licence issuing system. It is more than that. It becomes a source of revenue, when we are talking about $10.4 million. We know perfectly well it does not cost $10.4 million to administer an office that issues licences for use of the radio spectrum. It costs a lot less. I would qualify this fee as an indirect tax. There is no other word for it.

Senator Simard also said that the Minister of Finance had agreed to a new formula for equalization payments for the poorest provinces, which would be upgraded and based on the declining income of the people of those provinces. However, the question still is: If the Minister of Finance can upgrade equalization payments, why is he increasing the administrative costs of provincial governments, as Senator Thériault pointed out, costs that represent a particularly heavy burden for less wealthy provinces? Believe me, a dollar in New Brunswick is worth a lot more than a dollar in Quebec or Ontario.

It is a hard-earned dollar for the provincial administration, what with its deficit and its likely sources of revenue.

• (1530)

The sources of revenue in New Brunswick are not unlimited, quite the contrary. It has been some time now since the threshold of common sense was crossed in terms of personal and corporate taxes in New Brunswick. This is why we duly appreciate the equalization payments we receive, through the central government, from the other provinces which are richer than we are.

I would not want to call it a mean gesture, but there is a basic lack of justice in imposing fees on all radio licences, whatever they may be used for.

That is what I wanted to say, honourable senators. I will not let this bill pass with a big smile on my face. On the contrary, this bill makes me sad because, whether we are talking about $1 or $240,000, each additional dollar grabbed from New Brunswick is just one more dollar which the province will have to get from the pockets of the taxpayers who are already overburdened as it is, as Senator Thériault pointed out. I think that if it has not yet been crossed, we will soon reach the threshold of critical pain as far as New Brunswick taxpayers are concerned.

In my opinion, we could have managed without imposing this kind of fees on provincial ministries which provide essential services not only for their citizens but also for the many other Canadians who happen to be visitors.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your attention. It is with some sadness that I will see this bill adopted on second reading today.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must advise the Senate that if Senator Simard speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I thank my colleagues who preceded me. As can usually be expected of all New Brunswick senators, the debates take place in an atmosphere of joviality, with a little bit of teasing of course, but always in a very orderly manner. I thank them for that. I would have been surprised if they had taken a different approach.

Before clarifying a few points and commenting on the remarks we have just heard, perhaps I should now bring honourable senators up to date with respect to a question put to me last week by Senator Gigantès, to whom I have already relayed the information. The question was as follows: What services or salaries would the CBC have to cut if the federal government were to recoup $132,000? This is the amount involved when we are talking about the costs the CBC will have to pay under this bill.

Obviously, I am repeating what I said last week. It is not up to me to advise the CBC to make certain cuts. It will be up to Mr. Juneau and his associates. Last week, I pointed out that $132,000 was a very modest amount, considering the CBC's total budget. I said that this figure was probably closer to $1 billion than the $600 million mentioned by Senator Gigantès.

I checked the CBC's budget for this year. It will be $1.92 billion, of which $848 million will come from the federal government, so we are talking about one hundredth of 1 per cent of the CBC's budget. I don't think the CBC will have to work that hard to make up for its loss of income.

To get back to Senator Thériault, he said that he sympathized with my very delicate position, and that he had perhaps been in an identical situation. I am not interested in Senator Thériault's sympathy but in his support, a support he has often given us in the past.

I don't think my position is that difficult, since with a number of other colleagues, including Senator Robertson, I had an opportunity to speak publicly and privately with Minister Wilson. I think that in a modest way, I was able to make him change his policy somewhat and persuade him to enter into some arrangements that will be very satisfactory, not just for the Government of New Brunswick but also for the people, as a result of decisions announced by his department last week in connection with the equalization program. We were talking of amounts up to $20 million. Of course, there have been other issues with which I am identified.

[English]

I guess you win some and you lose some.

[Translation]

In this case, the amount of $132,000, is not that significant although, as Senator Corbin stated, each dollar taken away from New Brunswick counts and we must take that into account and evaluate the consequences.

But in view of the arguments I raised last week, I must conclude again today that the proposal was inevitable. In view of the government's wish and of its policy to recoup as much as possible the costs directly from the users, I think Minister Wilson found a good compromise.

Senator Thériault stated he was opposed to any system for recovering the cost from the users. He compared the recovery of $10 million to the medicare system. He also stated he was against cost recovery in the area of education. I agree with him as far as those two programs are concerned. I would remind him that it took a Conservative government in New Brunswick to establish medicare. Others had promised it, but we put it in place.

Still, the comparison does not hold in my view. In the case of medicare, the costs for everyone are paid out of general revenues. Similarly, education costs are paid for by the government from a general tax. Those services are offered free to everyone, while in the case of the legislation now before us, I stated that some people paid and others did not. Private enterprise pays user fees, while provincial and federal agencies do not. This is why the comparison with medicare and education is not quite accurate.

The alternative apparently favoured by Senator Thériault would be for those $10 million to be paid out of general revenues. If this were to be done, some of the users would be paying twice. Those who already pay the fees would pay a second time by way of taxes, because their taxes would have to be increased if we are eventually to cover the deficit.

I do not find it pleasant to go about and recover costs from people who did not have to pay until today. But it is my view that in the name of fairness, as I said, this may be the best way to go about it.

Senator Thériault suggested the CRTC had stated that the fees already paid by the private sector covered all the costs. I have no problem taking his word, but I have been informed that the costs incurred by the federal and provincial sectors were not recouped, and indeed it was stated that those costs were quite significant. We could perhaps undertake further research. I hope however that this question mark will not prevent us from adopting this bill on second reading. It is indeed my wish, although some senators do not support it wholeheartedly. Thank you, honourable senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when will the bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Simard, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1986-87 (No. 2)

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, for the second reading of the Bill C-40, An Act to provide borrowing authority.—(Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough)).

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if the honourable senator will allow me to answer two questions asked by Senator

Frith. I have no intention of closing the debate. I simply want to get on the record the answers to two questions asked by Senator Frith when the bill was introduced for second reading a few days ago.

Senator Frith asked the extent to which section 39 had been used since February 18, and to what extent it might be used between now and April 1.

Section 39 was used to cover a $600 million increment at the treasury bill auction on March 5 and will be used again, if necessary, to cover the increment at the auction on March 26, depending on the timing of the passage of Bill C-40. The exact amount has not yet been determined.

Senator Frith understood me to say that there was already unused borrowing authority available amounting to $2 billion. He asked me if that was correct and I replied, "Yes", even though I noted at the time that I did not have my notes because they had been turned over to the Hansard reporters. In any event, the correct answer is no, there is no borrowing authority remaining in 1986-87 from the amount originally granted. The increase in financial requirements announced in the budget and the substantial purchase of foreign exchange thus far this calendar year have necessitated a much larger domestic borrowing program that exhausted all available borrowing authority, including the $2 billion reserve carried forward from 1984-85 in early March.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator Marshall: Are you satisfied?

Senator Frith: Yes. They are the answers to my questions.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, this bill will provide the government with the borrowing authority needed to meet its financial requirements in 1987-88. In addition, it will provide authority to borrow to replace money borrowed in the current year under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

The government has shown no sense of urgency in seeking this new borrowing authority. The bill was introduced in the House of Commons on February 18. It was not until March 9 that the second reading motion was moved in that house. The bill passed the House of Commons on March 12.

There are several aspects of the government's borrowing program with which Senator Doody did not deal when moving second reading in the Senate on March 17; I believe it is worth noting some of them now that we are debating his motion for second reading.

I wish first to draw the attention of honourable senators to the form of the bill, because it is symptomatic of the way in which the government—whether that means the minister or those who run him—are mismanaging their requests to Parliament for borrowing authority. It is not the first time they have demonstrated their underestimation of Parliament's concern that the constitutional rules be followed with regard to borrowing authority.

When Bill C-40 becomes law, it will be called "an Act to provide borrowing authority." The bill is divided into two parts and, lo and behold, the act to provide borrowing authority will contain two acts. Part I is to be cited as the "Borrowing Authority Act, 1986-87 (No. 2)," and Part II is to be a distinct act called the "Borrowing Authority Act, 1987-88."

[Senator Doody.]

An Hon. Senator: No. 1.

Senator Stewart: No, there is no "No. 1." If one looks up recent borrowing authority acts in the indices of the House of Commons, one will never find a Borrowing Authority Act (No. 1). Only "Borrowing Authority Act (No. 2)" is listed. The truth of the matter is that one bill produces one act which is really two acts—and therein lies the fundamental problem which the Department of Finance is creating for itself when it approaches Parliament for borrowing authority. It is tacking two quite distinct requests together.

We know what happened two years ago. If at that time the department had approached Parliament in an orderly way, asking for the borrowing authority that it needed urgently, I believe Parliament would have granted that authority immediately. Similarly, when it came to ask for borrowing authority for the following fiscal year, 1985-86, that borrowing authority would have been granted with all reasonable speed. But, of course, they did not understand how they should proceed. This is a formal point, but I wanted to mention it because it lays the ground for some of the other points which I want to make.

The first of those is raised by the following question: Why did not the government seek the additional borrowing authority needed for 1986-87 earlier? According to both the Honourable Tom Hockin speaking in the other place and Senator Doody speaking here, the amount sought in Part I of the bill is equal to the amount of borrowing authority used to acquire U.S. dollar reserves between April 1, 1986 and January 31, 1987.

● (1550)

In the House of Commons on March 9, 1987, Mr. Hockin said that Part I was for $3.6 billion. He further stated:

This amount is equal to the amount of borrowing authority that has already been used to acquire U.S. dollar reserves during the period from April 1, 1986, to January 31, 1987—

In the next paragraph he says:

The government therefore is seeking to borrow an additional amount of $3.6 billion to replenish the $2 billion reserve and have the operating margin required to react on the exchange market when further interventions become necessary between now and the end of this fiscal year.

Again, he says:

—Thus the Bill provides for borrowing authority to the extent it equals money borrowed under Section 39 in 1986-87 to be carried forward into 1987-88 to roll over the maturing debt issued to build up cash balances in the current fiscal year.

In other words, at the end of January 1987, the government knew that it would have to come to Parliament for $3.6 billion of borrowing authority. It could have done so at that time. However, it decided to rely on section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to get authority for short-term borrowing.

Honourable senators will remember all too well the great debate over Bill C-11 two years ago. The government at that time made the mistake of tacking its request for borrowing authority for 1985-86—for which there was no urgency—on to its request for additional borrowing authority for 1984-85. When the Senate insisted upon the constitutional principle that money should not be made available to the Crown before supply had been requested by the Crown, the Minister of Finance depicted the consequences that would flow from the Senate's action in the most lurid terms. He said that the government would have to resort to borrowing under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

Senator Frith: Horrors!

Senator Stewart: Horrors!

I have here the testimony of the Minister of Finance before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on February 18, 1985, where he was urging the committee to report the bill. He said:

There is cost involved in the delay. We no longer have any unused borrowing authority. Any borrowing currently must be under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. As you know, that is a most unusual occurrence.

Of course, that was in 1985. What was horrendous in 1985 is dull routine two years later.

What has happened? I do not ask Senator Doody to explain this—I am sure it is beyond any senator to explain. The minister, I am sure, will explain what has happened so that a procedure which was a most unusual occurrence in 1985 is something which is done in quite a routine way by 1987. Surely there must be some momentous explanation for that change!

Now I come to my second point, perhaps the most important point I want to put before honourable senators this afternoon. This bill proposes to deviate from the established way in which Parliament gives authority to the Crown to increase the national debt.

Under the present law, ordinarily this is done only when Parliament passes a borrowing authority bill. It can be done, as we know, under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. Under that section, the government can borrow temporarily. The increase in the borrowing authority is valid for only six months. If that increase in borrowing is to remain in place, parliamentary action is required; the government must come to Parliament for parliamentary action.

What is contemplated in the present bill? Clearly, when this bill was drawn, it was intended that the government would use section 39. Senator Doody has told us this afternoon that it used that provision earlier this month and contemplated using it later, toward the end of the month. What is more, if this bill passes, the increase in borrowing authority effected under section 39 will become permanent without any subsequent parliamentary action.

Notice what clause 2(2) of the bill provides. It states:

All borrowing authority conferred by subsection (1) that remains unused and in respect of which no action has been taken by the Governor in Council prior to April 1, 1987 pursuant to section 37 of the Financial Administration Act shall expire on March 31, 1987 to the extent that the unused authority exceeds the amount authorized between February 18, 1987 and April 1, 1987, by the Governor in Council, to be borrowed pursuant to Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

What that means is that that borrowing authority will not lapse; it carries on. If the government were to borrow $3.6 billion under section 39, then the total borrowing authority conferred by Parliament on the Crown would have been increased permanently by $3.6 billion. That is the technique being used here. Parliament is being asked in advance to make permanent the increase in the borrowing authority, which would come about by reason of borrowings under section 39.

This is quite a change in the financial administration of the country. Unless we protest seriously, this government, and subsequent governments, will do this again and again. They will proceed to borrow regularly under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act. They will bring in a bill which will say that when borrowing takes place under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, the borrowing authority authorized by Parliament will increase permanently by the amount of that borrowing.

● (1600)

Senator Frith: It destroys the section.

Senator Stewart: In effect, it wipes out the protection in the Financial Administration Act where the Crown must come back to Parliament after having used its emergency power. In effect, we are saying that the emergency power of section 39 will now become part of the normal financial administration of the country. I wonder whether the minister understands what he has been asked to put before Parliament in these clauses. It is certainly a major change.

The third point which I want to bring to the attention of honourable senators relates to the amount of the authority. I was talking about the technique, the procedure, and now I want to talk for a moment about the amount of the authority. Under Part II of the bill, the government will be given authority to borrow $24.3 billion for the coming fiscal year. Under Part I, the government is being given authority to borrow, as I have said, $3.6 billion. The government insists—and we have had it from Mr. Hockin in the other place and from Senator Doody here—that $3.6 billion is needed because of purchases of U.S. dollars. I do not question the validity of that assertion. However, we must recognize that the government might decide, for one reason or another, that it no longer wishes to hold that amount in U.S. dollars. It might decide that it wants the value of the Canadian dollar to float free or to fall on international money markets. If the government decided to sell U.S. dollars, to the extent that it did so it would free up borrowing authority, and this borrowing authority would then be available to the government for use in its domestic borrowing program. To the extent that the government reduced its foreign reserves it would increase the borrowing authority available to the Crown for its domestic debt operations in 1987-88.

Under Part II, the government is asking, as I said, for $24.3 billion, but this could increase to $27.9 billion if the authority asked for in Part I for the exchange fund account were to become available for domestic debt operations. In effect, we may well be giving the government, by the back door, something like $3.6 billion, which it can use for its domestic debt operations.

Senator Frith: You mean $3 billion in borrowing authority?

Senator Stewart: Yes, $3 billion in borrowing authority. The government could raise $3 billion not by taxation but by borrowing, which it could use for various things such as, I suppose, the grain program, that $700 million program dealt with in Supplementary Estimates (A). I think that there is something less than candour here on the part of somebody. I do not say the minister. So far we have not been told candidly that we are putting an extra $3 billion or so at the disposal of the Crown in the coming fiscal year. The actual amount will depend on the extent to which section 39 is used.

There is another point which is interesting. It is a small point, but I think it is important to note it. Part II of the bill provides for a non-lapsing balance of $3 billion which may be carried forward into fiscal 1988-89. The main borrowing authority bill for fiscal 1986-87 provided for $2 billion that might be carried forward, but, as Senator Doody has said this afternoon, that $2 billion has already been used. It is quite possible that the government will use the whole of the $24.3 billion for fiscal 1987-88, together with whatever money that comes from the flow-over from Part I. However, assuming that they do not use that flow-over, Parliament will have provided the government, speculatively, with $3 billion of non-lapsing borrowing authority with which to start off fiscal 1988-89. How things change! A few years ago the Minister of Finance was pale in the face at the thought that Parliament would vote borrowing authority to the Crown for a fiscal year for which no estimates and no budget had been presented. The government of the day tried to explain; it tried to find a good explanation for this "non-lapsing bridgehead" into the new fiscal year, but it never convinced the present Minister of Finance. Today he is back. He not only acknowledges indirectly that he was wrong in opposing a non-lapsing provision but now he is saying, "$2 billion really isn't enough; I need $3 billion." It would be interesting to know what revelation caused him to change his mind.

Honourable senators, there are other questions which need to be asked and answered. I will not raise those now. I propose to raise them when the bill is before the National Finance Committee. I assume that the government will have good answers to these questions and that, when they are answered, the Senate will look with some favour on the bill. At the moment I think we have to say that the ball is in the government's court, that we are looking for answers to explain what is really a very important bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have very little to add to what I said at the opening of this debate. Senator Stewart is absolutely correct when he says that these questions are too technical and require an expertise that I do not possess. Obviously, it is in the best interests of everybody that we try to get this bill into the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance at the earliest possible moment. I would suggest that since this evening seems to be impossible, perhaps it might be convenient to get the committee to examine this bill in detail tomorrow morning. If that is acceptable to honourable senators, I would be most pleased to move at the appropriate time that this bill be not read the third time now but that it be referred to committee.

• (1610)

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, responding to the proposal that the committee meet at the earliest possible opportunity after this evening, does that mean tomorrow morning?

Senator Doody: It is my hope that the committee might meet tomorrow morning as early as is necessary, and that the minister appear before the committee so that these questions that are of such importance may be aired and answered.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, on the one hand, I have no desire to erect a barrier to the orderly transaction of the government's debt operation. That inclination makes me feel that Senator Doody's suggestion is one that should be considered with favour. On the other hand, Senator Doody has been placed in a very undesirable position. The government knew at the end of January that it was going to need borrowing authority to finish out this year. Well, that is not quite accurate. The government anticipated that it possibly would not be given borrowing authority by the end of the year, and that is why the government wrote the bill as it did, so that the authority it takes under section 39 will automatically be made permanent under clause 2(2) of Part I of the bill.

They dallied. They held up Part I of the bill until the Minister of Finance had brought down his budget on February 18. That was the appropriate action with regard to Part II of the bill; it was not the appropriate action with regard to Part I of the bill. Then, having brought in Part I of the bill late, the government did not move first reading of the bill until March 9.

If, as I implied at the beginning, the people who manage this kind of business knew what they were doing, they would have brought in two bills to eventuate in two acts rather than one bill to eventuate in two acts.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I thought that questions had ceased when Senator Doody had spoken for the last time.

Senator Frith: No.

Senator Stewart: If honourable senators do not want the committee to meet tomorrow morning, if Senator Barootes is deciding this matter, I suppose I have nothing further to say.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, my impression was that Senator Stewart rose to ask a question why it was necessary for the committee to meet tomorrow morning. I think Senator Stewart was getting around to framing his question when Senator Barootes asked for some clarification.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I am of two minds. On the one hand, there is no intention—at least on my part; I do not know about Senator Barootes—to obstruct government business. On the other hand, the government has not displayed any great alacrity in promoting its business in this instance. I think Senator Doody is put in an invidious position when he has to argue for urgency when the government, by all of its actions—although perhaps not its words—has given convincing evidence that it feels no sense of urgency at all.

Perhaps Senator Doody can resolve my problem and we can get on with the business.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I cannot resolve the problem Senator Stewart might have with the business of the government in the other place. That is certainly a question that can be asked of the minister when he appears before the committee. I do know that there is considerable urgency attached to this particular bill at this time, and I think that it would serve us well as a legislative chamber to try to move the legislation through to its conclusion.

I have brought to the attention of honourable senators opposite the intention of the Government of Canada to attempt a bond issue this week. I notice that it has been advertised—

Senator Haidasz: Already!

Senator Doody: There is a press release dated March 19 that says:

Tenders will be received on Thursday, March 26, 1987 for $4,500,000,000 of Government of Canada Treasury Bills to be dated and issued on March 27, 1987. Of this total amount $2,550,000,000 will be 91-day bills, $1,450,000,000 will be 182-day bills and $500,000,000 will be 364-day bills.

Obviously this entire issue cannot be covered with six-month treasury bills. I might say that there is a caveat to the statement. It states:

$3,150,000,000 of outstanding Treasury Bills will mature on March 27, 1987. The net increase in the amount to be issued is contingent upon Royal Assent being given to Bill C-40, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for fiscal 1986/87 and borrowing authority for fiscal 1987/88.

Honourable senators, I am saying that if this bill is not given Royal Assent before the dates indicated, then this particular issue will not go ahead. The issue will have to be withdrawn. Obviously, I will not elaborate on that particular point, but it is one that honourable senators might take up with the minister if they see fit to meet tomorrow morning.

As I said, I would have been prepared and happy to have met last week if we could have referred the bill to committee. However, events transpired in such a way as to make that impossible. It is also impossible for the committee to meet this evening. The only time that I can see that fits the schedule of the department and the schedule of the Senate would be tomorrow morning.

So, I ask honourable senators to consider supporting a motion that this bill be referred to the committee tomorrow morning so that we can get on with passage of the bill and give it Royal Assent in time to accommodate the department's borrowing program.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in accordance with what I said earlier, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on this particular motion to refer the bill to committee, a motion which I understand is debatable, it would be helpful if the committee examined why it is that Parliament is put under the gun in this way by the Department of Finance.

It is clear from statements Senator Stewart has made, and from following the progress of the bill in the House of Commons, that the exhortation by the deputy leader would be unnecessary if the borrowing program and the legislative program of the Department of Finance were properly managed.

Why is it that the officials in the department and the minister did not bring in the bills in a timely way so that they could be passed by the House of Commons and by the Senate without the necessity of being told today by the Deputy Leader of the Government that, unless the Senate moves today and tomorrow, the borrowing program of the government will be disturbed and displaced? That is what we have been told. Today the Globe and Mail carries an advertisement about the borrowing program that is to take place later in the month. The government, the department, the advertisers are all assuming the consent of Parliament and have run this ad taking the view, "What difference does it make? We can count on the Senate buckling under because, if it doesn't, we will accuse the senators of causing additional expense."

• (1620)

Senator Haidasz: That is intimidation! That is not fair!

Senator MacEachen: That is what we heard last time.

Senator Haidasz: That is awful! That is intolerable! C'est intolérable, ça!

Senator MacEachen: I think it's about time we were told why it is that on this occasion the legislative program has been distorted and deformed by the government and by the Department of Finance in such a way that the borrowing program cannot be met.

Senator Stewart has raised problems with certain features of the bill.

Senator Flynn: Which he could have raised last week.

Senator MacEachen: I am raising a totally different problem.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but what he raised today he could have raised last week.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think I should reply to the comment made by Senator Flynn. The bill saw the light of day in the Senate on Tuesday.

Senator Flynn: Yes, sure.

Senator MacEachen: If we had insisted on strict application of the rules of the Senate, the Deputy Leader of the Government could not have moved second reading of the bill until Thursday.

Senator Flynn: We always knew that.

Senator MacEachen: If he had moved second reading of the bill on Thursday, Senator Stewart could not have spoken, because he was attending the consecration of the new Bishop of Antigonish. He is one of the most diligent senators in attendance here.

Senator Flynn: Someone else could have spoken.

Senator MacEachen: Because we waived the rules of the Senate in order to accommodate the government and to permit the deputy leader to make his speech on Tuesday, Senator Flynn now has the unmitigated nerve to criticize us for dilatory tactics. That is quite unacceptable.

Senator Flynn: On a point of order, honourable senators, I did not say, "dilatory tactics." I said that what Senator Stewart said today he could have said last week. That is all I said. Senator MacEachen can describe it the way he wants to, but the way he did describe it is unfair.

Senator MacEachen: When Senator Flynn raised the question of fairness, he might have mentioned that Senator Stewart could not have said what he intended to say last Thursday, because he could not be here for other reasons—

Senator Flynn: He was here last Tuesday.

Senator MacEachen:—and he might have added that this side of the house waived the rules in order to permit the Deputy Leader of the Government to make his statement on Tuesday. That would have been fair. If he had followed that fairness, I would have accepted his views. But to say now what Senator Flynn seems to be saying—that although we waived the rules to let the Deputy Leader of the Government make his speech, Senator Stewart should have jumped up to deliver his speech, we should have sent the bill to committee, received the report of the committee and given the bill Royal Assent by Wednesday, because that is what the government had in mind—is unacceptable to any self-respecting Parliament. If this Parliament is held in little regard, as is sometimes alleged, that is one of the reasons for it.

Senator Flynn: That is unfair.

Senator MacEachen: The Department of Finance is aware that whatever it does by way of mismanagement, it will be sanctioned by Parliament, and by the Senate in particular. When the bill goes to committee, can we find out why there is such mismanagement in the legislative and borrowing program of the government? Is that not a reasonable question? Will the committee report to us and give us some reasonable explanations for this? Will there be a statement made by the minister and his officials indicating that they will correct their ways so that we can pass the bill and accommodate the borrowing program of the government?

If I may make a further point—

Senator Flynn: You can try.

Senator MacEachen:—it is not this chamber that has the responsibility to organize and manage the borrowing program of the government. It is not this chamber that has the responsibility to manage and organize the legislative program of the government. It is the responsibility of the minister and his officials. It is clear to us that something is wrong when we see that we were expected last week to pass the bill in a day or so. Now, because it has been a week since the bill was introduced and only one sitting day since it was legitimately before the house, some complaint is being voiced by Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: No!

Senator MacEachen: Well, too bad.

Senator Flynn: I am merely citing facts.

Senator MacEachen: He has no complaint, then.

Senator Flynn: That does not mean that I am arguing against any senator.

Senator MacEachen: I wish Senator Flynn would stand up like a parliamentarian to address the chamber, instead of addressing it from his seat, in a totally uncivil way most of the time. Let me say that I am fed up with him and fed up with this government, as are most of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I am simply fed up with Senator Flynn. He will not show the respect due to this house by getting up and making a speech. He just natters from his seat.

Senator Flynn: I do not mind saying that what Senator MacEachen has said is merely noise and that what Senator Stewart said today he could have said last week. If it had been the intention of the majority in this chamber to have full discussion of this bill, we could have sat Friday and yesterday and the bill could have gone to committee today. Senator MacEachen knows that very well. He was arguing just for the sake of arguing, as Senator Stewart has done today. That is all very well, but do not take us for a vase that can be filled with water, purely and simply.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, just a moment. If the government wished to call the Senate to sit last Friday and yesterday, it could have done so, and we would have been here.

Senator Flynn: We know that.

Senator Frith: But you act like we are supposed to convene the Senate. Talk about hot air!

Senator MacEachen: This is another illustration of the irresponsibility of Senator Flynn. It is not up to us to organize either the borrowing program or the legislative program, nor is it up to us to decide that the Senate ought to have been sitting last Friday or Monday. If the government had said so, we would have been here.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: Senator Fairbairn can applaud; she is as new to this place as Senator MacEachen. There are customs and usages here, and honourable senators should have understood that. We adjourned on Thursday to come back Tuesday simply to accommodate the members of the Senate. Honourable senators know very well that if there is some real urgency on the part of the opposition, then the opposition can say, "We are going to sit on Friday," or, "We are going to sit on Monday."

Senator Frith: Talk about customs!

Senator Flynn: Senator Frith has been here long enough to know how I behaved when I was Leader of the Opposition. I never came out with the kind of blarney that we heard from the Leader of the Opposition today.

Senator Frith: Let the record show that I do not agree.

Senator Flynn: Yes, let the record show that.

● (1630)

Senator MacEachen: Let the record show that what Senator Flynn has said is that if there is urgency for government business, he expects the opposition to insist that the Senate sits while the government itself neglects its responsibility!

Senator Flynn: That is unfair.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Dental Care Plan) presented in the Senate on 19th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, last week I suggested that you might want to look at the booklet that describes the plan. Although I strongly support the report of the committee, I thought everyone would want to have a look at the booklet. It was our intention to distribute it on either Friday or Monday. However, because the department was moving, it was purely by accident that we were unable to get the copies.

It is my understanding that copies were distributed today, so they should be on your desks by now. Therefore, tomorrow I will ask that we deal with the matter, and we will be asking the Senate to adopt the report. I wanted to remind honourable senators to examine the details of the plan before we vote on the report.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Is there any deadline after which we will not be able to take advantage of this dental plan? It is my understanding that it is retroactive to March 1. Do we have to come to a decision before the end of March?

Senator Frith: Originally we were given a deadline of March 1, but when we passed that date and pointed out that we had not had time to consider it, we were informed that it would be retroactive to March 1, but that they would like a decision as soon as possible. I do not think another deadline has been fixed, although a deadline may be set if we drag our heels too long.

Order stands.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hays, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such bills, subject-matters of bills and estimates as are referred to it.—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have examined the Rules of the Senate and I think that the interpretation given by Senator Frith was valid in the sense that, in principle, a standing committee can be authorized to incur expenses and have its budget approved later. The text is not crystal clear, but it must be interpreted the way Senator Frith suggested the other day. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the adoption of this motion.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO RE-EXAMINE APPENDIX III OF SENATE RULES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May I have leave to revert to notices of motions, please, to present a motion on the subject dealt with by Senator Flynn and myself last week?

Leave having been granted to revert to Notices of Motions:

Senator Frith: As Senator Flynn said, we agree that in this situation it is clear that the motion we have just adopted falls under the first item, standing committees. But during the debate last week it was suggested that we might reconsider the rules in the light of comments. For this reason, although the committee itself can propose or undertake a study without leave of the Senate, I move, notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders be authorized to re-examine Appendix III of the Senate rules entitled: "Procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees".

I must add that I discussed this motion with the committee chairman.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Does Senator Frith intend to speak to the motion?

If there are no comments, I simply would like to say that the committee will of course be delighted to consider this matter once more. Again, I would like to point out that we gave careful consideration to the question and that the final result was not something I made up but the outcome of full discussion by all committee members. Looking at the various stages indicated in Appendix III, it is clear that we made a distinction between the regular business of standing committees of the Senate and the business of special committees. In separating the two, I think we were following the instructions we were given by the Senate. The Senate wished to reserve final authority, but the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration was to be responsible for financial details.

Our problem was that according to some senators, the Senate had given too much power to the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. In fact, the committee, through its acceptance or refusal, could decide whether or not a committee could do its work. That was the problem, but we certainly intend to consider the matter again, if the Senate so requests.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Supplementary Estimates (A) 1987-88) presented in the Senate on March 19, 1987.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we will agree to this motion as long as it is understood that we are not giving anything away on the appropriation bill which will eventually come to us. We will simply agree to the report being adopted.

Senator Doody: It is like a borrowing bill.

Senator Frith: It is nothing of importance.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Kelly: I was considerably intimidated by what had gone before.

Senator Frith: That was part of the idea.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES
AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Pursuant to Order adopted on February 11, 1987, Mr. Michael Belliveau and Mr. Herb Nash were escorted to seats in the Senate Chamber.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity of welcoming Mr. Michael Belliveau, the Acting Executive Secretary of the Maritime Fishermen's Union, and his associate, Mr. Herb Nash, the Secretary-Treasurer of Local 6 of the Cape Breton Local of the Maritime Fishermen's Union. I would like to thank you gentlemen for coming here today, and we look forward to hearing from you.

Senator Frith: Gentlemen, we should perhaps explain that there are a number of committees sitting, which might explain why there are not more senators here in the chamber to hear you. However, they will read the transcript of your statement.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, might I be permitted to say to our witnesses that we welcome them in our midst and we are very pleased that they have accepted our invitation to attend.

Witnesses, you are here not in a court of law and you are not under oath. You are in the Senate of Canada. The Senate has a long-standing tradition of being very factual. Of course, every word, either in English or French, is recorded, and you are at liberty to use either one of the two official languages of our country.

We want you to feel at ease and relaxed. We will give you all the time you need to answer questions properly. You may consult your assistants or companions at any time. We would like you to please keep your preamble brief. In other words, when answering any question, we would ask that you not make a speech. My honourable colleagues have the reputation of being fair and cooperative.

Therefore, honourable senators, I am pleased to call upon Mr. Michael Belliveau, Acting Executive Secretary of the Maritime Fishermen's Union.

Mr. Michael Belliveau, Acting Executive Secretary, Maritime Fishermen's Union: Honourable senators, at the outset I should stress that, as was mentioned in the introduction, I am the Acting Secretary. Our Executive Secretary recently left the organization. He was actually the person who attended the negotiations between Canada and France, and therefore we are working under something of a handicap in making this presentation. However, we welcome the opportunity to do this, and I have a short statement that I will begin with.

Honourable senators, we would like to comment on the recent Fisheries Agreement between Canada and France, both on the substance and on the process. Our union represents fishermen in the three maritime provinces who fish in vessels under 50 feet in length, otherwise known as the inshore fishermen. We have a few members who fish in the disputed zone and many members based in the Gulf and Cape Breton who are directly affected by the agreement. There are many other members of our union, especially in Nova Scotia, who are indirectly affected by what is transpiring.

What has only recently been publicly acknowledged, I believe, and verified by the French is the extent of the overfishing on the cod stock in the 3Ps area. That is the Saint Pierre Bank. The estimated overfishing in 1986 by France's metropolitan fleet was of the order of some 20,000 tonnes. Depending on who measures it and if it is measured by the inshore fishery, in 1986 this represented a landed value of somewhere in the area of $20 million and would have a value of perhaps as much as $60 million to the fishing industry as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, you are probably aware that the Canadian resource management regime for the groundfish sector develops one Atlantic management plan each year. It is a complicated plan involving all Atlantic provinces and all fleets. Invariably, decisions regarding quotas and fishing effort in one area and one fleet impact on the whole fishery. For example, last year, when inshore fishermen along the northeast coast of Newfoundland precipitated a re-evaluation of offshore effort on the northern cod stocks and gained some concessions that restricted, amongst others, Nova Scotia's National Sea vessels, the impact was felt amongst Nova Scotia's inshore fleet, who were looking for more favourable quota splits between inshore and offshore on the Scotian shelf. Naturally, if National Sea's fleet is to be contained with respect to northern cod stocks, they are less likely to agree to concessions that we might ask for off the Nova Scotia coast.

Likewise, French overfishing in 3Ps not only impacts on local vessels in Newfoundland, it also creates a kind of a "black hole" in the management plan and provokes more fishing effort on other stocks. It also brings into serious question the credibility of the plan itself.

Let me cite an example that my colleague, Herb Nash, who is on my left, who is a fisherman from Glace Bay, knows very well. In 1984 one of our fishermen based in Port Morien, which is very close to Glace Bay and Cape Breton, ventured across the Laurentian Channel in a 40-foot longliner, some 125 miles out into the Atlantic to fish the Saint Pierre Bank. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans apprehended him in the 3Ps zone, which is the disputed zone, and escorted him back to North Sydney where his catch was confiscated and charges were laid against him for fishing illegally. The reason was that in 1982 the Department of Fisheries and Oceans had arbitrarily restricted Nova Scotia-based inshore vessels from fishing in "Newfoundland waters" under their new sector management regime. As a union, we had requested not the total removal of this sector management policy but a limited reciprocal agreement whereby Cape Breton-based inshore longline vessels would be permitted to fish 500 tonnes in the 3Ps zone and similar types of vessels from Newfoundland would have the same arrangement in the so-called Cape Breton areas.

However, the DFO would have nothing to do with this request at that time, and, in essence, we feel that they turned their guns on the inshore fishermen; on small boat fishermen like the one we are talking about and others who were in our organization.

You can appreciate the feelings of this particular fisherman and others, especially in Cape Breton, when it was revealed that our Canadian negotiators had signed a deal in January of this year with the French that overlooks the overfishing question in the same 3Ps waters and, in fact, sweetens the French quota pot for a nebulous commitment to continue to negotiate.

Senator Frith: This incident you describe, did that happen to Mr. Nash himself?

Mr. Belliveau: It did not happen to Mr. Nash himself. It happened to one of his fishing colleagues. It might have happened to him, and he may wish to comment on that.

As you might surmise, we view the unfettered French fishing presence in 3Ps for the next four years as the nub of the question and the essence of the scandal, if you wish. While we appreciate the energy that Mr. Peckford has put into protesting against the deal, we question why he has made the northern cod stock his focus. We cannot help but conclude that it has more to do with his long-standing interest in gaining provincial jurisdiction in the fishery.

● (1650)

Our union has long since accepted the concept of quota management as an appropriate general strategy for fish stocks that can be depleted. In our estimation, the level of overfishing by the French, if it is allowed for another four years, will result in removals that otherwise would be available to the Canadian industry at some point—removals that represent, according to our calculations, a loss to our industry of perhaps as much as a quarter of a billion dollars.

Further, we are very conscious of the effects which overfishing in one zone has on others. Our Cape Breton fishermen, for example, virtually felt invaded by midshore vessels from south-west Nova Scotia last year as a result of a resource depletion in that area on Georges Bank. So we know the problems that are caused when there is overfishing in one zone. The fleets move. The same would apply to our herring fishery in the Gulf.

In short, the deal appears to us to be so contrary to the interests of the Atlantic fishery that we conclude that the French were playing very hard ball, indeed, enough for the Canadian government to sacrifice fishing interests to some other as yet unspecified objective—unspecified at least to us. It is generally understood that in December the Department of External Affairs gained ascendancy over the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in the negotiations, which resulted first in the exclusion of the industry negotiators for key sessions, and then to the secret deal without consultation, where concessions were given that went beyond any industry bottom line.

What precisely compelled External Affairs to short-circuit the consultation process and undermine the Department of Fisheries' own relations with the industry? Some have suggested or implied—including, I believe, the Premier of Nova Scotia—that the French were sabre rattling. We are not privy to exactly what compelled External Affairs, but we are not convinced that fishing interests have been served in this instance. We do note that very little has been questioned publicly as to why Canada felt the necessity to consummate a hasty deal with the French government, a government which itself, as we understand it, is on fairly shaky grounds with its own public, which many people see as having a life expectancy of perhaps one year, and which has already overextended itself in international disputes in foreign lands.

Mr. Chairman, in December the French requested to meet with the Canadian negotiators, without the four industry delegates being present. The industry had agreed on the understanding that nothing would be negotiated. As you know, the rest is history. This is not the first time that we have seen the consultation process undermined, but it simply fuels fishermen's suspicions regarding consultation. Again, it leaves us wondering what exactly consultation is being used for. Do we spend our time and energies to be sounding boards for the decision-makers to gauge what they can get away with? Without proper consultation, the DFO's ability to manage the fishery is not possible; yet each time there is a breach of trust—and we can cite many examples, if you wish—the process is weakened and the likelihood of conflict, anarchy and authoritarianism within the management of the fishery increases.

The Maritime Fishermen's Union acknowledges that the negotiations with the French regarding fisheries' rights and boundaries is complicated. We accept that going to international arbitration is necessary. We also believe that Saint Pierre and Miquelon fishermen have a right to fish. But we cannot accept a flagrant disregard of scientific advice, and we can only accept the idea of French allocations outside of the disputed zone if they are directly tied to a fishing plan within the zone.

Our fishermen in the Sydney Bight area have experienced declining catches and quotas since 1983, while the French metropolitan fleet continued to fish in the same area at the same or increasing levels since 1980. We looked forward to the disappearance of that fleet in 1986 when the 15-year aspect of the agreement expired, but, instead, we find that another 1,300 tonnes in 4VN have been allocated to the French when our own Canadian fishermen, inshore and midshore, have experienced a serious reduction in quotas this year in that same area—I believe 25 per cent. This particular allocation was not an industry recommendation. It was put on the table, as we understand it, when the industry was excluded from the meetings. It is not central to the bad deal but it is representative, and it seriously weakens our confidence in the negotiations still to come. As a matter of fact, I believe they are negotiating today.

Again, in closing, we wish to say that the central issue is present French overfishing in 3Ps—pure and simple. That is how we see the issue. We do not know the exact means which Canada has available to bring France's metropolitan fleet into line, but we think that getting the French to submit to international arbitration some years down the road is hollow indeed if there is not a binding fishing agreement in the interim that is based on scientific advice.

Finally, we wish to draw your attention to the Canadian management regime itself. We have been told on several occasions that in relation to Georges Bank, and now in relation to Saint Pierre Bank, we as inshore fishermen have to restrain ourselves, even if the other side does not do so, because it will strengthen our Canadian case. Generally, we agree with this policy, but in our estimation it has also been used to smooth over inequalities within the Canadian management regime itself. We feel that inshore fishermen in the groundfish sector are losing ground to midshore and offshore fishing power within Canada.

For example, our small-boat fishermen are denied access to Newfoundland waters, which historically they have relied on, and our small-boat fishermen have been forced yearly into quota transfers to the midshore while being subject to local closures, which have resulted from stronger fleets catching the quota before our vessels have a reasonable crack at it. That is a mouthful, but you may or may not know what I am referring to.

Senator Frith: Would you repeat that?

Mr. Belliveau: I said that, for example, our small-boat fishermen are denied access to Newfoundland waters, which historically they have relied on—that is what they call that sector management policy—and our small-boat fishermen have been forced yearly into quota transfers to the midshore fleet while being subject to local closures, which have resulted from the stronger fleets catching the quota before our vessels have a reasonable crack at it. In other words, off Cape Breton waters last year, Mr. Nash, among others, was closed out from fishing in a particular zone in September, after having had only three months' fishing in those waters, because another stronger midshore fleet from another part of the maritimes had moved in and caught the quota ahead of the local-based boats.

We have proposed strategies that would counter this trend, but we have been constantly blocked at the highest levels of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which actually have used our "delicate international negotiations" as an argument against some of our strategies. We can elaborate on that if you wish. For now we simply want to emphasize that what is good for the industry as a whole is not holus-bolus good for inshore fishermen if the end result is a further erosion of our own fishing access by more powerful Canadian interests.

So, while we agree that Canadian restraint in disputed zones is a desirable strategy, it can also be used to block legitimate demands of the smaller fishermen. We are aware of some countries—for example, Norway—which are efficiently sophisticated in their management plans to protect their inshore fleets, acknowledging that the same controls and containment required for the more powerful fleets need not always apply to the inshore fleet. We should not be made to feel that somehow we are damaging Canadian interests if we request different management strategies from those applied to the offshore. I have no idea of how to gauge your interest in this subject, but I will explain this last point.

● (1700)

We feel that there are certain smaller-boat fishermen—as in the example that I just talked about—off Cape Breton, who were closed out of the fishery early last year, who fish using a method that is selective or conservationist. It is what we call longlining and is a passive form of fishing. You cannot really get on to a stock of fish and deplete it. The fish have a certain choice in the matter as well when you are longlining with bait. We feel that there is no point in imposing a quota system on small inshore boats. We feel that it is not working. If you look closely at the inshore fleet on Cape Breton, it has not caught its quotas each year and has been forced to transfer its quotas to other fleets. These fleets end up catching and depleting the stocks that Cape Breton fishermen normally depend on. If you put them on what we call an allowance system, they fish against the target, but they do not close it out. If they go over one year, they will go under it the next.

The point here is that we have heard it said from the Department of Fisheries that "You cannot exempt inshore fishermen from this kind of quota management system because it will weaken our case internationally." We want it put on record that we do not believe that it should or will weaken any case internationally, and that there are other countries in the world who do have different management strategies for their inshore and offshore fleet.

That, generally, is what we wanted to say this afternoon.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, is it your wish to hear the two witnesses at the same time, and then you can question the two of them?

Senator Frith: Yes. If Mr. Nash has something to add, let us hear it.

The Chairman: Mr. Nash, Secretary Treasurer of Local 6 of Cape Breton, you have the floor.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, before you go to Mr. Nash, I wish to ask something. When the witness referred to the inshore fishermen being cut off at the Cape Breton zone, could he signify that zone from the map that he has there?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes.

Senator Marshall: Is that 4Vn?

Mr. Belliveau: The Laurentian Channel runs from Cape Breton and Newfoundland. Once you are on the Newfoundland side of that 4Vn line, you are in a different sector. The only inshore based vessels in Nova Scotia that can fish there are those that had historical rights at the time that that policy was introduced.

We were talking about this before we came here. We think that there are only five inshore vessels—vessels under 65 feet—that actually qualify to fish in Newfoundland waters.

Senator Graham: When was that policy introduced?

Mr. Belliveau: In 1982.

Senator Graham: Thank you.

The Chairman: Mr. Nash, do you wish to make your statement now? The questions will be started by the Leader of the Opposition, Senator MacEachen, P.C., followed by Senator Marshall, Senator Frith, and any others who signal that they want to be heard.

Mr. Herb Nash, Secretary Treasurer Local 6, Cape Breton Local of the Maritime Fishermens' Union: All I have to say concerning the Saint Pierre Bank is that if it will take four more years, and if the French overfish it for four more years, I know what it will do to the fishing industry. I have been at it some twenty years myself. When you look at Nova Scotia, you can see what is going on. There is too much effort in it in Nova Scotia and the catches are going down. Last year we had 69 longliners come into 4Vs on Banquereau Bank to catch fish where we were. We started fishing on June 1, because we could not get out there before that, and by September 1 we ran out of our quota. We asked for a couple of thousand more tonnes, but we could not get it. They told us that we could have 3,300 pounds a day instead of 20,000 pounds a week, so we had to give up fishing. We cannot go out that far. We are going out 150 and 170 miles in a 40-foot boat, and it does not pay for only 3,300 pounds, whereas 20,000 pounds would have given us some kind of small pay. The same thing will happen on the Saint Pierre Bank. When we go down to the Saint Pierre Bank, we are not allowed down there. We get chased out of there for catching 25,000 or 30,000 pounds, yet the French metropolitan fleet is talking about catching 20,000 tonnes next year. It does not make sense that the government is letting them get away with it.

The Chairman: Is that the end of your statement?

Mr. Nash: As far as I am concerned, yes.

Senator Frith: That is pretty good.

The Chairman: The Leader of the Opposition will start the questioning, followed by Senator Marshall, Senator Frith, and any other senator who signals that he would like to take part in asking questions.

Senator MacEachen: I would like to thank the two witnesses for their appearance. Maybe it is true to say that Mr. Nash is the first bona fide fisherman who ever appeared within the walls of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I do not know of any active fisherman who was ever a member of the Senate, but maybe that has happened without my knowledge. There were probably some Newfoundland senators like Senator Marshall.

Quite apart from that point, we are pleased to have representatives of the inshore fishermen to discuss with us the implications of the recent agreement entered into by Canada with France on boundaries and quotas.

As you know, we have been hearing evidence from the Minister of Fisheries, Premier Peckford, and others. We believe that the evidence will be more broad based in hearing from actual fishermen.

Mr. Belliveau: you said that your disappointment with the agreement stems basically from the fact that there is no provision in the agreement to deal with overfishing and to negotiate the overfishing in the upcoming negotiations. It is true that the French authorities may voluntarily consent to negotiate overfishing, but I think it most unlikely that they will give that voluntary consent since there is no obligation in the agreement, as I see it, to conduct those negotiations. To that extent, I personally agree with your disappointment that that has not been achieved.

However, it would be helpful to me if you could elaborate a bit more on how and why the overfishing in 3Ps has such an impact on the inshore fishermen in Cape Breton.

• (1710)

Mr. Nash: The fish in 3Ps comes over to 4Vn, to 4Vs and 4W, and there is overfishing. Let us forget about 3Ps and think about what the French have done to 4Vn and 4T, or what the government is doing to 4Vn. The French set a quota of 7,000 tonnes in 4Vn, which was supposed to expire last year. All of a sudden they were given 1,250 tonnes for this year, so a total of 5,750 tonnes was taken away. Instead of that allocation going to 4Vn, it went up to 4T, to the Gulf. Here we are, we were able to get rid of the French taking some of the fish out of 4Vn, when we thought we were going to be rid of them altogether for this year. They still ended up with 1,250 tonnes, and we will not get the fish that is left because it is going up to the Gulf, to the Gulf-based vessels. We in Cape Breton are on the losing end of the stick.

Senator MacEachen: But that arises from the decisions of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in allocating those fish. The fact is that the French take has been reduced to 1,250 tonnes. The gain has not been enjoyed by the Cape Breton fishermen but has gone to the Gulf vessels, as you say. Do you object to that allocation of 1,250 tonnes in 4Vn? Will it not be picked up by the Saint Pierre fleet?

Mr. Belliveau: We object only on the basis that we mentioned earlier, that there is no provision to control overfishing in 3Ps. We are not against allocations going to either Saint Pierre and Miquelon, or to the metropolitan French fleet in Canadian waters, if it is tied to something.

Senator Frith: Like what?

Mr. Belliveau: We are not clear that it is tied to constraints within 3Ps. To answer your question from another angle, first, we have a direct feeling about this question, because we spent many long hours trying to get the sector management plans altered sufficiently that there would be some flexibility in them for some of the Cape Breton fishermen whom we represent so that they could fish off the Saint Pierre Bank in the summertime, which is the only time of year that they can get over there in the size of vessels that they have. There has never been any movement by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on this question. At the same time, it is revealed that while we are trying to get this 500 tonnes for our fishermen, the French fleet is fishing some 20,000 to 25,000 tonnes over its so-called allocation. We feel very strongly about this.

Perhaps the larger answer to your question is that we are finding more and more in any meeting on quota allocations we go to, whether it be in Northeast New Brunswick, Southwest Nova Scotia, Pictou County, Cheticamp, or wherever, we are really dealing with one Atlantic fishery or one Atlantic management plan. This is one of the things we were trying to get across in our presentation. As you know, the fleets are quite well organized under large companies. The two most powerful fleets in Atlantic Canada are organized under two companies. Then there is the midshore fleet, which has a wide range of mobility.

Senator Frith: Is the midshore fleet all Canadian?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes. Port au Choix, Newfoundland, has a set of midshore draggers. They cannot go down and fish the Saint Pierre Bank, partly because of this question with the French. As an example off the top of my head, if they were allowed to go down to fish there, we would not have to contend with them the way we do in Sidney Bight and off the shores of Cheticamp in the spring and fall. So, there would be no opportunity for our vessels to catch their quotas, or even, for all we know, to expand fleets to develop the inshore and midshore fisheries in Cape Breton. We now find that wherever there is a "black hole" in terms of overfishing, or wherever there is an injustice in terms of allocation, it impacts right through the whole system.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask about your view on the boundary settlement? We had evidence in this committee that the French, when allocated quotas in Canadian waters, respect those quotas. I read out a quotation, when Premier Peckford was here, from Mr. Applebaum, who testified before this committee, to the effect that in Canadian waters the French respected the allocations. In other words, there was no overfishing. Presumably it led the government to say, "Well, the best way we can control the overfishing is to get a settlement to the boundary question and, hopefully, bring a vast area of the 3Ps under Canadian jurisdiction and, accordingly, into Canadian waters." Do you regard that as a desirable objective?

Mr. Belliveau: I think that it is a desirable objective, but, at the same time, there must be a fisheries treaty. In that way, even if the French fleet is contained within a much smaller zone, they cannot put their fleets on to the stocks. Our scientists have advised us that that stock is 3Ps stock, and that at any given time of any given year it may well be completely within the new French delineated boundaries. If there is no fisheries agreement as distinct from a boundaries agreement now or in the future, you will potentially still have the overfishing problem.

We face a problem of a similar nature on a smaller scale in the Georges Bank right now. It is not a major problem, because we have the lucrative stocks which are not mobile. However, there is a problem with regard to haddock, cod and pollock, which move across the line and have no respect for boundaries. So, even if we got a good ruling on the boundary question, we could have a similar problem. If it were left to France and there was no agreement on how much it could fish within its own zone, we would have the same problem we have now on the Georges Bank, the nose of the Bank, Flemish Cap, and so on, this huge overfishing question by other countries.

Senator MacEachen: Do you see any way whereby even Canada would agree to permit another country to decide what it ought to fish in Canadian waters? That is what you are implying, that ultimately there will be an arbitration and a portion of 3Ps will be French and, therefore, they will continue to overfish in "French waters" and impair the whole stock.

Mr. Belliveau: It is my understanding that what you describe is a conceivable projection. I do not know. This is something that you could ask of the negotiators who, I am sure, have a better understanding of the boundaries. I have not been briefed on what Canada's position is on the boundary dispute or on what the French position is and what is expected if the matter is referred to international arbitration.

• (1720)

I would like to answer the other part of the question, if I could.

I think it was the deputy minister, Dr. Meyboom, who was quoted in the press on this matter of the French respecting quotas in the other zones.

Senator MacEachen: In Canadian waters.

Mr. Belliveau: I am not in a position to comment on that, but my colleague might be able to comment on the fact that the French fleet was in the area of Sydney Bight, which is in the 4Vn area. That area is a key winter nursery for the entire cod stocks in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. If a weak management plan is in effect in 4Vn during the winter, that effectively impacts on virtually all of the fishermen of the southern Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Apparently the French fleet has always respected the quota, but there are fishermen who do not feel that way.

Perhaps Mr. Nash would like to comment on that, since he is one of those fishermen.

Mr. Nash: It was not too bad this winter, but every winter before this past one has been. I can take you down to Cape Breton and you can ask every dragger fisherman around my territory what they think of the French. They will tell you that they use stern drags and are plowing the bottom right out of it and are loading up and leaving. They have been overfishing over the past few years. This year there was not too much trouble with that, I suppose because they were down in 3Ps, I do not know. I am not the only one saying that; everyone down there will tell you that they have overfished, and I am a fisherman telling you that, not someone sitting in an office.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to welcome Mr. Belliveau and Mr. Nash. I am in a peculiar position in that I was born in Glace Bay and moved to Newfoundland.

Mr. Belliveau, I am interested in your comments on the inshore fishery and how those fishermen are suffering. The same situation occurs in Newfoundland.

Did I hear you say that Nova Scotia was not represented at the various negotiation meetings?

Mr. Belliveau: No.

Senator Marshall: So, at the March 4 and March 5 meeting in London—

Mr. Belliveau: Yes, we did say in the presentation that the French had requested meetings with the Canadian negotiators that excluded the industry representatives. For example, Max Short from the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union sits on the negotiating team on behalf of the industry, and he was excluded.

Senator Marshall: So, when they say that representatives of the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Nova Scotia participated as members of the Canadian delegation, it was restricted, and no one represented the industry or the unions.

Mr. Belliveau: I was briefed on this particular question by our former executive secretary, who was close to the negotiations for some years. I was given to understand that the industry representatives, four of them, were asked to not take part in certain meetings either in late November or early December. They agreed only on the condition that nothing new was to be negotiated. Obviously, nothing new was to be put on the table.

That meeting took place, and a second meeting took place in January, again without the industry people being involved or consulted. That is what my reference was to.

Senator Marshall: What about the meeting scheduled to start in Ottawa earlier today? I noticed that the Seafood Producers' Association of Nova Scotia are mentioned and that the representative is Mr. Roger Sterling. Is your organization going to be represented at that meeting?

Mr. Belliveau: Our organization is not represented this year because we agreed that Gaston Gaudin of PPA of northeastern New Brunswick would be a suitable replacement for Gilles Thériault, who has stepped down. We feel that between Mr. Gaudin and Mr. Short the fishermen's point of view will be aired.

Senator Marshall: Mr. Belliveau, you bring a new perspective to this in that you highlight the difficulties your fishermen are having in the zones that you have referred to.

National Sea Products has factory freezer trawlers, and FPI will soon have them. Are the inshore fishermen affected by the capacity of those factory freezer trawlers?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes. We believe strongly that they do affect us.

Senator Marshall: Where do they fish, on the nose and tail of the bank, or farther north?

Mr. Belliveau: That is a good question; that is exactly what I was trying to get at earlier. Most of our fishermen will not see the factory freezer trawler fishing in other waters, but from what we understand that introduced new fishing power into the Atlantic fleet.

If you look closely at the licences National Sea Products retired in order to get that one licence for the factory freezer trawler, and if you look at the quotas that were allocated to that factory freezer trawler, you will see that much of that quota was not being caught by National Sea Products. It was company quota but it was not being caught.

The sum and total effect in our estimation is that the fishing capacity in Atlantic Canada has been increased, when every study and every sector of the industry agreed and admitted that there is more capacity than required right now to catch the quotas available under our Canadian management system. So, yes, we feel the impact, but we do not see the boat every day.

Senator Marshall: Premier Buchanan said on January 28 that the deal giving extra fish to France would cost the people of his province $200 million. Can you break that down for us?

Mr. Belliveau: You made reference to the negotiations that are going on today at External Affairs. We had a brief discussion with a couple of people involved in those negotiations and they told us that it does not look like they will get too far today, but that there will be another meeting in September, and there was no big problem. We feel there is going to be a problem if this overfishing continues for four more years. The landed value of 20,000 tonnes of codfish now, if caught by an inshore fisherman—at 70 cents a pound—comes to over $20 million. If one multiplies that in terms of processing, and so forth—I think they use 2.5 to 1—the premier is right on. I agree that $200 million over four years is perhaps understating just the overfishing question.

Senator Marshall: Would you agree that the action taken recently by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to close the harbours and to fine the French for overfishing and threatening them is a move in the right direction?

Has not the government, in its implementation of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, taken the right steps to stop this overfishing by not only the French but many other foreign nations who are sneaking in and out of the 200-mile limit? That fish comes into our zones and is being caught by our midshore and inshore fishermen.

● (1730)

Premier Peckford seemed to be satisfied that the steps taken now by the minister are steps in the right direction. What is your view?

Mr. Nash: Where I come from, the fishermen like the idea, and I like the idea as long as the weather is not bad. If the weather is reasonable, I agree that they should be kept out of the harbours. If there is a danger that lives may be lost due to bad weather, I would not agree with it. I would not want to endanger 40 or 50 men just because there is a policy to keep the boats out of the harbours.

Senator Marshall: Therefore, the announcement of the closure of the French quota in 3Ps and the instruction to the federal fisheries vessels to apply full enforcement against any French vessel fishing in the Burgeo Bank—which would probably extend to zone 4Vn, which you are more concerned about—are steps in the right direction that might correct the situation, which is in such vital danger at the present time. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Belliveau: My understanding of the terms relating to the Burgeo Bank is that they are more symbolic in nature. Symbolically, I think it is the right action to take. I think that the government should continue to search for means by which to make the French government sit up and take notice. If I may venture to speculate on French politics, I sometimes question what the Canadian negotiators are really doing in terms of assessing the French situation. I am not so sure that a little toughness on Canada's part will result in any kind of retaliation on the part of the French.

Senator Marshall: It is tougher than it was, but we do not want to start a war.

Mr. Belliveau: We are not proposing that at all.

I was in France when the negotiations took place. I was not aware that this deal was being negotiated, but I was in the country at the time. I really question why we would be striking such a deal with this particular French government, anyway. I do not think it will be around long.

Senator Frith: As a landlubber and for the record, I wish to have some more detail as to whom you represent. Many of my colleagues are quite aware of this, but some of us are not. You represent the Maritime Fishermen's Union, do you not, and its members are the owners of those vessels less than 50 feet long?

Mr. Belliveau: Our membership includes the owners of the vessels as well as the crew members.

Senator Frith: Most of the vessels are independently owned, are they?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes, all of them are.

Senator Frith: Would any one fisherman own three or four vessels?

Mr. Belliveau: No, not as a rule.

Senator Frith: The members of your union, then, are the individual fishermen and their crews. How many in number are the crews?

Mr. Belliveau: That will vary with the fishery. I believe that there are usually five crew members in Mr. Nash's fishery.

Mr. Nash: Yes, five or sometimes six.

Senator Frith: There is no employer-employee relationship in terms of membership in the union, then. The owners of the boats and the crew members are all members of the MFU?

Mr. Nash: Yes.

Senator Frith: Is your membership made up of fishermen from the Cape Breton region, for the most part, or do they hail from all over Newfoundland?

Mr. Belliveau: The Newfoundland inshore fishermen are all members of the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union, but we are strictly an inshore fishermen's union, the only one of its kind in Canada. Our membership does not include offshore crew members or plant workers within our organization, nor does it have an affiliation with another union.

Senator Frith: But you are somewhat territorial in the sense that you have made reference to quotas in the Gulf and so on. In looking at this map, I see that in the wintertime, for the most part, you fish inshore in that bay in 4Vn.

Mr. Belliveau: Briefly, looking at the map of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, the concentration of our membership fishes along the Northumberland or Gulf shore in New Brunswick, off Pictou and Antigonish up to the Strait of Canso in the Northumberland Strait, in the Sydney Bight area of Cape Breton, and southwest Nova Scotia, where our membership is expanding and developing.

Senator Frith: That would include the inshore of the 4T zone, would it?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes. That would include 4Vs and 4W.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I think it might be helpful to senators if the witnesses would tell us which species are fished by the members of their unions.

Mr. Belliveau: We represent, in theory, all inshore fishermen, although they are not all members of our union. We cover all of the different species. I would say that about 80 per cent of our membership holds, first, a lobster licence, then a groundfish and a herring licence. It does happen, however, that specific fleets in Cape Breton and southwest Nova Scotia are completely dependent on the cod stocks or cod and haddock, if you wish. They do not really hold other licences. They are inshore fishermen dependent basically upon the one species.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): The discussion so far relating to the agreement with France relates particularly to the groundfish portion of your union's activity, then.

Mr. Belliveau: Yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Is a heavy tonnage of groundfish caught by your union members off what you call the Acadian shore?

Mr. Belliveau: No, the Acadian shore actually does not see a lot of groundfish any more.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Is there a lot of groundfish caught in the Northumberland Strait?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes, but the midshore fleet does have a good deal of mobility throughout the Gulf and catches a lot of its fish off Cape Breton. In the Gulf itself, our membership, for the most part, is not dependent upon groundfish. I cannot think of any member who would hold only a groundfish licence in the Gulf. Once we move into the 4Vn zone or Sydney Bight and along the Atlantic coast, our members do hold only groundfish licences.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Therefore, the groundfish aspect of the fisheries is much more important to those of your members in the Sydney Bight and the 4Vn zones than to those within the Gulf.

Mr. Belliveau: Yes.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): You emphasized in your presentation what you called the flow-through. If the French are overfishing in the 3Ps zone, this affects, for example, National Sea's catch there. They then look to the 4Vn zone, do they not?

Mr. Belliveau: The 4Vn, 4W, 4X and 5Y, or the entire Nova Scotian shelf, is under terrific pressure from the inshore, midshore and offshore fleets. Every year at every meeting we are in constant conflict or negotiation with the other fleets to obtain transfers to the inshore, or the midshore is attempting to get transfer from the offshore. Therefore, if, for example, National Sea is cut back in its quota off Newfoundland, be it in northern cod stocks or on the Grand Banks, obviously they are less disposed to talk to us about transferring any quota on the Scotian shelf.

● (1740)

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): You mentioned the impact of the National Sea freezer trawler licence a little while ago. From what you have said in respect of that vessel, can I generalize a conclusion that you think that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is more susceptible to the requests and arguments of the large fish companies than it is to the interests of the inshore fishermen?

Mr. Belliveau: On a daily level, we feel that. However, I would say that you must make a distinction between inshore and midshore. When I say, "midshore," I am talking about vessels in the 60 to 65 feet range, usually draggers. Those boats have a lot of fishing power. They also have a lot of political power.

Senator Frith: They have a lot of political drag!

Mr. Belliveau: That is right, and they are almost invariably tied into mid-size plants. There is no question that those operations in Nova Scotia carry a lot of clout.

On the question of the factory freezer trawler, I think that most of the fishermen in the industry were dead set against it, but it still came in. It does seem to be a little questionable when you think in terms of right now we are faced with the situation where, in January, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans decided to take 250 licences away from us in southwest Nova Scotia because they say that there is over-capacity. From our perspective, we found that most galling in light of the fact that approximately two years ago they approved the introduction of a factory freezer trawler that catches 15,000 tonnes of fish per year, which is the equivalent, really, of the stocks available to the midshore and inshore fleet in southwest Nova Scotia.

Senator Frith: Do you mean combined?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes. Senator, I am talking about 15,000 tonnes, and I have to think for a moment. Perhaps I am getting carried away with my own hyperbole. I think actually the inshore and midshore fleet in southwest Nova Scotia would have approximately 30,000 to 40,000 tonnes available to it in total. However, in contrast, we are talking about one boat.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): In order that I can understand the kind of fishermen you represent, do you have any members in a place such as Bickerton or Port Bickerton in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Belliveau: Senator, that is on the eastern shore. To begin with, it is difficult to get from Halifax to Canso, and the answer to your question is no. We did have a local operating out of Canso in the 1970s. We did not have the resources to continue to service that local at the level of membership that was there.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you. I think that covers that point.

I have another type of question, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Belliveau, you mentioned earlier that the spawning in 4Vn was very important to the maintenance of the groundfish stocks in the Gulf so that there is migration from 4Vn into 4R, S&T. Is there any migration across from the Saint Pierre Bank—in other words from zone 3Ps—into 4Vn, the Sydney Bight?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes. Mr. Nash is telling me that the fishermen say there is. The scientists say that there is not; that they are a discrete stock and that there is no significant crossing of the Laurentian Channel. However, all the old fishermen say that there is.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): My own inclination over the years has been to trust the fishermen, but you have to have some evidence. You do not know these fish personally. How does a fishermen form the opinion that the fish actually move from 3Ps into 4Vn?

Mr. Nash: From 3Ps where I fish—where I am not supposed to fish—to 4Vn is only about 45 or 50 miles, and, according to the fishermen who have fished around home for 35, 40, 45 years, they fished down there up until the last ten years or so, and they claim the fish did cross. I am inclined to believe them, because I know the fish come right to the border of 3Ps and they come right to the border of 4Vn.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): You mean they do not respect that line on the map?

Mr. Nash: They don't even see it!

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): That, I think, is a pretty important answer. If the French are to be allowed to grossly overfish in 3Ps, your answer is very important for all fishermen in 4Vn, and, indeed, for fishermen in the Gulf, because there will be a flow-through. If you are depleting stock in 3Ps, which has an effect upon the stock in 4Vn and, subsequently, by reason of spawning, on the Gulf stock, then that overfishing around Saint Pierre and Miquelon affects groundfishermen along the Acadian shore and that mid-size fleet right out into the Gulf, does it not? That is the implication.

Mr. Belliveau: Mr. Chairman, I accept what Mr. Nash has said, and, as a fishermen's organization, we find it most productive and fruitful to listen to the fishermen in terms of what is going on out there. However, I think it might be stretching it a little bit to say that the intense overfishing in 3Ps will actually affect the winter stock in 4Vn, which is actually the summer Gulf stock. I would not want to hinge our case on that alone, but I still would refer back to what I have already said. Anyone who is close to the consultation meetings and who is struggling for quota in the Atlantic fishery knows that it is now one fishery, and if there is a problem with quota in one area, it impacts immediately on our ability to achieve quota in another.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Therefore, it is not so much the migration of the fish; it is the migration of the fishermen.

Mr. Belliveau: Exactly.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, under rule 12, I must inform the Senate that it is now 6 o'clock. Do you wish me to ignore the clock?

Senator Frith: I move that we ignore the clock and continue our deliberations.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Graham: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I do want to add words of welcome to both witnesses, and especially to Mr. Nash, if I may, because he comes from my home area.

The late Don Jamieson used to tell how the Newfoundland fishermen differentiated Newfoundland fish from Cape Breton fish. He said the Newfoundlanders knew when they caught Cape Breton fish because they were the ones with the big mouths, and they threw them back. Conversely, the Cape Breton fishermen told the same stories about Newfoundland.

• (1800)

Mr. Belliveau: you said that industry representatives had been excluded from certain important meetings. Was it at those meetings to which you have alluded that the major decisions were taken?

Mr. Belliveau: That is my understanding, that there was a first meeting in France. You people probably know better than I. The first meeting led to the second meeting, which is where they struck the deal.

Senator Graham: How did you learn of the deal? Was it through the media, or were you told officially?

Mr. Belliveau: That's where we learned it.

Senator Graham: Were the industry representatives given any reason for their exclusion from the meetings?

Mr. Belliveau: Some of the other industry reps may have. As I say, I am relying in this particular case on Gilles Thériault, who was our executive director in part of all of this, and he never had any explanation—although we have heard some things as explanations which I do not really wish to repeat.

Senator Graham: You mentioned that the value of the 20,000 tonnes overfishing by the French fleet was of the order of $20 million. What period of time does that cover?

Mr. Belliveau: We have to be careful, because if the company catches that fish, they put one price on it, which is not the landed value but is what they pay their fishermen as crewmen. But if an inshore fisherman landed that fish in 1986—Herb, for example—he would average roughly 50 cents per pound for cod. So if the French overfished last year by 20,000 to 25,000 tonnes, then they took $20 million worth of Canadian fish, which, so far as we are concerned, did not belong to them.

Senator Graham: How many tonnes would you estimate they overfished in, say, 1985?

Mr. Belliveau: That is what I said, 29,000 tonnes.

Senator Graham: And in 1984?

Mr. Belliveau: Again, from 20,000 tonnes to 25,000 tonnes. As a matter of fact, an official told us that today. Herb says it was 23,000 tonnes.

Senator Graham: You mentioned that catches for Cape Breton fishermen had declined since 1983. Am I correct that you also said that the catch for the French fleet had not declined?

Mr. Belliveau: Yes.

Senator Graham: Has it remained steady?

Mr. Belliveau: The actual allocations to the French fleet remained steady through that period, whereas the allocations to our own fleets were decreasing.

Senator Graham: Mr. Nash, how much would you normally catch during the run of the year?

Mr. Nash: Anywhere from 400,000 pounds to 500,000 pounds.

Senator MacEachen: At 50 cents per pound.

Senator Graham: That, for instance, is for 1986?

Mr. Nash: For 1985, 1986 and 1984.

Senator Graham: How does that compare, for instance, with 1983-84?

Mr. Nash: Nineteen eighty-three and down were not that good. Nineteen eighty-one was good. There was a lot of fish around home in 4VN. Nineteen eighty-two and 1983 were bad. In 1984 it started getting better. We started going farther from home. Nineteen eighty-five and 1986 were good because we had a 40-foot boat. At one time they would go 30 miles and talk about how far they went, and now they go 170 miles or 177 miles from home.

Senator Graham: In the past year the value of the catch obviously has gone up.

Mr. Nash: Yes.

Senator Graham: By what percentage?

Mr. Nash: Last spring when we started off, it was 25 cents for scrod, 35 cents for market and 45 cents for steak. When we quit in December, it was 53 cents for scrod, 63 cents for market and 68 cents for steak.

Senator Graham: What is the outlook for 1987-88?

Mr. Nash: I was told yesterday by one of the people from National Sea that it will be at least 77 cents per pound, that it will not go under 70 cents; and someone else told me that he was planning on paying up to $1, that he was going to stay at least 10 cents or 15 cents above the rest of them. He was going to try to get some boats, and he was prepared to pay $1 per pound for the inshore boats for codfish.

The Chairman: Mr. Belliveau and Mr. Nash, on behalf of honourable senators, I would like to thank you for your presentation here today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, that the chairman report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Canada-France Fisheries and Territorial Boundaries Agreement had been referred, reports having made some progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the committee have leave to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, that the committee have leave to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

SIXTH REPORT

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1987

TUESDAY, March 24, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, were referred, in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 12, 1987 submits its report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses:

From the Treasury Board:

Mr. Gérard Veilleux, Secretary;

Mr. A.J. Darling, Deputy Secretary, Program Branch.

The appendix to this report contains some material prepared by Treasury Board at the request of the Committee; this material is classified under the following five section headings:

1. Highlights of Supplementary Estimates (C), 1986-87;
2. Summary of Expenditure Framework and Estimates for 1986-87;
3. Statutory Items Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1986-87;
4. Summary of Voted Items (greater than $5 million) Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1986-87; and
5. List of One-dollar Votes Included in Supplementary Estimates (C), 1986-87 and Additional Explanations.

Supplementary Estimates (C), totalling $596.3 million is the third and final supplementary estimate for the 1986-87 year. Of the total $596.3 million, $13.8 million is required for statutory purposes, while the remaining $582.6 million is being requested as new spending authority. The twenty-six items which make up the $13.8 million for statutory programs are briefly described in section 3 of the appendix. Regarding the items to be voted, each of those having a value of greater than $5 million is described in section 4. The Committee was informed that there are thirty-five one-dollar votes included in these estimates; eighteen authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another; nine authorize the payment of grants; and eight are miscellaneous votes.

These supplementary estimates bring the total estimates for the year to $108.7 billion, of which $108.5 is for budgetary purposes. Viewed another way, these Estimates bring the total statutory estimates for the year to $69.7 billion or 69.2% of the total and the voted estimates to $38.9 billion, or 35.8%. A summary of the main and supplementary estimates for 1985-86 showing cumulative totals is shown in section 2 of the appendix.

The remainder of this report focuses on aspects of the way in which these estimates are displayed and reported.

The Form of the Estimates

The Committee focused upon a problem generic with all vote transfers that are requested in any supplementary estimates. When vote transfers are requested, the amounts are not shown in the summary tables at the beginning of the estimates nor in the tables for each department. The amounts are brought to light only by examining the detailed wording describing the vote transfer and in the explanation of requirements for each departmental request. Two examples will illustrate the problem.

Indian Affairs and Northern Development (p.64) seeks authority to transfer $1.092 million from vote 35 to vote 40c and to provide an additional $547 thousand to vote 40c. In total, if this request is authorized, vote 40c will increase by $1.639 million, yet the tables illustrating the request show an increase of only $547 thousand, the amount of new money required.

National Health and Welfare (p.98) seeks authority to transfer $250 thousand from vote 80 to vote 75c. If this request is authorized, vote 75c will increase from $3.384 million to $3.634 million, yet the request by Health and Welfare shows an increase of one dollar only.

While the Committee is aware that vote transfers do not increase the expenditures of a department as a whole, they do reflect a divergence in the way money has been appropriated to that department. The Committee concluded that information on vote transfers, showing the amount of increase and decrease for each vote should be displayed clearly in the table for each department and in the summary tables. Treasury Board officials concurred that the form of the supplementary estimates was not conducive to an easy understanding of vote transfers, and indicated that they will be reviewing the entire way these estimates are presented. The Committee indicated its interest in this and requested that any proposed format changes be sent to its members before they were finalized; this was agreed to by Treasury Board officials.

General Accounting Practices of the Government of Canada

Senators asked a number of questions regarding general accounting principles of the Government of Canada. These ranged from the definition of non-budgetary expenditures and the consistency in allocating expenditures as budgetary or non-budgetary items, to whether accounts receivables should be included as part of the assets of the Government of Canada. While no specific conclusions were reached, the Committee reminded Treasury Board officials of its long-standing interest in this area and the possibility of it conducting a more detailed examination of the matter at a later date.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM M. KELLY,
Deputy Chairman.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT

Section 1

HIGHLIGHTS OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C)
1986-87

These Supplementary Estimates, totalling $596.3 million are the Final Supplementary Estimates for 1986-87. They bring to $108.5 billion the total budgetary Estimates tabled for 1986-87. This is well within the expenditure framework for 1986-87 confirmed by the Minister of Finance in the February 1987 Budget.

Major items included in these Estimates are:

- $275 million statutory expenditures for public debt charges, bringing total Estimates of public debt payments for 1986-87 to $27,275 million.
- $202.7 million for reimbursement to the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1985-86 barley, wheat and oats pool accounts deficits.
- $111 million statutory payments for the forecast operating deficit of Canada Post.
- $103 million for Canada Post for capital and deferred charges.
- $99 million for Canada Post for special purposes.
- $53 million increase in CEIC for statutory contributions to the UI Account.
- $65 million reduction in forecast of statutory expenditures for Guaranteed Income Supplement.
- $113 million reduction in forecast of statutory expenditures for Spouse's Allowance.
- $116 million reduction in forecast of statutory expenditures for post-secondary education payments.
- $184 million reduction in forecast of statutory expenditures for health insurance contributions.

We have provided detailed listings of all statutory items included in these Estimates as well as major (greater than $5M) voted items.

There are three additional points that might be of interest:

- a) These Supplementary Estimates contain, thirty-five one dollar Votes of which twenty-seven are entirely financial in nature in that they seek authority to transfer funds between Votes or to establish or adjust grants within a Vote. In each of these cases an explanation of the new requirement and an indication of the source of funds is provided in the Supplementary Estimates. The remaining Votes seek specific authorities, consistent with enabling legislation and the Speaker's rulings on legislating in the Estimates. A detailed listing of these Votes along with additional explanations has been provided to members.
- b) Supplementary Estimates have traditionally informed Parliament of the person-year requirements associated with the items included. These Supplementary Estimates contain 43 person-years for 1986-87. The Treasury Board will ensure that person-years included in Supplementary Estimates throughout this year are offset by a lapse of person-year authorities elsewhere in government. These additional person-years will not jeopardize the government's plans to reduce the size of the public service. As previously announced, the total Treasury Board controlled person-years as set out each year in the Main Estimates were reduced by approximately two percent in 1986-87, and 1.3 percent in 1987-88 (as identified in the 1987-88 Main Estimates). Further reductions of slightly less than one percent a year for the next three years will bring the total person-year reductions to 15,000 by 1990-91.
- c) Committee members have expressed interest in items in Supplementary Estimates which materially differ from information provided in the Part III of the Estimates. In past appearances we have identified such items for the Committee. Our review of Supplementary Estimates (C) 1986-87 revealed no such situations.

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES INCLUDED IN
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES(C), 1986-87

The 35 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These One Dollar Votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix I, according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an "*".

- A. Eighteen votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- B. Nine votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- C. Eight miscellaneous votes (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II):
 - one to report actual excess operating and income charges over revenues for the Canada Post Corporation;
 - two to write-off certain debts due Her Majesty in Right of Canada - Employment and Immigration and Public Works;
 - one to extend authority to make payments and issue guarantees - External Affairs;
 - one seeking authority to increase the issue of notes to development fund accounts of International Financial Institutions - Canadian International Development Agency;
 - three Votes in the Department of Transport of which one rescinds the statutory authority of the Stores Revolving Fund, one vote amends a previous Appropriation Act to increase a guarantee in respect of loans by Ridley Terminals Inc. and one extends an existing vote which authorizes the acquisition of a Canadian National Dockyard.

Part II

Additional Explanation

Category C - Miscellaneous $1.00 Votes:

Consumer and Corporate Affairs - Canada Post Corporation

Vote 12c—To report the actual excess of operating and income charges over revenues for the Canada Post Corporation in the amount of $184,284,000 for the 12 month period ending March 31, 1986 in accordance with subsection 29(3) of the Canada Post Corporation Act.

Explanation—In accordance with section 29(1) of the Canada Post Corporation Act (CPC Act), the Minister of Finance during 1985-86 placed at the disposal of the Corporation sufficient monies to enable the Corporation to meet all its operating and income charges during the year. Section 29(3) of the CPC Act requires that the amount placed at the disposal of the Corporation is to be included, in the form of a deficit appropriation item, in the next Estimates laid before Parliament thereafter. Since the amount placed at the disposal of the Corporation has already been reported as expenditures of the government in the 1985-86 fiscal year, it cannot be voted as an expenditure in 1986-87. Accordingly, in order to conform with the intent of the Act, a $1 voted item has been included in these Supplementaries to inform Parliament of the actual amount of the Corporation's deficit for 1985-86. The actual 1986-87 deficit will be reported as a $1 item in 1987-88 Supplementary Estimates, again in accordance with Section 29(3) of the Act.

Employment and Immigration

Vote 21c—Pursuant to Section 18 of the Financial Administration Act to write off from the Accounts of Canada 14 debts due and claims by Her Majesty in right of Canada amounting in the aggregate to $37,482.96 in regards to transportation loans issued under Section 121 of the Immigration Act.

Explanation—This involved the deletion of uncollectable loans due the Crown in the amount of $37,482.96 which are to be recorded in the government's Statement of Assets and Liabilities of Canada. This action is consistent with the government's new debt write-off regulations approved March 1985 (SOR/85-257). Funds are being transferred, via a $1 Vote transfer, from EIC Vote 10, Employment and Insurance to this new Vote 21c.

External Affairs

Vote L18c—To extend the authority to make payments and issue guarantees under the International Natural Rubber Agreement.

Explanation—The original vote wording for payments under the International Natural Rubber Agreement (INRA), which was approved in Appropriation Act No. 3 of 1980-81, allowed payments from 1980-81 to 1985-86. The INRA had a provision to extend the agreement for an additional two years beyond its original 5 year term. This extension was approved by the participating countries through a resolution approved in June 1985. The $1 vote is required to extend the previous vote wording to allow payments in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

External Affairs - Canadian International Development Agency

Vote L45c—To seek increased authority to issue notes to development fund accounts of international Financial Institutions not to exceed $280,600,000.

Explanation—The enabling legislation is the International Development (Financial Institution) Continuing Assistance Act which requires that the Secretary of State for External Affairs seek authority to issue non-interest bearing, non-negotiable demand notes.

Authority may be sought to issue notes to other institutions which may be added as approved by the Governor in Council. The Fund under consideration, namely the Asian Development Fund is included in the original legislation.

Authority must be sought through an Appropriation from Parliament in the year for which these notes are required.

Subsequent encashment of these notes in future years are reported to Parliament as statutory expenditures. The funds for these costs are contained in the overall Official Development Assistance allocation as shown in the Budget tabled in the House each year by the Minister of Finance.

The issuance of notes allows these organizations to make commitments to developing countries for the financing of projects and programs designed to assist in their economic and social development.

Public Works

Vote 51c—Pursuant to subsection 18(2) of the Financial Administration Act, to write-off from the accounts of Canada loans in the amount of $19,311,904 made jointly and severally to the Provincial Refining Company Limited and the Newfoundland Refining Company Limited.

Explanation—In the early 1970's the Crown loaned $20M to the Companies for the construction of a wharf in Come-by-Chance. The wharf was completed in 1975; the two companies became insolvent in the same year. Three payments had been made and the $19,311,904 was outstanding. The Government took possession of the wharf upon the default of the companies but has subsequently transferred it to the Province of Newfoundland.

The action to delete the loan due the Crown in the amount of $19,311,904 is consistent with the Debt Write-Off Regulations (SOR/85-257). Funds are being transferred, via a $1 vote, from Vote 5 ($1,311,903), from Vote 15 ($9,100,000), from Vote 50 ($850,000) and from Vote 60 ($8,050,000), to this new Vote 51c.

Transport

Vote 2c—to terminate the Stores Revolving Fund in accordance with Section 33 of the Adjustment of Accounts Act, to repeal Section 30 of the Act as of March 31, 1987.

Explanation—TC had been financing its stores operations through a Revolving Fund which was established under authority of Section 30 of the Adjustment of Accounts Act in 1980. TC management has decided to terminate the non-lapsing authority provided by the Revolving Fund and to fund its future stores and materiel requirements through regular appropriations.

TB gave its approval to the termination of the Stores Revolving Fund in January 1987 and the statutory authority is being cancelled in accordance with Section 33 of the Adjustment of Accounts Act through Final Supplementary Estimates.

Transport

Vote 31c—To increase from $205,000,000 to $230,000,000 the amount the Minister may guarantee in respect of Loans and other financial arrangements to be entered into by Ridley Terminals Inc.

Explanation—This item amends vote 30(c) of Appropriation Act No. 4 1983- 84 to replace the sum of $205,000,000 referred therein by the sum of $230,000,000. RTI's construction debt of approximately $200 million is financed by means of short term banker's acceptances. Management have concluded that the risk of exposure to fluctuating interest rates is unacceptable, given that interest charges make up 60% of RTI's operating costs. Management proposes to refinance the project by means of a bond issue which will require an amended guarantee authority because interest on the bond will be paid yearly. While the amended guarantee apparently increases Canada's risk of loss, the resultant lower interest costs improve the prospects for survival of RTI, thereby lessening the chance that the guarantee will be invoked.

Transport

Vote 40c—To extend the purposes of Transport Vote 40 to authorize the acquisition from Canadian National Railway Company of all the issued share capital of a corporation to which assets related to the St. John's Dockyard will have been transferred by Canadian National Railway Company.

Explanation—This item enables Marine Atlantic Inc. to purchase the assets of the St. John's Dockyard from CN for up to $26.4M. CN will return $14M of the proceeds to the government as repayment of a non-interest bearing advance which has been outstanding since the 1920s. The remaining proceeds will be retained by CN to partially offset the long-term debt it has incurred for the dockyard operations.

GREECE

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF COMMENCEMENT OF WAR OF INDEPENDENCE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that today is the One Hundred and Sixty-Sixth Anniversary of the commencement of the Greek War of independence. In 1821, Greece was a Turkish province where Greek Christians were referred to as slaves.

It was a very sad time for the Greeks, who had known such a glorious history. Gibbon, describing the city of Athens under Turkish occupation, said he could hardly believe that the people he saw around him were the Greeks who built the monuments whose ruins he saw on the Acropolis.

[English]

They rose up for only one principle. There was no ideology involved other than this one, that they wanted to be free. They wanted to live in a regime in which all people would be equal, as Solon had proclaimed in 594 B.C.

The Greeks today have not regained the central position intellectually that they had then. Circumstances have changed. However, they aspire to being free and to being members of the great western democratic society. They have more troops per capita in NATO than any other country. They have been faithful allies of the west in two world wars and in Korea. They treat Canada with love and respect, and Canadians of Greek descent, much as they love Greece, have found a country here that they consider better.

I for one certainly do. One of the reasons why I consider Canada the best country there is is because we can come here and be Canadians first, last and always, and no one tries to pull us up by our roots to sanitize them. We are allowed to develop fully as Canadians, and if we wish to retain our Greek characteristics, we are allowed to do so.

Our children do well in this country. I have the honour and pleasure of having here in this chamber a colleague, Senator Barootes, whose parents came from Greece and who is an example of what Greeks can do in this country.

Greece will remain an ally and a friend of Canada; Greece will remain a defender of democracy and of freedom.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour of tabling its Seventh Report, concerning its study of the Government's funding of post-secondary education and occupational training.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I would like permission to say a few words now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Leblanc (Saurel): Honourable senators, I rise today to open the debate on the National Finance Committee's report on Federal Policy on Post-Secondary Education.

As many of you know, we began hearings on the study in the fall of 1985.

Preceding that, I spent the summer with the research staff preparing background material and a witness list so that the committee could proceed expeditiously. We completed our hearings last May and sent a first draft to the committee in time for the fall reconvening of Parliament. Since that time, we have spent considerable time, in camera, discussing what in my mind is a very controversial but timely report on federal involvement in post-secondary education.

I should now like to express my thanks and appreciation to the entire committee for their considerable efforts in producing this report. I know that there were times that differences of opinion seemed insurmountable, but in the end, the wisdom and good sense of the members prevailed and we have a report of which we can all be proud.

I would also like to express my appreciation to the clerk of the committee, John Desmarais for scheduling the hearings and getting the report out on time. And I would like to thank our research staff from the Parliamentary Centre, in particular Jeff Greenberg, who under committee direction gave form and substance to this report. As some of you know, the topics in the report cover many areas; they range from the general transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education under the Established Programs Financing legislation, to accountability to Parliament for these expenditures; from accessibility to all who can profit from post-secondary education to the deterioration in research; and from the place of foreign students in Canada to the need for a renewal of faculty.

I would like to spend the next few minutes focussing on the general fiscal transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education.

The Established Programs Financing legislation I have referred to has been in effect since 1977 and has gone through a number of changes. But none of these changes has altered the basic principle; it is a statute which is of an omnibus nature; it tries to achieve too many things for too many people. It is supposed to provide stability of financing to the provinces and it does; it is supposed to ensure equal transfers on a per capita basis to the provinces and it does; it is supposed to be in respect of post-secondary education and if it is, no one would know because it is completely unconditional. It is a program designed by finance ministers for financial purposes with little or no regard for post-secondary education.

We have proposed in our report that the post-secondary portion of EPF must be terminated. In this respect, our report offers little new over what has been proposed before.

But all these past reports assume that there is a federal role or responsibility for the general report of post-secondary education. The usual argument is that when the Fathers of Confederation made education a provincial responsibility under section 93 of the 1867 Constitution Act, they really never considered post-secondary education to be anything more than a private or a religious function. But those who believe this are wrong. George Brown, one of the Fathers of Confederation, indicated in 1865 that while he believed that post-secondary education was of a national character, it was explicitly given to the provinces because of its impact on cultural and social issues particularly in Quebec.

But as Senator Hicks has so often reminded us, the federal-provincial wrangling in this area has little to do with the Constitution and a great deal to do with politics—there is a lack of will to cooperate. This post-secondary area is typical of the unique situation in Canada where the federal government has the spending power while the provinces have the constitutional responsibility. In such a situation, both the Rowell-Sirois Commission of 1940 and the recent Macdonald Commission are instructive. They indicate that three alternatives to this dilemma are possible.

The first such alternative calls for shared-cost arrangements such as we had for post-secondary education prior to 1977. Many of us remember the difficulties in that program. For example, provincial spending determined the level of federal spending; auditing the program took many years to solve disputes; and federal fifty-cent dollars meant that provincial objectives were being distorted. Most recent proposals to amend EPF such as found in the Johnson report have added nothing new. Mr. Johnson's suggestions call for increases in federal contributions for post-secondary education to match the increase in provincial contributions. But determining the base from which these increases will start, and ensuring that provinces will not inflate the increase in their contributions, will require constant auditing. While Johnson calls this matching grants rather than shared costs, it contains all the problems of the old shared-cost program—constant auditing, loss of federal financial control over the transfers and distorted 50 cent dollars for the provinces. In other words, shared-cost by another name.

The second alternative of the Rowell-Sirois Commission and the Macdonald Commission calls for a transfer of the constitutional responsibility to the level of government with the spending power; in other words, transfer to the federal government the responsibility for post-secondary education. Theoretically, this is possible, but it would require amending section 93 of the 1982 Constitution Act. This means that consent would be required from the House and Senate, and consent of two-thirds of the provinces with at least 50 per cent of the population. But while this seems difficult to achieve, it is still more complex. Section 38(3) allows any province to dissent from such an amendment and section 40 would require that in the area of education, the dissenting provinces be given "reasonable" compensation.

What this says, is that this second alternative of amending the constitution is possible in theory, but for all practical purposes is impossible under the current Constitution.

That leaves us with the third alternative—transfer the spending power to that level of government with the constitutional responsibility. And that is what we proposed. Our suggestion is that we terminate the post-secondary portion of EPF and transfer to the provinces the appropriate taxing authority to collect reasonably similar amounts to what they now receive through the tax and cash transfers of EPF.

At this point in the committee deliberations there were many senators who questioned the practicality of this. Some were concerned about the adequacy of such an idea for the 'have not' provinces. They were concerned that even if these tax transfers were equalized, the rich provinces still would be better off than the poorer provinces. I will not comment any further about this issue, but leave it to my colleagues on the committee to raise and debate.

There were others on the committee who felt that by giving up on the federal responsibility for the general support of post-secondary education, we would be conceding a responsibility to the provinces which they so far have shown no will or commitment to act upon in the national interest. I must confess that I have a great deal of sympathy with this view, but then I consider the alternative. What has the federal government done?

• (1410)

It has transferred a great deal of money and of this there is no doubt. But has it contributed any more to post-secondary education than if the provinces had the authority to collect and spend? I don't think so. Mediocrity reigns in Canadian universities, teaching standards are declining, and research facilities are deteriorating.

Some of you are probably saying that if we had true accountability, this would not be the case. But there can be no true accountability without constitutional authority over our colleges and universities, or agreement to share equally in the funding and responsibility. This, the provinces will never concede. Furthermore from my experience in politics, I doubt that there ever will be a time when the provinces will be prepared to concede a direct say in the general operations and administration of our universities. I should also point out that with regard to the colleges in Canada, there is not even a shred of doubt in my mind that everyone agrees that they are provincial organizations.

Maybe it is high time to stop the constant bickering with the provinces over who is providing what amounts, whether it is being spent and what is happening to our colleges and universities. Is there anything wrong with agreeing with the provinces that the federal government does not have a specific role to play in the general support of the universities and colleges of Canada; and that it does have a definite role to play in some specific areas? Let me give some examples:

First, university research as supported by the granting councils and by procurement of government departments;

Second, accessibility as supported by student aid, and by general support for disadvantaged groups in society;

Third, manpower training ranging from retraining of our youth all the way to ensuring an adequate supply of qualified scholars and scientists to fill the expected vacancies in our universities in the 1990s and 21st century.

In these kinds of issues, and the responsibility for them, there is no squabble; the provinces and the federal government jointly agree that there is a federal role to play.

This is the essence and the message of the report. I will not go any further into these areas at this time.

The report, however, contains considerable analysis, conclusions and recommendations about these. I know that as the debate on this report proceeds many of my colleagues on the committee will wish to speak to them and to the other issues I have raised.

In conclusion, I would only like to repeat my thanks to my colleagues for their cooperation in producing, what in my mind is one of the most important reports ever produced by a committee of this chamber.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the chairman and members of the Standing Committee on their good work. Conclusions and recommendations in this report will certainly be a significant contribution for the forum on post-secondary education announced in the Speech from the Throne last fall.

On motion of Senator Simard, debate adjourned.

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the

[Senator Leblanc (Saurel).]

Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 754.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are the comments very long?

An Hon. Senator: Four pages, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: Could the report be distributed to honourable senators before we—

Senator Flynn: It will be an appendix to today's Debates of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, normally after the report is tabled, Senator Macdonald as sponsor of the bill will move third reading. We should have an opportunity to read the report before third reading is moved. Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker: So, honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator MacDonald (Halifax), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1986-87 (No. 2)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William Kelly: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

A Clerk at the Table:

Wednesday, March 25, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-40, An Act to provide borrowing authority, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, March 24, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment but with the following comments:—

Hon. Senators: Dispense!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Later this day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to have heard the comments of the committee.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps they could be read.

Senator Frith: Perhaps Senator Kelly could read them.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, the comments, which follow the reporting of the bill without amendment, are as follows:

Various procedural matters were raised with the Minister. The Minister suggested that he would be prepared to meet with interested members of Parliament to consider the logistics related to these procedural matters and to determine whether they could be improved.

That referred to the recurring argument on what from time to time is described as the haste in which these matters are brought before the chamber, and the minister volunteered the suggestion that it might be helpful between now and the next time that a similar situation develops to meet with interested members of the Senate and of the other place to discuss logistics and to see whether the procedure cannot be improved.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, yesterday, when the matter about the borrowing authority bill arose, I made the following comments with respect to the consideration of the borrowing authority bill before the committee:

When the bill goes to committee, can we find out why there is such mismanagement in the legislative and borrowing program of the government? Is that not a reasonable question? Will the committee report to us and give us some reasonable explanations for this? Will there be a statement made by the minister and his officials indicating that they will correct their ways so that we can pass the bill and accommodate the borrowing program of the government?

I have attempted to inform myself as to what happened in the committee. I have asked for a transcript of the evidence given by the minister in order to satisfy myself about the questions I asked yesterday. I received the transcript about ten minutes ago. I have as yet not had the opportunity to read it to satisfy myself as to whether any of those requests have been met by the minister. I do not know what is meant in the committee's report by "logistics". Perhaps Senator Kelly will tell me what is meant by "logistics". I do not think it is a question of logistics. I want to know what members of the Senate do now when they are asked to give leave to move to third reading on the borrowing bill, considering that they have not been able to read any of the evidence given by the minister before the committee, and that the report of the committee uses expressions like "logistics", which are not on their face clear as to their meaning. I must ask Senator Kelly as chairman of the committee: Can he throw more light on this matter? What is meant by "logistics"? I understood that "logistics" had to do with the movement of troops. I have never heard the word used in the parliamentary context, and I would like to know what it is intended to convey.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, if I may try to respond in this way: The Leader of the Opposition in the chamber yesterday did indeed ask the questions in the fashion he described. He quoted from Hansard. Speaking for myself as, by the way, deputy chairman of the committee, not chairman,

I make no apology for the fact that I did not lead questioning in the direction of mismanagement, because I do not see mismanagement there. However, Senator Stewart and Senator Sinclair were present, and it was my impression that their line of questioning related to the information that the Leader of the Opposition felt was necessary to draw from the minister at the meeting this morning. So we had every reason to believe that those questions were brought forward and answered on the record.

What we tried to describe in the report—and perhaps we summarized it too briefly—was the current difference of opinion between the ministry and some senators and between the ministry and some members of the other place, and perhaps a better way of ironing these things out. I have been here only four years, but I have seen this argument raised in each of those years at borrowing authority time. For example, there was the question on Bill C-11 as to whether or not it should be split. To me and to other members at the meeting, these matters are logistics, the process by which something gets accomplished. In the case raised by the Leader of the Opposition, yes, "logistics" refers to the movement of troops. The moving of borrowing authority bills through Parliament comes under the heading of "logistics". At least it does in my opinion, in the opinion of my colleagues at the meeting this morning, and, I think, in the opinion of other colleagues in this chamber. However, I do not believe that the Leader of the Opposition is simply trying to wrestle with the definition of a word. I think we do understand that the word could be applied in the situation with which we are presently confronted.

The committee was encouraged by the fact that we heard the minister say—and this perhaps is an echo of Bill C-11—instead of taking a hard firm position that this way is the only way that it can be done, in effect, "You have given me some things to think about, and I think it would be appropriate for us to sit together and examine this thing once again before we come to the next borrowing authority bill." If the committee erred in not reporting all of that detail, it was because it felt that the record supplied answers to most of the matters raised by the Leader of the Opposition, and we were trying to summarize the positive matters we felt came out of the discussion.

• (1430)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, Senator Kelly has referred to the record, but the record is not available to us, and therefore we must rely on the chairman of the committee to advise us as to what happened, if leave is to be given. I must say that to be invited now to look at the record, after the bill has been passed, is not much of a solution.

I would like to have read the record before we were asked to give leave to proceed to third reading, but that is one of the "logistics", apparently, that is to be corrected. I wonder if it is now a question of logistics that senators will be asked to pass a bill without having an opportunity of reading the pertinent evidence given by a minister before they are asked to pass that bill. That is the principle that is now, apparently, a matter of logistics. I think it is an important parliamentary principle that we all ought to adhere to, but I am quite prepared to let that drop.

However, what I want to know is whether the deputy chairman is prepared to tell us that the Minister of Finance, or his surrogate, will meet with members of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, wrestle with this problem, and then report back to the Senate. Also, is there some indication that this situation that we are facing today will be corrected?

Senator Kelly: There is every indication that this situation will be carefully reviewed and, where indicated, corrected.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the honourable deputy chairman for his undertaking, which helps to some extent. However, we are now taking another leap of faith, as we will be doing later on with respect to the trade question. We are taking a leap of faith in that we are now unable to read the record. However, the undertaking of the minister has been summarized by the deputy chairman, and perhaps that is stronger than faith; let us say it is trust, which we will accept, from Senator Kelly whom we admire for his integrity.

However, honourable senators, leave has now been asked, and I see on the order paper that there is Royal Assent slated for later today. Therefore, if leave is given to proceed to third reading today, and if third reading is then given to this bill, presumably we would move to Royal Assent today. However, I want to ask: Why is it necessary for leave to be granted today? Why can we not proceed in the normal way and have third reading tomorrow? I make a point of this because last week—carelessly, as we later learned, in the minds of supporters of the government—we waived the rules and gave leave on Tuesday last. Later we were reproached for doing so. Therefore, I want to know why we should grant leave today rather than having third reading tomorrow in the normal way.

Senator Dood: Honourable senators, I explained yesterday the reasons why I felt it would be appropriate to attempt to have this bill passed and to have Royal Assent today. The simple truth of the matter is that, as was stated this morning in committee, there is a treasury bill auction scheduled for tomorrow, Thursday, March 26, for $4.5 billion worth of Canada treasury bills. If Royal Assent is not given today to this bill, this offer will have to be withdrawn. The offer has been made contingent on Royal Assent being given to Bill C-40, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for fiscal 1986-87 and borrowing authority for fiscal 1987-88.

Obviously, it is completely within the purview of this chamber to grant leave and to pass this bill this afternoon. I simply ask that the government's borrowing program be accommodated in this regard. I really do not think it is too big an inconvenience to ask that the bill be passed this afternoon rather than tomorrow. However, obviously the decision rests in the hands of honourable senators, and we will have to live with whatever that decision is.

Senator MacEachen: I think the Deputy Leader of the Government has put his finger on the difficulty that we are hoping will be corrected, and that is that the borrowing program has been laid out so that important bids are to be terminated or dealt with tomorrow, and that if Royal Assent were not given the borrowing program of the government would be disturbed and, presumably, damaged. Honourable senators, we are confronted with the responsibility of having that happen if we do not waive the rules of the Senate, and I personally will not refuse leave in those circumstances.

However, honourable senators, the question is: Why have we been put in this position? Why have we been put in the situation of having to pass the borrowing bill when the evidence that has been given by the minister this morning is not available to any one of us, except those who attended that meeting. Other senators had other responsibilities this morning, therefore, we have not read the evidence. Some of it has been given to us by Senator Kelly and some other bits of evidence have been given to us by the Deputy Leader of the Government. We trust that what they say is accurate. However, why have we been put in this situation when, if the government had organized itself properly, the bill would be passed and given Royal Assent, and we would not be faced with an option tomorrow? That is the problem. I do not think it is a political problem, and it is not a problem of "logistics", if I may say so.

Honourable senators, I simply put my case. It is a pretty sad situation, but we will give leave because it is the responsible thing to do. However, I do it biting my tongue and holding my nose.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Perhaps I could suggest that the Leader of the Opposition consult his colleague, Senator Sinclair. He is the one who insisted on using the word "logistics". Perhaps Senator MacEachen did not have time to read the transcript of the evidence this morning. However, if he thought his question was so important, he could have consulted with Senator Sinclair and Senator Stewart, who were both at the meeting, and that would have been very useful, I suggest, if the honourable senator himself was unable to attend the committee meeting.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it seems that the point that was made by Senator MacEachen has escaped Senator Flynn. Perhaps if he had been paying attention, Senator Flynn would have noted that Senator MacEachen dealt with the question of logistics, left that aside as far as the word is concerned, and pointed out that we have been put in the frustrating situation where someone says, "You have to do this, because we manoeuvred you into the position of having to do it." That is the point. The department were the ones who called for the bids; they were the ones who managed the program the way they did, and it was all contingent upon this bill being passed today with leave, and that is the position that we are objecting to. What we are saying is we hope we will not be asked to do it again, and that the assurances given by Senator Kelly will be fulfilled; that this sort of situation will not recur because they will examine the logistics, or whatever word you wish to use.

Senator Flynn: That is a different story.

Senator Frith: That is exactly what Senator MacEachen said.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I rise on the point raised by Senator Flynn. I think that Senator Flynn is again overlooking a very important point, namely, that every senator is surely entitled to read the evidence of Mr. Hockin given this morning before being asked to pronounce on this bill. It is not a question of the rights of Senator MacEachen; it is a question of the rights of every senator, and that is my point.

The fact is that before we came into this chamber today I did discuss the committee proceedings with both Senator Stewart and Senator Sinclair. However, I did not have a transcript of the committee proceedings, and I wanted to read for myself what the minister had to say to find out what he had undertaken. I could not.

● (1440)

It seems to me that it is a bit cheap, or unfair, to suggest that we ought to overlook the fact that we are being asked to pass an important bill when no senator has been able to read the transcript of the evidence upon which we base our decision. The decision to waive the normal notice that must be given is based upon the evidence given by the deputy leader—conveyed second hand—that unless Royal Assent is given to this bill today, the borrowing program of the government will be deranged. That is what we were told.

Is it unreasonable for a member of the Senate to make these points?

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator MacEachen: I am glad that Senator Flynn has said it is not unreasonable. I think it is totally reasonable to make these points as we give leave, with the understanding that there is an undertaking that there will be a serious consultation with the minister and the committee. Then, we will hear from the committee as to what steps will be taken to remove this unpleasant situation for all of us.

Senator Flynn: That is a problem that has been with us for years, even when the honourable the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Doody: With leave, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 5, 1986-87

FIRST READING

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 1, 1987-88

FIRST READING

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 2, 1987-88

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-47, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, later this day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Could the deputy leader explain why we should waive the rules and allow this bill to be given second reading later this day?

Senator Doody: I had hoped the Senate would give leave to commence second reading of these three supply bills today in anticipation of getting them passed by the Senate before March 31, which is next Tuesday.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Do the same considerations apply to all three bills, and, if so, would the deputy leader like all three bills to be introduced and then make his comments on all three bills, or is there a different reason for each bill? In other words, is one bill more urgent than the others?

Senator Doody: No. I should like to have all three introduced now, honourable senators. I will try to explain why I am requesting leave for second reading of all three bills later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-48, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these three bills be read the second time?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), that these three bills be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator MacEachen: Leave is not granted, unless the deputy leader can give us a good reason for treating these bills in this manner.

I take it for granted that the bills will be eligible for second reading tomorrow and for third reading on Tuesday next, which is March 31. Why accelerate the process?

Perhaps the deputy leader has a reason for requesting leave for second reading of the bill relating to the financial year 1986-87, and, if so, I would immediately yield, but I do not know why we ought to give leave to commence second reading later this day for the two bills respecting the financial year 1988.

The point I am raising is a fundamental one, judging by what has come to the fore, and that is the question as to whether leave is to be taken for granted, whether leave is given to waive the rules systematically, or whether there should be a good reason to waive the rules.

We just waived an important rule a few moments ago because there was a good reason given, so do not say we are being unreasonable. If the deputy leader has a good reason, we will waive the rules, as we have done in the past, but I ask why we cannot let these bills go through in the normal way—will anything suffer?

Senator Doody: I would hope that nothing would suffer. It has been fairly well accepted in the Senate that the supply bills at the end of the fiscal year go through with minimum involvement by the Senate. Bill C-47 relates to Supplementary Estimates (C) ending March 31, 1987. Bill C-48 is an interim supply bill and deals with supply for the first three months; that is, three-twelfths of the supply. We are not asking for the main estimates for 1988, just the interim supply bill, which has been standard procedure since I have been here.

Bill C-49 relates to Supplementary Estimates (A), granting authority to spend $700 million on the grain supplements for the western provinces. Of that amount, $300 million has already been authorized by Parliament, and this $700 million will bring that up to the billion dollar commitment. We have been told that that must be made available to the department so that it can start processing the cheques and getting them out to the recipients.

There is some disagreement as to whether or not Supplementary Estimates (A) should have been issued for the entire amount or whether the amount should have been included in the main estimates. The Department of Finance feels that this is the correct way to proceed, but others disagree.

Can this bill wait until March 31? I suppose it can. Can these three bills wait until Tuesday next? I suppose they can. But I personally think—and I believe other honourable senators will agree—that it would be far better to introduce these bills today, commence second reading, and hope that they will be passed tomorrow.

We had thought that we might be sitting on Friday to deal with another bill; it appears at this point that we will not be getting that bill, although I will not know that for certain until tomorrow. In that event, I suppose that we could look forward to getting the supply bills granted to the government on Friday.

Once again, if the Senate decides that it does not want to do that, and it wants to bring us right to the wire on March 31 and pass the bills and get Royal Assent on Tuesday next, then so be it. That is all we can do; we are in the hands of the Senate. However, I must say that in my experience here the historical precedent for this has been established, namely, that when the supply bills, which are really the concern of the other place, are presented, they are passed fairly quickly by the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I agree with that statement of “fairly quickly”; there’s no problem with that. When my friend talks about “going to the wire” on March 31, 1987, I will bend that far and say, “Waive that rule,” but I do not see any reason why we should waive the rules on the other two where the wire is March 31, 1988.

Senator Doody: The bill that we hope to introduce today for second reading is not the main supply bill for 1988, it is simply an interim supply bill for the first three months to allow the government to carry on its business in an orderly procession. There is not one single departmental estimate that requests funding for the full year.

Senator MacEachen: Well, of course.

Senator Doody: They are all just proportions of the year. Why that should be any different from Supplementary Estimates (C)s or Supplementary Estimates (A)s—although the Supplementary Estimates (A) bill is perhaps the one that the senator was referring to here—is beyond me.

In any event, as I said, we are entirely at the disposal of the Senate. If the Senate does not want to pass the supply bills or give us leave to introduce them for second reading today, then so be it.

Senator MacEachen: The Deputy Leader of the Government is making it a bit difficult by saying that we do not want to pass them. That is not the question. Concerning Bill C-47 which appears for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1987, I said that if you want to introduce second reading, that is fine. I just want some reason why, for interim supply next year, it makes any difference whether we follow the ordinary rule and deal with them next Tuesday—or whatever day—or deal with them today. Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government can give us a reason that would convince us.

In any event, I tell the Deputy Leader of the Government: Why not go to second reading on the first bill? If he can convince us, we will accommodate him tomorrow.

Senator Doody: The purpose of having the introductory remarks on all three bills before the Senate today for study by senators might be of some advantage to senators. They may want to examine the detail of the supply bills, the amounts involved, the headings, and so on, and I would be in a position to table the documents attached today if senators allowed us leave to introduce the bills. But if Supplementary Estimates (C) are the only estimates that the Senate wants to deal with today, then obviously that is the only that will be dealt with.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, since we are still dealing en bloc, that would still leave the question of the other two and whether you would want to move next sitting on the other two. Normally, of course, they would require two days' notice.

Do I take it that we are now asking leave to deal with Bill C-47 later this day? We have the report from the committee, and it seems logical to do it after the report. Will the Deputy Leader of the Government then be asking for second reading at the next sitting on the other two, Bill C-48 and Bill C-49?

Senator Doody: The same procedure will have to be followed. If they are not dealt with on second reading today, leave will have to be given for second reading to be moved tomorrow.

Senator Frith: That's right.

Senator Doody: Other than that, if the Senate wants to go by the rules, we can sit on Friday to examine them. I do not know the purpose of all of this. Perhaps honourable senators could explain why "tomorrow with leave" is so very different from "today with leave". I do not pretend to have the parliamentary background that some honourable gentlemen and ladies in this place do, but I fail to see the difference between introducing these bills for second reading today with leave, or allowing one to be introduced today with leave, and allowing the other two to be introduced tomorrow with leave; or does the Senate want to have them all introduced strictly in accordance with the rules of the Senate, which would mean that they would be introduced Friday?

I cannot introduce a motion unless I know exactly what it is the Senate wants to do. I have already introduced one motion and I do not think the Senate agrees with it, so I need some guidance.

Senator Frith: For one thing, there is a more persuasive reason for abridging the rules on Bill C-47, and that has already been covered.

Yesterday Senator Kelly's report from the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on Supplementary Estimates (C) was tabled. I have had a chance to read that report, which I received yesterday. The report on Supplementary Estimates (A) was approved yesterday. Frankly, I have not had a chance to read it. The reason for doing one today—perhaps other senators have other reasons—and doing the other ones tomorrow is simply that: I would like to have a chance to read them. The approach that I have always taken with regard to appropriation bills—whether I was on that side or on this side—is that the bill itself ends up being a consecration of the study by the National Finance Committee of the estimates concerned. It is important to take the opportunity to read about the work that the committee did because, once you are satisfied with that, the rest is usually almost automatic.

Senator Doody: I do not think there is any doubt about that, but the main estimates for 1988 will not be finished until June. We have from now until June to examine, debate, talk about and look at every department and agency.

Senator Frith: That is right.

Senator Doody: To say that we want to read the report that was tabled yesterday is a reason, but it certainly does not mean that these estimates will disappear and be finished with and nobody will have a chance to look at them again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted for all three bills, or just Bill C-47?

Senator Frith: Let us start with Bill C-47.

On motion of Senator Doody, Bill C-47 placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted for Bill C-48 and Bill C-49?

Senator Frith: For tomorrow, yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: For tomorrow?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Frith: But not today.

Senator Flynn: If you want Friday, that is all right too.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that Bill C-48 and Bill C-49 be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill C-48 and Bill C-49 placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF COAL IN CANADA

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, March 26, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of coal in Canada, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than the 31st March, 1988.

● (1500)

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF NATURAL GAS IN CANADA

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I also give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, March 26, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of natural gas in Canada with particular reference to natural gas deregulation, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the committee present its report no later than 31st March, 1988.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-42

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-42, An Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Might we be told what the committee will be studying? Why is the committee required to sit at three o'clock? I am not arguing that it should not, but what work will the committee be doing?

[Senator Hastings.]

Hon. Ian Sinclair: The committee is working on the softwood lumber bill. We are also working on our report in regard to Bill C-38, the Teleglobe Canada Reorganization and Divesiture Act. We are dealing with two matters, and we have five witnesses to hear this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. PROTECTIONIST MEASURES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Clearly, honourable senators, it appears that the government's initiative respecting the current negotiations with the United States on a comprehensive free trade agreement is flawed in three respects: timing, conception and execution. Rather than modifying protectionist sentiments in the American Congress, Congress has accelerated protectionist measures.

The linchpin to the government's negotiations was the strong support expected from President Reagan against the Congress, but now President Reagan appears to be a lame-duck president, further weakened by the so-called "Irangate" issue which is swirling through Congress.

Yesterday Congress appeared to take up a protectionist rampage. There are two reports in the Globe and Mail, one emanating from the House of Representatives which indicates that a foreign affairs committee has approved legislation that would restrict exports of U.S. crude oil and refined oil products to Canada. This is contrary to the President's undertaking given to the Government of Canada in June, 1985, to lift these restrictions on the U.S. in order to allow crude exports to Canada.

Meanwhile, there is another report which suggests that the United States Senate is ignoring the rules of GATT as they apply to Canadian corn products. The report tells us that U.S. politicians are ignoring international trade rules that they say Canada violated with a countervailing duty on U.S. corn. A statement was made by a Mr. Clifford Leach, President of the Ontario Corn Producers Association, to the effect that there is no excuse for the American Senate to "ignore international procedures negotiated under the GATT and to put Canada on trial under American laws which themselves are of questionable GATT . . . conformity."

I would ask the Leader of the Government what steps the government is taking with respect to these two matters.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I must say that it is a flagrant abuse of the oral Question Period for an honourable senator to rise here and make a speech in the guise of a question. If he wants to debate these matters, I have told him before—as I have told other senators—that he is free to put forward a Notice of Inquiry and I will undertake to either debate the matter personally on behalf of the government or have one of my colleagues here do so.

With regard to the generality of his preamble, I simply state that Canada will always be subject to protectionist trends and campaigns in the United States Congress. We will always be subject to changes in the politics of that country and in the membership of the Congress so long as we do not have the secure access to that market that a trade treaty will give us. That is what the government is trying to negotiate, a trade treaty with the United States that will take us into the next century.

I would remind my friend that there is on the order paper now a Notice of Inquiry by our colleague, Senator Everett, calling the attention of the Senate to the free trade negotiations with the United States. I would welcome an early start to that debate.

With regard to the oil export matter, I can simply tell the honourable senator that we have expressed our concern to several members of the Congress through our embassy in Washington, pointing out that the bill would disrupt a sizeable and growing two-way trade in oil and oil products between Canada and the United States. It would put at risk over $500 million per year in U.S. refined products exports and $200 million in U.S. crude oil exports to Canada.

As the honourable senator has pointed out, it is a fact that the bill would run counter to President Reagan's June, 1985, decision to lift restrictions on U.S. crude oil exports to Canada. But, as I say, the bill is now before the U.S. Congress. It has not been passed, and there is some time to go before such a bill will become law. The honourable senator, I know, is familiar with the legislative process in the United States.

Senator Grafstein: It appears that senators in the United States are unalterably opposed to any notion of a bilateral dispute mechanism. Some commentators are suggesting that this could, itself, cause the negotiations to fail.

Has the government given any consideration to joining the European Economic Community as an alternative strategy to these flawed free trade negotiations?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have read the same reports as has the honourable senator about the views of various members of the United States Congress.

As for his suggestion that Canada should join the European Economic Community, I think that would be rather difficult under the present terms of the Treaty of Rome.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PLAN—STATUS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I regret having to raise the question of the Sydney Steel Corporation again but I am sure honourable senators will appreciate the reasons behind my asking questions of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

The Leader of the Government himself will recall the questions that were raised over a period of several weeks and, indeed, months; the announcements that were made dating back to well over a year ago with respect to the agreements that had been signed between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia with respect to the Phase 2 modernization of Sysco; and the agreement that $157 million would be spent in Phase 2, 70 per cent by the Government of Canada and 30 per cent by the Government of Nova Scotia. The Leader of the Government will appreciate that there has been a great deal of speculation as to the status of the business plan Phase 2. I am just giving the Leader of the Government an opportunity to review his notes on this point while I continue to speak and refresh his memory. Can he bring us up to date with respect to the status of Phase 2?

• (1510)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am afraid that I cannot add much—in fact, I do not think I can add anything—to what the honourable senator already knows from press reports; that is to say, a committee of ministers headed by the Deputy Prime Minister is now studying the implications of the $157 million modernization program. I hope that that study will be concluded before long.

Senator Graham: Can the minister confirm whether or not the $157 million for Phase 2 has been approved by Treasury Board?

Senator Murray: I regret that I do not have that information.

Senator Graham: Could the government leader, then, tell us whether or not the Phase 2 business plan that has been discussed has been received by the government?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am under the impression that the document in question is a supplement to a business plan that is already in existence. As a matter of fact, I think I am indebted to the honourable senator for having given me that information on an earlier occasion. I will have to check to see what the status of that document is. My last information, and it is a bit old, is that the government had not received the document.

Senator Graham: If I may, I will ask one further question. The Leader of the Government has made reference to a committee which has also been alluded to in the press. It is my understanding that the committee will have as chairman the Deputy Prime Minister, and that the Minister of National Revenue, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Solicitor General will also be members. Can the Leader of the Government tell us something about the terms of reference of this committee? Will the expenditure of $157 million on Phase 2 hinge upon the deliberations of that committee?

Senator Murray: I would not say that, honourable senators. The final decision will be taken by the government as a whole. I assume that there will be a recommendation or an analysis of some kind made by the group of ministers that is studying the implications of this expenditure, but the decision, at the end of the day, will be taken by the cabinet.

Senator Graham: As honourable senators know, and as we discussed prior to the opening of the Canada Winter Games in Cape Breton, announcements were made to the effect that the whole situation had been resolved. We understood that the commitment of the Government of Canada had been confirmed, or reconfirmed, prior to the Prime Minister's visit to Cape Breton to open the Canada Games. Can the minister give us an indication of the time frame that may be involved before we finally receive complete confirmation and a green light for the go-ahead on Phase 2?

Senator Murray: I will try to get an answer to that question in the next 24 hours.

RADIO ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard, moved the third reading of Bill C-3, to amend the Radio Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Yesterday, honourable senators, Bill C-3 entitled "An Act to amend the Radio Act" was given second reading in this house. However this measure did not have the unanimous support of the Senate, and it will not go through the penultimate stage of its genesis without the same kind of opposition today. It will have to be adopted by the majority.

In fact, if the provincial administrations that are all opposed to the aim of this bill had, like the New Brunswick Minister of Transport did, shown more vigour in speaking against this measure which taxes them and their citizens, today the Senate would be in a very good position to say no to the government, or at least to urge it to curb its appetite.

However, with the exception of New Brunswick, the provinces which often suggest that the Senate be reformed so that, they claim, they might more easily achieve their political goals did not even bother to appear before a committee of this house to defend their interests. Can we take these provinces seriously when they do not even use the means now at their disposal to fight against federal encroachment? We will talk about this some day. For the time being I will get back to Bill C-3.

[Senator Graham.]

I repeat the testimony given before the committee. All provinces are opposed to the imposition of fees to issue radio licences from which they had been exempted to this day—the provinces, their ministries and their agencies—from which they are exempted, as I said, at this very moment as I speak.

It has been claimed by the Department of Communications of the federal government that the costs of managing this program must be recouped. One of the aims of the bill is to increase revenues to that end, undoubtedly to expand the bureaucratic empire. The committee was also told that another objective, this one more subtle, was to delouse the network of users of those who use it badly, too little, or not enough. On this point—

Senator Tremblay: Parasites!

Senator Corbin: Parasites indeed, as Senator Tremblay says. On this point, I consider that we could have taken a different approach. If indeed there are individuals, groups, societies, or provincial government ministries or agencies that make abusive use of the airwaves, we ought to take steps other than the imposition of fees on services which the provincial administrations deem essential. I am not convinced that the end sought through this bill will be reached by the general imposition of fees. I think I can predict that frequencies will not necessarily be vacated just on that account.

Someone also claimed before the committee that the fees were not prohibitive. Yet the provinces did react. Judging from what we were told in committee, all provinces did react negatively. New Brunswick even thought the matter was important enough to delegate its Minister of Transport to make us aware of the impact this measure will have on the finances of the province and, in fact, on the taxpayers of New Brunswick who will have to pick up the tab for these new costs.

The committee members were misled before Christmas when they were told the bill had to be urgently reported by December 19, 1986 at the latest. Such remarks were made before the Transport Committee. We had our backs against the wall, we had to deliver the bill by December 19. It was described as a matter of utmost urgency. We were led to believe it was a top government priority.

Well, the legislative committee of the House of Commons did not conclude their study and report the bill before February 16, 1987.

Who is telling the truth? Was the Senate again victim of some form of blackmail? Still the proof is there and we have every reason to wonder. Just how much longer should the Senate be subjected to this kind of affront? Why should we always be pressed for time when more often than not we must wait for the Lower House to complete its detailed examination, which is par for the course in the other place? Far be it from me to blame or accuse members of the other place by saying that they do a bad job in this respect. Is there really anybody in control? Are we to rubberstamp legislation without any concern for quality? Are we going to accept being rushed all the time like this?

It is not acceptable that the Senate be rushed in that way without justification. From now on, we should be more careful about this and demand reasons, motives and explanations.

It was said in the Transport Committee that licence fees could not be considered a tax. But many senators think it is just that, a tax with a different name. One level of government levies a tax on a lower level, the provincial level. Her Majesty in the right of Canada will levy fees on Her Majesty in the right of Canadian provinces and territories. That cannot be. Her Majesty cannot do that, and that is why this tax is called a fee.

That is what the Minister from New Brunswick said:

—the province of New Brunswick thinks it is an unacceptable burden transferred to the provinces.

The same spokesman said:

Imposing a fee is similar to an unacceptable transfer of federal tax to the provinces.

If that is not a tax, I wonder what it is. The same Minister from New Brunswick said, and I quote:

All Maritime Provinces will suffer from this new tax.

We should even say it is a predatory practice.

We yet have to receive an explanation of the weakest argument given in committee in support of this bill.

Apparently, this bill is before us because of the Auditor General of Canada. He is the real culprit. Our government, through the Minister of Finance simply obeyed the instructions of the Auditor General, who is a servant of the Parliament of Canada and for whom I admit a degree of respect.

Since when do we have to go by the orders of the Auditor General of Canada? I thought only the legislators in both Houses of Parliament could decide the tax burden imposed periodically on Canadian voters and taxpayers.

It was a falsehood to say that we could not ignore the comments of the Auditor General. It was decided by the government of the day to impose fees to provincial and federal users. The government is entitled to ask this of Parliament, but parliamentarians are also entitled to say no. There is therefore no reason to hide behind the Auditor General, who would in fact have been going beyond his terms of reference by making such a request.

What we are now being told by the government is this: It is true that we are digging into the coffers of the provinces and their agencies to find some $7.2 million, but we have been good, or we shall be in the future; we are not really hurting the have-not provinces too badly; we shall think about them when we negotiate the equalization payments and we might be more generous in return at that time.

Honourable senators, why take all the trouble to legislate if such conflicts can be settled on such friendly terms? The government might as well be saying: We shall now cut off your heads, but you will then be free to do as you please. Thank you, honourable senators.

• (1520)

[English]

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time, I should like to propose a delay. Having read the testimony before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I feel very uneasy about the bill. After listening to Senator Corbin and Senator Thériault yesterday, who share some of my doubts, I feel that we could perhaps sum it up in this way: That the provincial governments are not happy with the switch in fee, which they see as being a switch in tax. I know that fees and taxes are different. However, in my opinion, the minister responsible for communications in Alberta summed it up very well with the following short sentence:

—we feel that an important distinction can and should be made between cost recovery from commercial users of spectrum and those who use the radio frequency spectrum to provide essential public services for non-commercial purposes.

This is an excellent bill for capturing revenue-raising commercial services—fees for use—and I believe that we are all in favour of that. I include in that Petro-Canada, because it is competing with the other oil companies and should have to pay a fee for service for this.

This is proposed as a deficit reduction type of exercise because of a fee for service being charged to and collected from the provincial governments. In other words, the Queen in right of Canada will now collect from the Queen in right of the province, which is a very strange way of raising revenue.

Another aspect of this is that the federal government is bringing forth a new policy in taxation. We are looking forward to tax reform. If this is a switch in emphasis—user pay, and so on, for non-revenue-productive emergency services, ambulance, air-sea rescue—those things which in my province of British Columbia are very expensive, but must be provided for the general public—and a switch in philosophy regarding taxation, which we will hear about in connection with tax reform, could we not delay this bill—which, in my opinion, is a quite unusual way of raising revenue—until we have the government's thinking on tax reform and the paper that will be coming very shortly?

For those two reasons in particular, plus the fact that deficit reduction will not be served—there will simply be a shift in moneys collected to the provinces, but no net reduction in the total deficit of the country—could we not move that this bill be not now read a third time but six months hence? I would so move.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I must go on record as saying that this is a most unusual move by an honourable senator at this time. This bill has been before the other place, examined in committee in the other place, debated in the other place, and passed by the other place. The policy directive of the government in this particular regard has been quite clearly placed and clearly stated, and has been voted on by the majority of the people in the other place. Prior to the bill coming here, it was referred to the Transport and Communications Committee for pre-study and has been before that committee for quite a long while. Representatives from all the provinces were invited to attend. I think representatives from one of the provinces did attend. All provinces have expressed reservations about the bill, to put it mildly. To be more accurate, many of them have expressed grave displeasure with the bill.

The government is aware of all these objections, but, nevertheless, it feels that this is the appropriate way to go at this time. Senator Corbin and Senator Thériault have expressed very eloquently, I think, the concerns of the particular province they represent and, indeed, the concerns of many provinces. The government today has decided that, despite all these objections to the bill, it is the appropriate way to go, and that is the way that they are intending to go. If the Senate wants to frustrate the wishes of the government and the House of Commons in this particular regard, obviously it has every right to do so. I simply point out what I think would be the folly of this particular move at this particular time.

The wishes of the majority of the elected in this country have been very clearly expressed. The Senate has been given ample opportunity to examine this bill. The Transport and Communications Committee has very diligently examined the bill and has invited witnesses from the provinces, the private sector, and other parts of the country to appear. All these things have been done. The form has been established. If the Senate decides that it wants to wait for tax reform, which is a completely separate issue and which will be dealt with by the government in another way at another time, then, obviously, as I said earlier, that is what the Senate can do. I suggest that if the Senate does so, it will be making a terrible mistake at this point.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not want to thwart Senator Bell. Having listened to Senator Corbin, I must say that I have some sympathy for Senator Bell's motion.

Senator Doody: Absolutely.

Senator Frith: However, I am not sure that the motion is in order at third reading. I thought the motion for a six-month hoist was in order at second reading, but I may be wrong. Perhaps we should have a ruling on the matter.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If the motion is in order, the Chair can put the motion for the six-month's hoist. But if no recorded vote is requested, the motion will probably be defeated in the same way as a motion for third reading is adopted, on division. I would say that it is another way of opposing third reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I have been told that it is in order to put this motion at third reading.

Senator Frith: Then it goes against Beauchesne's.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Does any honourable senator wish to speak to the motion itself?

[Senator Doody.]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, my parliamentary experience tells me that this is the ultimate motion a member of Parliament can present to delay or stop the passage of a bill. Beyond this motion there is nothing else but adoption or defeat of a bill.

Senator Frith: On second reading.

Senator Corbin: That is the practice in the other place, and I presume that we are under the same regime here. I believe that the Chair is quite right in assuming that such a motion would be in order at this time, if there is a wish to put it.

Senator Frith: At third reading?

Senator Corbin: Yes.

Senator Frith: And you have known this procedure to be followed at third reading?

Senator Corbin: I do not have Beauchesne's with me, but if I did I could cite it to you chapter and verse.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must reverse my earlier opinion. I refer honourable senators to Beauchesne's at page 225 under the heading "Six Months' Hoist Amendment":

A traditional way of opposing the second reading of a bill is to move an amendment to the question that deletes all the words after the word "that" and substitutes the following:

Bill C-... , An Act... , be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Senator Frith: That's it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I believe that Senator Frith was correct to say that such a motion must be put at second reading stage of a bill, not at third reading stage.

Senator Flynn: It doesn't say that.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, in Beauchesne's parliamentary jurisprudence, on page 225, an item reads as follows:

742. A traditional way of opposing the second reading of a bill is to move an amendment to the question that deletes all the words after the word "That" and substitutes the following:

This implies that it is only on second reading that this motion may be moved.

Honourable senators, I am reading what I see in these texts, but the Senate is always free to make its own decisions.

So if you want me to put Senator Bell's motion before the Senate, I am prepared to do so.

[English]

Do you agree that I put this motion before the Senate now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour, I understood that a ruling had been made that it was inadmissible. Is that correct?

Senator Doody: That is what I heard.

Senator Frith: Your Honour, what motion are you suggesting be put?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Bell's motion, as I just said, must be put at second reading, and therefore I declared that the motion is not in order. I am now asking if honourable senators will adopt the motion for third reading.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL, 1986-87 (No. 2)

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved third reading of Bill C-40, to provide borrowing authority.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I assume that Senator Doody is going to say something to justify the third reading at this time.

Senator Flynn: He doesn't have to.

Senator Stewart: I do not suggest that he has to, but I thought that he might facilitate an understanding of the bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I had thought that the point that had to be made with regard to Bill C-40 and the importance of obtaining passage of this bill today had already been made. I do not want to take up the Senate's time with tedious repetition if I can avoid it. I know that I am entranced with the sound of my own voice, but I had not realized that others shared that pleasure. Therefore, I would prefer to yield to Senator Stewart, and if he has any points or questions that I think I can deal with, I shall certainly try to do so.

● (1540)

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, at the beginning of the fiscal period 1986-87, the government had available to it $24.6 billion of borrowing authority. By February 28, 1987, the government had used $23.5 billion of borrowing authority; the balance available at that time was $1.087 billion.

Bill C-40 is asking for an additional $3.6 billion of authority for the current fiscal year. All this borrowing authority will expire at the end of the fiscal year, except for such amounts as are used in the normal way under section 37 of the Financial Administration Act, together with all sums used in the abnormal way under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

Before this bill was brought forward the government found that the borrowing authority available to it was inadequate, we were told today, because of a need to buy U.S. dollars to smooth foreign exchange operations. We were told that the government makes no estimate as to its borrowing requirement for purposes of smoothing foreign exchange operations; that, indeed, it is impossible to make estimates of the borrowing authority that may be required for that purpose. That is certainly a very important piece of information. It means that on going into a fiscal year there is great uncertainty as to the borrowing authority that may be required throughout the course of that year.

In the same way that money borrowed for foreign exchange operations draws down money available for domestic debt operations, foreign exchange operations may make additional money available for domestic debt operations since these two operations depend upon the same pool of borrowing authority. When more money is required for the foreign exchange operation, it reduces the amount available for domestic purposes. However, on the other hand, when money no longer is required for those operations, the amount available to the Crown for financing its domestic programs will increase.

We were then told that, in fact, the amount of borrowing authority available to the Crown is not of primary importance. What is important, we were told, is the parliamentary authorization to spend money, whether that money has gone into the Consolidated Revenue Fund as a result of taxation, of interest from government loans, or from borrowing.

Honourable senators, that is a proposition that was put before the committee this morning—not by the minister but by one of his advisers. That is a proposition which is of very dubious validity. It is far easier for any parliament to spend money than to raise it. If you rely upon spending authorization as a restraint upon foolish expenditure, you are relying upon a very weak restraint.

Further, it is far easier to raise money by borrowing than by increasing taxation. That is a truth which has been recognized again and again since 1694 when the Bank of England was created and the British initiated their national debt. It is much easier to engage in expenditure if the money you are spending is money that has been brought in by relatively painless borrowing than by painful taxation. Therefore, it is cause for uneasiness to be told that we should rely upon parliamentary control of spending as the principal guarantee that government programs will be well advised. I find that line of thinking quite disturbing.

Another matter which came to the fore in the committee meeting this morning related to the procedural problems with regard to these borrowing authority bills. There are those who like to refer to them as "logistic" problems. The minister used that expression in the hearing, and it appealed to some members of the committee. I believe that it was Senator Sinclair who insisted that we should use the very words of the minister, but I may be wrong on that point. In any case, the point was made that procedural problems, which border in this instance on constitutional problems, would not have arisen if Part I of the bill had been introduced as a separate bill just as soon as the government realized that additional borrowing authority would be required for fiscal 1986-87.

The response that was given was that it is the firm policy of this government that the budget—which implies one annual budget—will be presented in February at about the time the spending estimates for the forthcoming fiscal year are presented to Parliament. Further, that Part II of the borrowing authority bill shows the financial requirements which flow from the budget.

This argument does not meet the objection that a separate bill should have been introduced covering Part I. When that was pointed out, we were told by the minister that the requirements for the two years are related. Honourable senators, that is so obvious that I do not know that it tells us very much. We are all accustomed to dealing with continua in manageable pieces. For example, we get our pay once a month, and, of course, what one gets in one month relates to what one gets in the next, but that does not mean that we have to get all the money at once. I find that a very weak argument; it is one that does not impress me at all.

● (1550)

We were also told by the minister, as an aside, that it is easier to get one bill through Parliament than it is to get two bills through Parliament. That is a specious argument. My experience with borrowing authority bills, which is not very long, but I combine it with a review of parliamentary problems with borrowing authority bills—going back to Mr. Chrétien's bill in the fall of 1979—tells me that the previous government and this government have had difficulty with borrowing authority bills, not because of the amounts involved but because of procedural problems, procedural problems which border on constitutional problems.

Those were the kinds of arguments that were made by Mr. Wilson when he was sitting on the other side of the House of Commons. New variations have come up, but for the most part the difficulties have related not to the amounts—although, of course, oppositions insist that the government is borrowing too much, but that, in a sense, is taken for granted and has not been the principal onus of the criticism. The principal complaints have been with regard to procedure, procedure bordering, as I said, on constitutional problems. I am not at all convinced that it is easier to get one borrowing authority bill through Parliament than it is to get two borrowing authority bills through Parliament.

I think the truth of the matter is that if the government were more candid and, indeed, did not give parliamentarians the impression that it was trying somehow or another to put something over, and that it was not putting pressure on parliamentarians to agree to the entire package because one part happened to be urgent, there would be less trouble. The minister did not convince me on that point at all.

Regarding what I regard as the offensive wording of clause 2(2) of Part I of this bill—the part of the bill which, if passed, would have the effect of giving prior approval to the increase in the total borrowing authority by the amount by which the government had used section 39 of the Financial Administration Act—I raised this question this morning with the minister. He told the committee that he thought that the purpose of the provision was very good, that it introduced a sunset provision for all the borrowing authority that had not been used. However, he did not address the fact that any borrowing that has taken place under section 39 is going to become a permanent increase in the stream of borrowing authority. The minister seemed to have difficulty in coping with what clause 2(2) of Part I of the bill means.

If one refers to section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, it becomes clear why the government is allowed to borrow in this way only on a temporary basis. Section 39 states:

Where it appears to the Governor in Council that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be insufficient to meet the disbursements lawfully authorized to be made from it, the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister to borrow . . . for a period not exceeding six months, an amount not exceeding such amount as he deems necessary to ensure that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be sufficient to meet those disbursements.

The safeguard is “may authorize the Minister to borrow . . . for a period not exceeding six months.” That is, in a sense, a provision for emergencies. There is a limitation on the capacity to borrow to meet an emergency.

I know that side notes are not part of the law, but it is worth noting that the side note reads “Temporary loans.” Yet, when one looks at Bill C-40, one sees that a borrowing made under the terms of section 39, in this instance, is not going to be a temporary loan, it will be a permanent loan. It is a permanent increase in the borrowing authority authorized by Parliament.

Consequently, I suggested to the minister that, in effect, he is arguing that the Financial Administration Act should be amended. Indeed, it is being amended in this specific instance.

The time may well have come when we have to ask ourselves if the Department of Finance is correct in thinking that the amount of borrowing authority available to the Minister of Finance is really insignificant, in which case, I suppose, we can get rid of section 39. Is it indeed the truth that we can rely upon parliamentary control of expenditure? That seems to be the line of thinking that the Department of Finance now endorses; at least as it was put forward in the committee this morning.

This is a very important new departure in the regime of parliamentary government. I propose that when Mr. Hockin has his group together, this should be one of the questions on which the members of that group should focus.

Certainly nothing we heard on this aspect of the bill removed any of my doubts as to what is being done here. What I heard this morning with regard to the amount was reassuring, but with regard to the procedure of authorizing borrowing, it was quite disturbing.

As Senator MacEachen has said, we have been put in a position where the Senate—and that includes all of us, not just those of us who happen to be uneasy about these matters—will have to vote in favour of this motion or cause a disruption. The government has mismanaged its request for borrowing authority. It has mismanaged parliamentary management of its request, nevertheless we are now in a situation where the government has invited bids due tomorrow at noon, so the consequences will be fairly serious if we do not pass the bill.

[Senator Stewart.]

● (1600)

In one way one feels as if one were being held up by a terrorist. Honourable senators know that this is an exaggeration, but it is as if they are saying: Unless you yield to our demand, we will blow up the plane and it will be your fault! This statement produces the same emotion we feel when we are being pushed against the wall in this way. Some of us resent the kind of pressure under which, for one reason or another, the Senate as a whole finds itself this afternoon.

Honourable senators, those are the causes of my difficulty with the bill and with the situation in which we have been placed by the motion moved this afternoon.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, there is one point where I agree with Senator Stewart. It would be far better if Parliament's legislative calendar were organized in such a way that bills would not reach the Senate at the very last minute as so often happens with bills like this one.

It is not just a government problem, it is a problem for Parliament. It depends a lot on the Opposition in the other place, irrespective of the party in power.

I think a meeting as suggested by the minister this morning might produce some good results. Of course I sympathize with Senator Stewart's problem because I had the same experience when we were sitting on the other side of this chamber.

However, I must say that the other objections raised by Senator Stewart are on the whole extremely tenuous and even negligible. At times I had the impression he was nit-picking, and I think his interpretation of subsection 2(2) of this bill is completely erroneous and suggests he did not understand what the official explained to us this morning in committee.

The purpose of this request for a borrowing authority of $3.6 billion is connected with the problems of foreign exchange operations. Requirements became evident during the month of January. The government was obliged to resort to section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to take out temporary loans which it must pay back within six months. If it does not, it must obtain the permission of Parliament.

What the government did in February, as suggested in subsection 2(2), was to borrow, I don't remember exactly what the figure was, but let us say one billion or more on a short-term basis, for a period of six months. If the borrowing authority did not allow for borrowing to reimburse this amount even after the beginning of the new fiscal year, if the borrowing authority was used up by March 31, the government would be obliged to borrow immediately to pay back the loan that did not become due until several months later, which of course would involve additional costs.

The act, and the official made this very clear, was very specific on that point, so that Parliament knows exactly what the Department of Finance will do with a loan contracted under section 39. That is why the act says: except to the extent that the purpose is to pay back temporary loans contracted under section 39 between February 18 and March 31, 1987. It just means that the government is not required to use up its borrowing authority right away to pay back its temporary loans and can use it after April 1 as well.

In any case, the authority cannot be exercised much later than six months from today. There is no mystery there, but it is probably the first time we have seen this wording. Actually, the problem, if there is one, is a technical one. It is not a constitutional problem, nor is it a problem of substance.

In fact, the only point worth considering is whether pressure was put on the Senate. I do not think it was as bad as was suggested yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition or today by Senator Stewart. In any event, it would be better for the Senate to have more time in certain cases to study the legislation, whatever the subject, and perhaps more so for this kind of bill, which often arrives at the last minute, because in the case of the present bill there is a deadline, and this also applies to the Estimates and the three bills on the Estimates we received today. It is a problem that has been with us for a long time and that we have tried to correct over the years, without success. Perhaps this time, the action promised by Mr. Hockin will produce results.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1

25 March 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 25th day of March, 1987, at 5:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

THE ESTIMATES, 1986-87

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Supplementary Estimates (C) 1986-87) presented in the Senate on March 24, 1987.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Kelly, I move the adoption of the report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do have some questions to ask Senator Kelly who, unfortunately, is not in the chamber. As a matter of fact, I told him that I wanted to ask him some questions about this report. Perhaps Senator Doody can answer them. It is important that we understand clearly what we are adopting now, because if we get satisfactory answers on the report, then that leads us to what seems to me to be a reduction of debate on the bill itself. Senator Kelly did tell me that he had some time constraints. I will tell you what questions I asked him arising out of the report.

I should by way of background say that if you read the transcript of the evidence given to the committee when it was examining Supplementary Estimates (C), you will see that, as usual, there were concerns about $1 votes. There was concern about the writing off of some debts in Newfoundland and in several other places.

All of these concerns were caught to some extent in the last paragraph under the heading, "The Form of the Estimates". That states:

While the Committee is aware that vote transfers do not increase the expenditures of a department as a whole, they do reflect a divergence in the way money has been appropriated to that department. The Committee concluded that information on vote transfers, showing the amount of increase and decrease for each vote should be displayed clearly in the table for each department and in the summary tables. Treasury Board officials concurred that the form of the supplementary estimates was not conducive to an easy understanding of vote transfers, and indicated that they will be reviewing the entire way these estimates are presented. The Committee indicated its interest in this and requested that any proposed format changes be sent to its members before they were finalized; this was agreed to by Treasury Board officials.

I asked Senator Kelly to give us some detail as to the timing of the review. He was able to give us an undertaking on the borrowing authority to the effect that the government was giving some pledges that it would be reviewing some procedures or logistics before the next borrowing authority bill comes to us. It would be useful and encouraging to have some undertaking that the review, that is, "the entire way the estimates are presented" in the fourth paragraph on page 2, has been given some time schedule.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Honourable senators, perhaps my putting on the record what Senator Kelly said to me in response to my questions is an unusual way of proceeding, but he did say that he and the committee were concerned about follow-up in general, quite beyond this concern, and wanted to clarify for the committee how it followed up on this sort of undertaking and on this sort of promise. That, I suppose, we can accept as at least a partial answer in that the committee does not intend to forget about it.

The other question I wanted to ask Senator Kelly relates to the last paragraph on page 2 of the report under the heading, "General Accounting Practices of the Government of Canada". That paragraph states:

Senators asked a number of questions regarding general accounting principles of the Government of Canada. These ranged from the definition of non-budgetary expenditures and the consistency in allocating expenditures as budgetary or non-budgetary items, to whether accounts receivable should be included as part of the assets of the Government of Canada.

I raised that point earlier. It goes on to state:

While no specific conclusions were reached, the Committee reminded Treasury Board officials of its long-standing interest in this area and the possibility of it conducting a more detailed examination of the matter at a later date.

I want some explanation as to the timing on that so that this will not be a recurring problem. His answer to that was the same as his answer on the other point, namely, that he means to inquire of the committee as to how it follows up undertakings of this kind, and whether they just receive them and forget about them until the next time they come around.

Assuming that Senator Kelly had given the answers on the record that he gave me when I spoke to him a few moments ago, that is all I want to put on the record with regard to the report on the Supplementary Estimates (C).

In that context, I believe we should support the adoption of the report.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not know if I can answer adequately the questions Senator Frith has raised at this point, but if I cannot I shall certainly undertake to get more information for him for tomorrow.

With regard to the general accounting practices of the Government of Canada and the interest shown by the committee in that particular area of concern, Senator Kelly was absolutely correct in saying that the question was asked and no time frame was put on it. My understanding is that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is seriously considering a study of the accounting practices of the government as a topic to be considered by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance when it has completed its study. That has been suggested as one of the avenues that could properly be explored by the committee. The general accounting practices of the Government of Canada are a mystery to many of us, and I suspect they are a mystery to many of the people in the various departments as well. How they handle government assets and how depreciation works in terms of accounting practices and so on may puzzle many.

With regard to a follow-up generally, I really do not share Senator Kelly's concern that the Treasury Board people have not been forthcoming. I think the contrary has been true. I think they have been remarkably forthcoming in providing information that has been asked for. In fact, the very detail and form of the reports that are now being submitted to this chamber by the committee are a direct result of representations to Treasury Board for more information. I think that department has been very cooperative in supplying answers to questions raised by senators in committee and in the Senate. I mentioned again in committee this morning that some of the format now used by the Department of Finance was instituted at the suggestion of that particular standing Senate committee.

● (1620)

I believe that Senator Frith also asked for some detail on the write-offs of debt owed to government by various concerns such as one in Newfoundland, which, perhaps not strangely, pops into my mind. It is the debt owed to the Government of Canada by Newfoundland Refining and Shaheen Natural Resources in terms of the wharf at Come-By-Chance. It seems at this point that that debt will not likely be recovered. In committee, some explanation was given as to the procedures followed in accepting a recommendation that a debt be written off. Apparently, it is quite a complicated procedure. No department can write off a debt of its own volition but, rather, must get the authority of Treasury Board before that can be done. There are procedures followed in trying to exact payment of that debt before such authority can be given.

I realize that that answer is not adequate in terms of the entire item in the Supplementary Estimates (C), but I can certainly attempt to get a more comprehensive answer for Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Doody misunderstood what I said as I quoted Senator Kelly, or perhaps I did not do so adequately. Senator Kelly's concern was not that the representatives of the Treasury Board were not forthcoming. His concern was simply that when they are forthcoming—particularly in making certain undertakings such as reviewing “the entire way these estimates are presented”—we should ask what mechanism the committee has to follow up with them. He did not mean to be critical.

Senator Doody: I take the point and regret that it was my misunderstanding. I will certainly try to trace that down, as well.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 5, 1986-87

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved second reading of Bill C-47, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-47 provides supply for all of Supplementary Estimates (C) for 1986-87. The final supplementary estimates for this year total approximately $596.3 million and bring the total tabled estimates for 1986-87 to $108.5 billion. Supplementary estimates represent less than 2 per cent of the main estimates levels for the year.

These estimates were tabled in the Senate on March 10, 1987, and were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on that same day. The estimates were discussed in committee with Treasury Board officials on March 19, 1987, and we have just dealt with the report of that committee.

The total of $596.3 million consists of a net increase in statutory requirements of some $13.7 million, and some $582.6 million of new spending authority is being recommended to Parliament for approval.

As was indicated to the committee, the proposed increase in the statutory requirements consists of the following major items: $275 million in statutory expenditures for public debt charges, bringing the total estimates of public debt payments for 1986-87 to $27,275 million; a $184 million reduction in the forecast of statutory payments made by the Department of National Health and Welfare under federal-provincial fiscal arrangements; a $116 million reduction in the forecast of statutory payments for post-secondary education; a $113 million reduction in the forecast of statutory spouse's allowance payments, and a $111 million increase in statutory requirements to cover the Post Office operating deficit.

Honourable senators, the new spending authority being recommended includes the following major items: $202.7 million for reimbursement to the Canadian Wheat Board for the 1985-86 barley, wheat and oats pool accounts deficits; $103 million for the Post Office to cover costs for capital and deferred charges, and $99 million for the Post Office for special purposes.

There are some 35 $1 votes in these supplementary estimates. A listing of these votes, containing additional explanations for the last eight, was provided to members of the Senate committee. These votes were discussed with Treasury Board officials at the committee meeting of March 19, 1987.

I have here, honourable senators, the estimates tabled to date for 1986-87, along with the supply to date for 1986-87. I would ask that these two tables be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For tables, see Appendix “B”, p. 758.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I will not take original authorship rights to what I am about to say because Senator Flynn and others have said the same thing, that the procedure we customarily follow in the Senate is to make detailed examinations of the material that goes into appropriation bills at the time of the tabling of the estimates and their reference to committee. Unless the committee has some negative things to say, and after taking into account whatever it does have to say in its report, my recollection and experience is that we normally do not spend a great deal of time on appropriation bills.

I suppose that at this stage we can identify some concerns. The most featured item is, of course, the amount of money that we continue to spend servicing the debt. I cannot criticize this government any more effectively than senators opposite could have criticized the previous government for the same thing, but I believe that it is worth emphasizing how much money is required each year simply to service that debt.

The documents that Senator Doody has asked to have printed as an appendix seem to be the same as those provided to the committee. I went through those carefully with the minutes of the proceedings of that committee. Taking into account what we have said about the committee's report, the points emphasized today, and Senator Doody's comments, and considering that we have been given, both in the committee and in this chamber, a breakdown of the supply to date, I feel that we should give the bill second reading now and, if it is requested, third reading, as well. In so doing, we can clean up last year's estimates by giving the bill Royal Assent later today.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

● (1630)

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

ELEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Dental Care Plan) presented in the Senate on Thursday, March 19, 1987.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I made some comments when this report was introduced, and yesterday, when commenting further on the plan, I mentioned that the relevant booklet was being circulated and gave warning that I would be asking that the report be adopted today. I therefore move that the report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Frith.]

Motion agreed to and report adopted.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5:45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the National Archives of Canada and records of government institutions of Canada and to amend other Acts in relation thereto (Bill C-7, Chapter 1, 1987)

An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act (Bill C-12, Chapter 2, 1987)

An Act to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments (Bill C-6, Chapter 3, 1987)

An Act to amend the Radio Act (Bill C-3, Chapter 4, 1987)

An Act to provide borrowing authority (Bill C-40, Chapter 5, 1987)

The Honourable Marcel Danis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1987 (Bill C-47, Chapter 6, 1987)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

THE HONOURABLE AZELLUS DENIS, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we adjourn, I would like to extend birthday wishes to Senator Denis, who is 80 years old today. I was hoping that he would be present in the chamber. He left the chamber when members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee left for their committee meeting, and I assume that he is at that meeting. In any event, we cannot really mark the day tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: It is tomorrow.

Senator Frith: I thought his birthday was today. That is why, even though he is absent from the chamber, we should note it today.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I think it is also worth noting that Senator Denis is the Dean of Parliament. He has been here without interruption since 1935, which is, I believe, the longest tenure that anybody in the history of the Canadian Parliament has been able to achieve. However, the Canadian Parliamentary Guide may be in error, since upon checking it I noticed that it mentions that Senator Denis' birthday is on March 26.

Senator Frith: But the honourable senator should know, too, because I shook his hand, wished him a happy birthday, and he replied, "Thank you." I am sure that we can get it straightened out in due course.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, if we are honouring Senator Denis, it should also be remembered that when he was Postmaster General, the postage rate for first class mail was 3 cents, and I think that is to his credit. My suggestion to the government is that it might be wise to put him back in office as Postmaster General to get the Post Office operating again!

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE

WEDNESDAY, March 25, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-39, An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, 12th March, 1987, proceeded with that study and now reports without amendment but with the following comments.

Bill C-39 is identical to Bill C-75, tabled during the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament, except that clause 4 of the latter, which dealt with charges in relation to services performed by the Canadian Coast Guard, has been deleted. It will be remembered that your Committee conducted a study of the subject matter of Bill C-75. In the course of that study, it has held seven public meetings and has heard evidence from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, officials from the federal Department of Transport, and representatives from the Industry and Canadian ports; it has also heard evidence from the Great Lakes Commission of Ann Arbor, Michigan (see Appendix for the complete list of witnesses). Your Committee also held a public meeting on March 17, 1987 to hear evidence from officials of the federal Department of Transport and the Statute Revision Commission.

Your Committee would like to draw attention to the fact that, following the adoption of Bill C-39, measures in the Canada Shipping Act will be expressed sometimes in accordance with the imperial system, sometimes in accordance with the metric system. New sections of Bill C-39 add to the Canada Shipping Act use the metric system (see, for instance, proposed sections 109 (1), 635.14, 635.19 (1), 746, 752, 785 (1) (f), 789 (1) (b)). Sections of the Act which already use the imperial system will continue to do so. An official from the statute Revision Commission testified that this inconsistency will not be corrected by the Commission in the course of the work of the Commission aimed, among other things, at preserving "a uniform mode of expression" in federal statutes. The Commission considers that conversion of measures contained in federal statutes from one system to another is beyond its jurisdiction.

Your Committee notes that the Canada Shipping Act, after the adoption of Bill C-39, will inconsistently use both the imperial and metric systems. Thus, it is the opinion of your Committee that action should be taken by Parliament to remedy this inconsistency; since Bill C-39 proposes to introduce the use of the metric system in the sections it adds to the Canada Shipping Act, it is the opinion of your Committee that all measures in the Act should be expressed in accordance with the metric system.

During the hearings your Committee held on the subject-matter of Bill C-75, the organization representing the Inuit testified about their concerns regarding the impact on the environment and wildlife as more and more ships sail the Arctic waters. Representations were made as to the possibility of providing in the Canada Shipping Act for Inuit guides on board to direct those ships.

Neither the existing Act nor Bill C-39 deal with this matter. It is the opinion of your Committee that Inuit guides on board those ships could make a significant contribution to the protection of the environment and wildlife of the area of the country they live in and know very well. Thus, your Committee favours that the Act so provides. However, should Parliament in the future consider incorporating in the Canada Shipping Act a provision in relation to Inuit guides, your Committee thinks that the role of those guides should be limited to advising the masters and that in no way the authority of masters of ships should be lessened by the presence on board of Inuit acting as guides. This point of view has been discussed with the Inuit's representative during the hearings your Committee held on the subject-matter of Bill C-75, and we have been told that it is "a very acceptable suggestion".

Another point your Committee feels it is necessary to comment upon the fact that Bill C-39 contains numerous clauses enabling the Governor in Council to make regulations. Your Committee notes that amendments to the original version of bill C-75 were made so that proposed regulations would be published in the Canada Gazette at least 90 days before the effective date thereof, and a reasonable opportunity within those 90 days shall be afforded to interested persons to make representations to the Minister with respect thereto. Your Committee acknowledges that this procedure, by allowing interested persons to make representations before regulations are adopted, ensures that a formal consultation takes place at the appropriate moment. However, your Committee thinks that Parliament, when it delegates to the Government broad powers to legislate by regulations, should have a means of expressing its opinion on the public policies contained in regulations made pursuant to enabling clauses. Thus, your Committee is of the opinion that when proposed regulations are intended to be adopted pursuant to the delegated legislation-making powers provided for in Bill C-39, they be referred to your Committee for study, as was done in the case of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations. This, according to your Committee, ensures not only that Parliament will be involved in the process leading to important measures regarding, for instance, safety at sea and the environment, but also that a public debate involving interested persons takes place.

Respectfully submitted,

LÉOPOLD LANGLOIS

Chairman

FELICITATIONS ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY—EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, as I was reading yesterday's Senate debates I realized that good wishes were expressed on the occasion of my birthday.

[English]

I would like to say just a few words of appreciation to my deputy leader, to the former Leader of the Government in the Senate and to the former Mayor of Saskatoon, Senator Buckwold, for the good words they had to say about me. I hope that those good words and good wishes will be realized as they have been in the past 50 years. However, I am afraid that the same happy results will be a little harder to obtain during the next 50 years. I am sure that those who spoke about me so highly represent the old House of Commons, and I thank you all for those comments. I am grateful to you. Merci beaucoup.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs respecting power to incur special expenses pursuant to the procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 777.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Macquarrie, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION YUKON ASSETS DISPOSAL AUTHORIZATION

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-45 TABLED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, tabled the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting the subject matter of Bill C-45, to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the committee's Twelfth Report.

[Senator Denis.]

Thursday, March 26, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee is presently undertaking a review of the budgetary situation pertaining to Senate Committees.

Your Committee therefore recommends that, notwithstanding the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees adopted on March 26, 1986, for any committee budget for the financial year 1987-88 submitted to and approved by the Internal Economy Committee, your Committee be authorized to release no more than 3/12 of those approved funds until the end of June 1987.

Respectfully submitted,

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, now. I shall explain.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, since the Internal Economy Committee has to wait until all of the committee budgets are in to get a perspective as to how the various budgets fit with the global amount available, the committee recommends that when it approves these year-long projections, the committees be permitted to spend only three-twelfths, that is, the first three months of the budget's allocation between April 1 and June 30.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this time I usually move the motion for adjournment. I am in a bit of a quandary on this particular occasion because of uncertainty relating to Bill C-38, the Teleglobe bill.

We had been led to believe that that bill would be out of the House of Commons this afternoon; on the other hand, we have been led to believe that the bill may not be out of the House of Commons this afternoon, hence the quandary.

I suggest that the bill be dealt with as promptly as possible once it is before the Senate, as the government is most anxious to conclude the transaction before the end of the fiscal year, presumably to get the value of the asset into the current account for the present fiscal year rather than for the next fiscal year. My understanding is that while our not getting the bill—and I want to be perfectly honest about this—by March 31 will not jeopardize the deal itself, it will upset the financial plans of the government.

Whether we should meet tomorrow to deal with the bill, or whether we should meet on Monday to deal with the bill, or whether we should meet on Tuesday to deal with the bill—if there is agreement to deal with the bill on Tuesday—whatever the Senate decided to do in that regard would be fine. I know that the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce would like to examine the bill as amended. I understand that that committee is willing to meet on Tuesday morning, if that suits the general strategy of the Senate as a whole.

Perhaps as the afternoon progresses we can talk further, either inside the chamber or outside the chamber, with respect to how we should proceed.

I ask leave of the Senate to revert to Notices of Motions later this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is agreeable. Of course, if we do receive the bill, and the government feels it should be dealt with tomorrow and/or Monday, then we will meet in accordance with that call.

My information is that the bill will not receive third reading in the other place until sometime next week. Nevertheless, it is reasonable to stand the question of adjournment until later this afternoon when we might have more information.

Hon. Senators: Agreed

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as you are aware, Senator Murray is attending the First Ministers' Conference today and will not be here. I will take notice of any questions honourable senators may have and attempt to get answers as promptly as I can.

● (1410)

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—COURSES ON RESERVES— LEVEL OF FUNDING

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, as Senator Doody has noted, there is an important federal-provincial conference on aboriginal rights and self-government progressing in Ottawa today. We hope that it will progress to an historic agreement for self-government for our aboriginal peoples.

It has been brought to my attention—and to the attention of some of my colleagues—by native spokesmen this week that there is great concern about the level of funding for off-campus post-secondary education courses on reserves.

Honourable senators, nothing is more important for the future of native people than the best possible educational opportunity for both the young and the adults.

I would like to give Senator Doody notice that we will be asking questions about this when Senator Murray returns to the Senate next week.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Thank you.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GREEK-TURKISH RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if he would be kind enough to get some information about a meeting that occurred in Turkey not long ago at which the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Turkey met with the ambassadors of NATO countries and handed them a note—according to some reports I have had—in which he alleged that Greece was planning an attack on Turkey. Greece has a population of 9 million people; Turkey has a population of 45 million people. In this note he also laid claims to Greek territorial waters and to air space over Greece. The Turks are getting nervous over this, as are the Greeks. It is a delicate situation; they do not get along terribly well, as you know.

Could the Deputy Leader of the Government give us some information at an opportune but not too distant moment in the future and assure us that the Government of Canada is using its good offices to calm the situation and to ensure that two allies do not quarrel with one another?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make every effort to determine if such a series of events took place as described, and to obtain any other information that I can.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATIONS FROM DEPARTMENT TO PARLIAMENTARIANS— ORDER OF PRECEDENCE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week, I indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs seemed to show little consideration for the Senate. Senator Doody will remember that I particularly focused on an invitation which was addressed to "Members of Parliament and Senators".

At the time, the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicated that he would certainly seek an explanation from the Government as to the break in order of precedence.

Well, today I received another invitation dated March 23rd, 1987, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that is also addressed to "All Members of Parliament and Senators". I should like to quote briefly part of the first sentence:

Members of Parliament and Senators and their staff are invited to attend a lecture on Francophonie and the forthcoming Quebec Summit——which will be given on Tuesday, March 31st, 1987, at 9:30.

What I objected to last week, and I object to it again today, is this pattern which the Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to be developing. I am not saying that Joe Clark, the Right Honourable Secretary of State himself, is behind this attempt at lowering the prestige of this chamber. Yet, I do not see how this new way of addressing senators could be interpreted differently. It is an underhanded attempt at lowering the prestige of this honourable institution.

Don't they realize at the Department of External Affairs that when they try to minimize the importance of the honourable Senate in the legislative process, they are attacking Parliament and jeopardizing its prestige. How long will this kind of thing be allowed to continue?

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I remember very well Senator Corbin bringing this matter to our attention a little while ago. Notice was sent to the department signifying Senator Corbin's concern.

This morning when I saw this invitation from the department, I immediately thought of Senator Corbin's question of a couple of weeks ago and made a further inquiry. As yet, I have not received an answer. I am certain that no slight is intended to the Senate, but, nevertheless, I take Senator Corbin's point, and I will make a further inquiry to get a formal explanation.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I am not the one who is being slighted. The Senate is being slighted, because this practice has been going on for some time. This is the third time I have raised the matter in approximately one year; and this is the second time in less than a week that such a situation has arisen. It is almost as if one could conclude that this is being done in spite of the remarks I made last week with respect to this whole matter.

I repeat again: The Department of External Affairs is supposed to be steeped in protocol—the proper way of doing things—and in diplomacy. Why do they persist in this practice of not recognizing, first and foremost, the place of the Senate in the overall parliamentary institution? Why do they keep on doing this? Is this part of the attempt to erode the credibility of the Senate? Are they also part of that game? If so, we ought to know.

[Senator Corbin.]

Senator Doody: I will pass Senator Corbin's concern on to the department again.

[Translation]

[Later]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I neglected just now, when I questioned the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to mention to him that, in French, the invitation to all MPs and senators was addressed to "Messieurs les députés et sénateurs . . .". Don't they know at External Affairs that there are women in both the Senate and the House of Commons. What is the matter with them?

[English]

Senator Doody: I will certainly take note of that, as well, honourable senators.

TRANSPORT

CANADIAN AIRPORTS—FIREFIGHTING FACILITIES— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some time ago I asked a question about firefighting facilities at Canadian airports and was assured by the Leader of the Government in the Senate that we were following all the regulations, and that we were keeping in place all the people that were required to make sure that our airports were safe.

Developments in the last few weeks have shown that that is not the case. In fact, I believe that the airport in Regina closes at ten o'clock at night, and for any plane, which lands after that time, there are no firefighting facilities.

Honourable senators, previously I worked as an airport firefighter when I worked in the fire department in the Yukon, and I find it strange that if we are going to cut funding, we should cut it in this area. It seems to me, from the reports that are coming out, that someone—either the government or the people representing the firefighters—is not telling the truth.

● (1420)

Is there some way we can finally get to the bottom of this to find out just what is the situation? Anyone who would suggest that one firefighter with one of those big trucks is sufficient to protect a wide-bodied aircraft when landing is just fooling himself. I was in Vancouver yesterday, and going into the airport there are at least four commissionaires guiding the traffic, whether it exists or not, yet, when an aircraft is landing, there is only one firefighter and one truck on the scene. It seems to me that we have our priorities confused.

Could the deputy leader initiate some action that would get us the answers? Are the airports being properly protected? I do not think they are. I think we should be provided with the answer to that question.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly convey Senator Lucier's concerns to the department and try to get an answer as quickly as possible.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS—SCHEDULE OF MEETINGS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Deputy Leader of the Government is taking notice of these questions, he might take notice of my interest in receiving a schedule of the negotiation meetings that have been and will be held between Canada and France on the fisheries and boundaries pursuant to the agreement that was recently made.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly make an inquiry on the senator's behalf.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION
INDUSTRYSYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PLAN—STATUS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Graham on March 25 dealing with the modernization plan of the Sydney Steel Corporation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Would you please read it?

Senator Doody: Certainly.

The 157 million dollar allocation for the Sydney Steel Corporation modernization plan was approved by the Treasury Board in June of 1986, subject to approval of the Business Plan.

The final summary of the Comprehensive Business Plan for Phase Two of the modernization was received last week by the Government. The Business Plan is now being discussed by officials of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in consultation with the company, and will be the subject of a submission by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to Treasury Board. This procedure was detailed in the sub-agreement when it was entered into last year.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is unable at the moment to state an exact date for completion of this process but the honourable senator can be assured that the government is proceeding as expeditiously as possible.

Senator MacEachen: Could the Leader of the Government tell us whether, in addition to the procedure with respect to the approval of the business plan, there was struck a special committee of the cabinet to deal with the business plan? There has been a report to that effect. I would like to know whether that is the case, and, if so, who the members of the committee are.

Senator Doody: I do not have that information now, senator, but I will certainly make an inquiry.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the third reading of Bill C-39, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have some questions for the sponsor of the bill arising out of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. The first paragraph deals with the question of charges in relation to services performed by the Coast Guard, and that had been deleted. The next paragraph deals with certain measures in the Canada Shipping Act which:

—will be expressed sometimes in accordance with the imperial system, sometimes in accordance with the metric system.

It goes on to say:

Sections of the Act which already use the imperial system will continue to do so. An official from the Statute Revision Commission testified that this inconsistency will not be corrected by the commission in the course of the work of the commission aimed, among other things, at preserving "a uniform mode of expression" in federal statutes. The commission considers that conversion of measures contained in federal statutes from one system to another is beyond its jurisdiction.

That leaves dangling the question of whether someone else should be dealing with it. The commission thinks that it is beyond its jurisdiction, namely, the question of measures contained in federal statutes. Was the committee satisfied with that, or did it obtain some undertaking that someone with jurisdiction would look into it; or was the committee satisfied that these inconsistencies should continue?

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, since the bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, Senator Langlois has conducted two meetings, and the matters to which Senator Frith refers were, of course, paramount on the agenda. There were a couple of others. On the use of both metric and imperial units in the same legislation, we were advised by officials of the Coast Guard and the Statute Revision Commission that while it may appear untidy, there was no reason nor was there any evidence to support the notion that the two-measurement system would cause problems to the shipping community.

Also—and this probably bears more on the honourable senator's question—there were no legal implications from there being two sets of units in the same statute. Indeed, there were many examples within the Canadian government where metric and imperial units appear in the same legislation. As a matter of fact, I believe it was Senator Thériault who asked for specific examples of where the two units appear in the same legislation. They found it in the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Hazardous Products Act, the National Parks Act, and the Canada Shipping Act; and, of course, they maintain that any conversion to all imperial or to all metric would be very time-consuming and both inconvenient and expensive to the shipping community. There were other examples given as to what the consequences of that would be.

Mr. Lionel Levert, who is with the Statutes Revision Commission, reported to us that the Statutes Revision Commission did not have legislative authority to require that all existing statutes or amendments to the statutes be only in metric units, that imperial units can continue to be used if legislators so decide. There is no authority for total conversion to metric.

Senator Frith: I agree that that is what the committee said—that the commission felt that way; but I understood that the committee was not satisfied with that. The report says:

Your Committee notes that the Canada Shipping Act, after the adoption of Bill C-39, will inconsistently use both the imperial and metric systems. Thus, it is the opinion of your Committee

I am not talking about the commission:

—that action should be taken by Parliament to remedy this inconsistency; since Bill C-39 proposes to introduce the use of the metric system in the sections it adds to the Canada Shipping Act, it is the opinion of your Committee that all measures in the Act should be expressed in accordance with the metric system.

So apparently the committee was not satisfied that this should continue, and my question is: Did you get any undertakings from the minister or from the government that they are going to do anything about it?

Senator MacDonald: The answer, of course, is that we did not, nor did we seek them. I would say that while I agree totally with the report of the committee, I regard that particular section as holding out a pious hope that eventually something will be done. Of course, there are references to the international conventions on tonnage which will take place in 1994, and which will seek to remove a number of these inconsistencies.

● (1430)

Senator Frith: Then, to understand that paragraph on the basis of what the honourable senator has said, I take it that the committee decided to stay with pious hopes and not get any undertakings. I think I heard the honourable senator rightly when he said that he did not seek any undertakings. So this paragraph is to be taken as a pious hope, and we cannot expect that the government will do anything about the committee's dissatisfaction with these inconsistencies.

Senator MacDonald: Senator Frith, I would not want to associate myself with unhappiness or anxiety with regard to that particular matter. The consequences of these particular changes are enormous and will only be accomplished over a long number of years, and even then there is some suggestion that both systems will still be used. But we did not try to impress upon the government nor did we seek any undertaking that such a course would be taken.

Senator Frith: So, in effect, the answer to my question is yes. In other words, because of the difficulties, although the committee is not satisfied and although, in the opinion of the Senate committee, all measures in the act should be expressed in accordance with the metric system, that is the end of it as far as we are concerned, and nobody will do anything about it. The next paragraph reads:

During the hearings your Committee held on the subject-matter of Bill C-75, the organization representing the Inuit testified about their concerns regarding the impact on the environment and wildlife as more and more ships sail the Arctic waters. Representations were made as to the possibility of providing in the Canada Shipping Act for Inuit guides on board to direct those ships.

Neither the existing Act nor Bill C-39 deal with this matter. It is the opinion of your Committee that Inuit guides on board those ships could make a significant contribution to the protection of the environment and wildlife of the area of the country they live in and know very well. Thus, your Committee favours that the Act so provides.

What about that point? Did the committee get any undertakings from the government in that regard? Is anything going to happen on that one, or is it just a pious hope, too?

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I do not know if I would regard it as pious, but it might be easier to handle than the first one.

Senator Frith: Impious would be fine!

Senator MacDonald: The committee is of the opinion that the use of Inuit guides to provide advice to ships navigating in Arctic waters might assist in preserving northern ecology, particularly as it relates to Arctic animals and northern hunters, and so on. The other side of this story is the potential for conflicting advice between the ice navigator and the Inuit adviser, the potential for additional cost to business in the north, and the fact that there is already legislation which provides environmental protection to Arctic waters. However, the committee stressed that there should be a future amendment to the Canada Shipping Act with this in mind. The role of these guides should be restricted to advising masters rather than giving direction. As honourable senators will note in the report, this point of view had been discussed with the Inuit representatives during the committee hearings on Bill C-75, and we were told by the representatives—and Senator Langlois can answer to this question—that this suggestion was very acceptable. We stress that there should be a future amendment to the Canada Shipping Act with this point in mind.

Senator Frith: And was any undertaking given by the government or by a minister that such amendments would be made?

Senator MacDonald: The only witnesses we heard at that particular time were witnesses from the department and, to the best of my knowledge, we did not ask for any undertakings from them in this regard. However, they may have provided something—and Senator Langlois can correct me if I am wrong—in answer to a question that I cannot remember. Senator Langlois is shaking his head, so, no, no undertaking was asked for or given.

Senator Frith: The third concern of the committee was with reference to the making of regulations. The report goes on to read:

Your Committee notes that amendments to the original version of Bill C-75 were made so that proposed regulations would be published in the Canada Gazette at least 90 days before the effective date thereof, and a reasonable opportunity within those 90 days shall be afforded to interested persons to make representations to the Minister with respect thereto. Your Committee acknowledges that this procedure, by allowing interested persons to make representations before regulations are adopted, ensures that a formal consultation takes place at the appropriate moment. However, your Committee thinks that Parliament, when it delegates to the Government broad powers to legislate by regulations, should have a means of expressing its opinion on the public policies contained in regulations made pursuant to enabling clauses. Thus, your Committee is of the opinion that when proposed regulations are intended to be adopted pursuant to the delegated legislation-making powers provided for in Bill C-39, they be referred to your Committee for study, as was done in the case of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Regulations. This, according to your Committee, ensures not only that Parliament will be involved in the process leading to important measures regarding, for instance, safety at sea and the environment, but also that a public debate involving interested persons takes place.

Were any undertakings given on that subject?

Senator MacDonald: There were no undertakings.

Senator Frith: Were any asked for?

Senator MacDonald: I shall draw this particular point to the attention of the minister.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

OTTAWA

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

26 March 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 26th day of March, 1987, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1987-88

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-48, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, this Appropriation Bill No. 1, 1987-88 provides interim supply for the first three months of the new fiscal year 1987-88. Estimates were tabled in the Senate for March 10, 1987 and immediately referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. This appropriation bill contains $10.458 billion of voted items which are required to meet government expenditure requirements to the end of June while the Main Estimates are being reviewed by the various committees. A second appropriation bill will be tabled prior to June 30, 1987 to secure release of the balance of the estimates.

● (1440)

This bill contains a general proportion of three-twelfths of all votes plus additional proportions for some 31 votes. The additional proportions are required mainly to meet payments of a seasonal nature in some programs; to meet payments in accordance with certain agreements, and the need in other instances to make major payments before the end of June.

I should point out that as usual, in no case is Parliament being asked to pass the entire amount of a vote.

Honourable senators, the form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills. The passage of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of honourable senators to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passage of this measure.

Honourable senators, I have with me the schedule which details with the various proportions allocated to different departments, and I will ask that it also be printed as part of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For schedule, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

Senator Doody: At this time, honourable senators, I shall also attempt to answer a couple of questions raised by Senator Frith yesterday with regard to Supplementary Estimates (C). In response to the question with respect to debt regulations and how they are handled, I understand that Treasury Board made a commitment to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to provide a copy of the debt write-off regulations within the next couple of weeks, and I assume that they will be supplying that material as per their commitment.

Senator Frith also asked for information on the proposed timing of the review of the form in which supplementary estimates are presented to Parliament, and I am told that Treasury Board is at the initial stages of this review at the present time. It is the secretariat's intention to complete its review and formulate recommendations on a revised format, and discuss them with the appropriate parliamentary committees in time for the introduction of the revised form of the first regular supplementary estimates for 1988-89.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this being the interim supply, and, as the Deputy Leader of the Government has said, applying to supply required before the Main Estimates are dealt with, I mean to hold my fire for the Main Estimates themselves. As the Deputy Leader of the Government has also pointed out, the adoption of the interim supply in no way affects the position that we might want to take with regard to the Main Estimates.

For those reasons, I do not wish to add anything at this stage. Some other senators may have some questions or something else to say, but that is all I have to say at the present time.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, members of this house will have learned that yesterday the Honourable Marcel Masse, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, announced a program in Edmonton. The Globe and Mail story has as its lead paragraph the following:

Ottawa has handed a cash gift of $350-million a year to the financially strapped oil and gas industry.

Then in a later paragraph the story says that Mr. Masse said—and again I quote:

—the drilling incentives are part of a western Canadian diversification plan that will be unveiled next month.

The story continues, and again I quote:

[Senator Doody.]

He said the incentives, which will be available from April 1, could provide 15,000 jobs in western Canada.

Honourable senators, the part of that report to which I direct senators' particular attention is the assertion that the incentives will be available from April 1 of 1987. The question I would like to have answered is whether or not that is accurate; whether indeed the incentives will be available from April 1, 1987, and, if so, what statutory basis will there be for payment of money as of April 1, as announced? Is there some line in the Main Estimates which is being drawn down by the interim supply bill that is now under debate and will provide that money?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I want to try to answer Senator Stewart's question, so if anyone else wants to ask a question, it is not my intention to close off the debate.

With regard to the energy program announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my understanding is that this amount will have to come from supplementary estimates or from special legislation. There is no provision in the estimates before us now for this special program. All the estimates were tabled before this program was announced. I do not know where the April 1 date came from. Certainly, I have no knowledge of it, and there is no provision for that funding in the estimates as we have them now. As I said, there will need to be supplementary estimates for that particular program, or some special legislation.

Senator Stewart: I thank the honourable senator for having yielded the floor. May I ask him a question: Can he ascertain whether or not the report is accurate? Did the minister indeed say that the program would begin to be available as of April 1, 1987, or did he not? That is my first question.

I then have a second question. The implication of the announcement seems to be that there is some line in the request now before Parliament for interim supply, because that is the only money that will become available to the Crown as of April 1. Let me put it this way: Is it not the intention of the government to use the reserves not allocated by envelope in the Main Estimates for the purpose of making good the immediate implementation of this plan, and, if not, why not?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I cannot really take responsibility for the way in which this article is written. I cannot say yes, the minister did, or no, the minister did not. Obviously, I was not there, and even if I had been there I doubt whether I would have recorded the exact words, verbiage, intonation, nuance, or whatever sort of interpretation the reporter or journalist derived from the comments made by the minister. I can only supply this house at this time with the information that I have been given. I am told that the appropriation bills before us today were based on estimates that were tabled before the oil assistance program was announced.

Any additional funding in 1987-88 for that program will be included either in separate legislation or in future supplementary estimates.

Honourable senators, I will make further inquiries on behalf of Senator Stewart as to the contingency reserve, and so on. I have no information in that regard at the present time, but I will certainly attempt to find out. However, such information as I have on the subject I have given to him.

● (1450)

Senator Frith: Would it be possible for the Deputy Leader of the Government to determine that one fact today, after we have given second reading to the bill but before we give third reading to it?

Apart from who said what, could the deputy leader try to find out from the department whether, in fact, it is true that the funds will be available from April 1? If the answer is, "No, that is a mistake, they won't be available from April 1," that leads to one conclusion. If the funds will be available from April 1, that leads inevitably to the line of questioning Senator Stewart has been putting forward.

If we give the bill second reading, could the Deputy Leader of the Government try to find an answer to that question directly from the department—not whether anyone said anything but whether that is the case.

Senator Doody: I wonder if Senator Stewart would reveal his source. What newspaper did he quote?

Senator Stewart: I was quoting from an article in the Globe and Mail by Kevin Cox and Christopher Waddell. I do not think the Globe and Mail made the story up, because I saw the Deputy Prime Minister on television this morning revelling in the fact that the government had decided to intervene in the market to help the poor oil and gas people in the west.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), bill placed on Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Orders of the Day:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before the third order is called—and this will concern Senator Balfour, I believe—we have before us Bill C-49, which is the order the clerk was about to read. We also have before us Bill C-43, to amend the Territorial Lands Act. I believe Senator Barootes is ready to proceed on that order. We will be represented by Senator Adams. As honourable senators are aware, meetings are going on elsewhere today that are of great importance to Senator Adams. If it is important to the government to have third reading today, then I wonder if we could defer Order No. 3 and proceed with debate on Bill C-43 so that Senator Adams can attend the conference that is taking place today.

An Hon. Senator: He has left.

Senator Frith: Perhaps he has made some arrangements with Senator Barootes.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: I spoke with him and told him that this was coming up presently. He said he did wish to make some comments on it. I thought he understood that it would be coming up immediately. I understood he was going to stay to address the chamber, because he did say he was prepared to do so.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps we can deal with Bill C-45 and then Bill C-43. By that time Senator Adams might be back.

Senator Frith: While we are waiting, why not proceed with Bill C-49?

Senator Doody: That is where we started.

Senator Frith: Yes, and I apologize to His Honour and to honourable senators.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1987-88

SECOND READING:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-49, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-49 is Appropriation Bill No. 2, 1987-88, and provides supply for all of Supplementary Estimates (A) for 1987-88. These estimates, which total $700 million, were tabled in the Senate on March 10, 1987, and were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on March 10. The supplementary estimates were discussed with officials from the Department of Agriculture and officials from Treasury Board on March 11.

These Supplementary Estimates (A) seek funding for the Special Canadian Grains Program previously announced by the government. When approved by Parliament, the funding will enable the Department of Agriculture to make complete payments early in the 1987-88 fiscal year to Canadian grain producers for the 1986 crop year. The total estimate for this program is $1 billion; $300 million was provided in Supplementary Estimates (B) for 1986-87.

Honourable senators, I commend the bill to you for second reading.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, when Supplementary Estimates (A) were considered by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, we discussed the propriety of the way in which the government was requesting this money. Let me remind honourable senators what is taking place here. The government had tabled its Main Estimates, but no parliamentary action had been taken on those Main Estimates. At that point Supplementary Estimates (A) were brought forward to provide $700 million for this program. This was to complete the total amount for the program; $300 million had been voted by Parliament earlier in the fiscal year.

The point was raised in committee that the government was proceeding in a technically preposterous way; it was asking for an appropriation act prior to the enactment of any part of the Main Estimates.

When the witness was asked why the government chose to proceed in that way, the committee was told that the government wished to have all the money available early in the forthcoming fiscal year. We asked the witness if the normal process would not have been for the government to have included the program in the Main Estimates, since it was a continuation of expenditures begun early in the year—indeed, in 1986—and then draw down from the total provided in the Main Estimates the eleven-twelfths, or indeed the $700 million minus $1. This is the standard technique that has been used over the years where the government needs more than three-twelfths of a vote in the first three months of the fiscal year.

● (1500)

We had no satisfactory answer to that inquiry. For some reason which has not yet been disclosed, the government decided to bring in a supplementary estimate quite independent of the Main Estimates, notwithstanding the fact that this assistance to farmers had been announced last fall and, indeed, had been in part financed by Parliament last fall.

When the committee reported, it drew the attention of this house to this strange aberration in the management of the government's financial business. That report is found in the Debates of the Senate at page 693. The report states that:

The Committee understood the need to provide the money prior to the end of June, but some Senators felt that it was inappropriate to consider a supplementary estimate before the review of the Main Estimates. It is suggested that the proper procedure would have been to have included the $700 million request in the Main Estimates, with the entire amount, less $1, being provided through the interim appropriations bill.

That is the bill which we have just dealt with.

In this way the principle of the request would continue to be before Parliament until the Main Estimates are reported and the appropriations bill proclaimed by the end of June.

That was the position taken by your committee.

In the other place this aberration caused even more concern. Although there is nothing on the record of the other place to show what happened directly, there is evidence there as to what did happen, as they say, "behind the curtains."

As I understand it, it was brought to the attention of the government that their procedure was quite wrong and, indeed, that it would be out of order to ask that the bill now before this chamber for second reading be passed. It got to the situation where it would have been in order to have moved the first reading of this bill on the last day in which the estimates are considered in the supply period, which terminates on or before March 26 under the rules of the House of Commons.

Consequently, because members of the opposition were just as eager that the assistance should be available to farmers in Canada as the government members were, a special order had to be made. That special order made on March 19, 1987, which was moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mrs. McDougall, states as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the order for the consideration of the business of supply is called, on the final allotted day for the supply period ending March 26, 1987, the Supplementary Estimates "A", for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, shall be reported or be deemed to have been reported back to the House by the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The order then goes on to say:

That, on that day, immediately following the disposal of the opposition motion, the Supplementary Estimates "C", 1986-87, and the interim supply for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, and any Bills based thereon, every question necessary to dispose of the Supplementary Estimates "A", 1987-88 and any Bill or Bills based thereon, be put to the House, forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

That order could not have been made without unanimous consent. It required the unanimous consent of the members of the House of Commons for the bill which is now before us to be read the first, second and third time in the House of Commons.

The bill is now before us not because the government managed the parliamentary aspect of its financial business well but by reason of the unanimous consent of the members of the House of Commons.

What the House of Commons did, honourable senators, is to confirm emphatically the comment made by your National Finance Committee.

Honourable senators know that we had a look at the substance of Supplementary Estimates (A). There are certain procedural questions—I will not call them logistic questions—which are still to be answered in a satisfactory way.

Earlier today on the bill which we just dealt with I asked Senator Doody for information. Understandably, he was not in a position to give that information—he will do it on third reading. In this instance, we have time to get that information directly from the authorities. I should hope that after the bill has had second reading, we could send the bill back to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance—the bill has never been before the National Finance Committee—for brief consideration there. I do not anticipate that it would take any great length of time, because the questions are direct and the answers, I am sure, will be brief and precise.

My proposal is that we give the bill second reading at this time, with the understanding that it go to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. My anticipation is that it could become law early next week.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I want to advise the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I regret that Senator Stewart feels it necessary to send the bill back to the committee. Obviously, it is a one-item bill which corresponds exactly with the estimates which have already been before the committee and have been examined and reported on. Although some senators felt that the procedure was not correct, I think the report reads:

The Committee understood the need to provide the money prior to the end of June, but some Senators felt that it was inappropriate to consider a supplementary estimate before the review of the Main Estimates.

That question was asked of the officials at the time, and they agreed that the item could have been included in the 1987-88 Main Estimates. The problem was that the full $700 million will be required by the department before the end of the June supply period, when the full supply is received. While there is a provision for seeking greater than the normal three-twelfths of a vote in interim supply, past practice has not been to go higher than eleven-twelfths, because it would defeat the purpose of the interim supply. What they are saying, in effect, is that to have voted the entire amount prior to the granting of the Main Estimates would, in effect, have deprived the various parliamentary committees of an opportunity to examine the vote which was given to them under the system, that is, under the Supplementary Estimates (A).

● (1510)

Senator Stewart, as well as others, disagrees with this. I am told that the President of the Treasury Board received the advice of legal counsel, the Legislation and House Planning Unit at the Privy Council Office, and the Journals Branch of the House of Commons, who all advised that this was an appropriate way to proceed. Obviously, there is a difference of opinion, but that does not necessarily mean that the system is wrong.

I know that a House Order was issued with unanimous consent in the other place. It was issued to expedite the passage of the bill and to try to avoid the kind of situation that might have occurred if a procedural wrangle had developed.

I am certainly not going to try to refuse the right of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to re-examine the contents of this particular bill, but I do feel that it is unnecessary, because, as I said, it has already been examined in full.

Honourable senators, if it is your wish to send it to committee, by all means do so, but you all know how I feel about it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Frith, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-43, to amend the Territorial Lands Act.

He said: Honourable senators, after the proceedings of the last few days in this chamber, I want to thank all senators for the gracious courtesy of allowing this bill to proceed to second reading today. It received first reading only earlier today.

I am rising today to urge senators to give their full support to Bill C-43, an act to amend the Territorial Lands Act.

As many of you are aware, Bill C-43 deletes references to timber from the Territorial Lands Act, thereby removing federal jurisdiction over timber in the Northwest Territories. Together with certain Orders in Council, the bill provides the territorial government with legislative jurisdiction and administrative control over its timber. This legislative amendment is a necessary step in completing the transfer of a major resource management program to the Government of the Northwest Territories.

Honourable senators will note that amendments embodied in Bill C-43 also apply to the Yukon, where the federal government will be able to enter into a similar transfer of forest and fire management responsibilities with the Government of the Yukon at a future date. This arrangement with the Yukon will be proclaimed once negotiations are completed with that government. This is provided for in clause 7 of this bill.

Speedy passage of this bill, honourable senators, will clear the way for implementation of the transfer agreement by the target date of April 1. This date has symbolic importance to the people of the Northwest Territories as it is also exactly the twentieth anniversary of another major step in the political evolution of the territories. It was 20 years ago, on April 1, 1967, that the then Commissioner, Stu Hodgson, flew into Yellowknife and began the formidable task of establishing a capital there. Designating a capital in the Northwest Territories represented a first and important step in northern political development.

Some of the members of this chamber will be familiar with how the government of the Northwest Territories has evolved, but for those of you who are not I would like to put this historic step of the political evolution of the Northwest Territories into perspective.

Before confederation, vast tracts of land in Canada's north were known as Rupert's Land and administered by the Hudson's Bay Company. These lands were surrendered to Britain in 1868 and, with additional areas, became known as the North-Western Territory. They were admitted into Canada in 1870. The lands comprised northern parts of Quebec, Ontario, and virtually all of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Yukon, the continental Northwest Territories, and some of the Arctic islands as we know them today.

Soon after that, in 1875, the North-West Territory Act was enacted and established the legal framework for government which, with amendments, set out the Northwest Territories as we know them today.

The Yukon was created as a separate territory in 1898, and, as you know, Alberta and Saskatchewan became provinces in 1905. From the Honourable Eugene Forsey I learned today that the remainder of Manitoba became a province, as we know it today, in 1912. Further transfer of lands to the provinces occurred, and in 1912 the boundaries were established to their present limits.

Throughout the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries the federal government's role in the north was merely regulatory. It was only after several challenges to Canada's sovereignty and a threatened oil-development stampede that the federal government set up a Northwest Territories Branch within the Department of the Interior in 1921.

After the Second World War, the pace of change in the north quickened due to improved access and improved communications. However, it was not until the 1960s that changes concerning the political development of the territories really started to occur.

In 1963 the federal government appointed an advisory commission under A.W.R. Carrothers. The Carrothers commission recommended that the territorial government be transferred to a permanent northern capital away from Ottawa and be given the responsibility for local administration. Another recommendation was for the Northwest Territorial Council to be allowed to evolve gradually into an elected legislature. This would provide for a growing local autonomy within a loosening framework of federal control of natural resources.

● (1520)

The Carrothers commission was the critical event which led to Commissioner Hodgson's trip from Ottawa to Yellowknife 20 years ago. It was also in 1967 that more and more government functions were located in Yellowknife, and a district territorial civil service was created.

In 1975 the territorial council became a wholly elected body and began choosing its own Speaker. Since then the territorial commissioners' responsibilities have diminished; municipalities and regional boards have been given increased authority; native people have formed groups to press their land claims, and proposals to divide the Northwest Territories began to appear. Transferring the control of resources and services to representatives of the people who depend on them is under way on various fronts.

As was stated earlier, Bill C-43 will allow implementation of federal-territorial agreements to transfer forest and fire management programs from the federal government to the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

[Senator Barootes]

The transfer of control of forest fire and management programs to the Northwest Territories also involves the transfer of resources to support the territories' new responsibilities. This bill therefore allows the transfer of the federal operating budget of $24.1 million and the conveyance of assets, including land, infrastructure, housing, and other federal property, worth $24.5 million.

Although the forest industry in the north is small by southern standards, it represents an important and growing sector of the region's economy. In the Northwest Territories there are currently ten active sawmills with an average annual production of $4.7 million. The forests also serve as a habitat for wildlife, on which many northern residents depend for their livelihood. Fire protection for forests is accordingly important, and this program will be most effectively operated at the same level as forest management. The transfer made possible by Bill C-43 will bring these two functions—that is, wildlife and forest management—under one jurisdiction.

The transfer of powers meets the principles established as the basis for devolution: The Government of the Northwest Territories requested the changes; the transfer will be managed in a way that assures continuity, and the level of service to the public during the transitional period will be maintained. Finally, native land claims will not be affected by this transfer.

Honourable senators, I wish to emphasize that this transfer does not prejudice native land claims. Native people have been consulted throughout this process, and their participation and support has been sought. Both the Dene nation and the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories have publicly voiced their support for the transfer.

In addition, all federal staff affected by the transfer have been offered equivalent positions by the Northwest Territories. The transfer affects 47 full-time and as many as 145 seasonal employees for a total of 192. This represents 122 person years. Throughout the negotiations between the two levels of government, employees have been kept fully informed, and their rights and benefits have been properly protected. As a matter of fact, 97 per cent have accepted the transfer and will become employees of the Northwest Territories government. Those few who did not accept were placed on a priority list for positions elsewhere in the public service.

This transfer honours the commitment to political maturity in the north. The funds to support these programs will go directly to the territorial government from this year's budget of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Thereafter the territorial government will fund the programs through the Canada-Northwest Territories formula financing agreement.

There is also provision in the agreement for funds to operate the two CL-215 water bombers in the Northwest Territories. These remain the property of Transport Canada, but the Government of the Northwest Territories replaces the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as contract administrator.

With federal commitment and assistance to furthering northern political and economic maturity, northerners will continue to gain more control over their affairs and thereby shape their future within Confederation in their own unique fashion.

It is my wish that honourable senators give Bill C-43 their full and prompt support.

If I may be permitted, honourable senators, I would now like to inform the house that an apparent discrepancy between the English and French versions of the original subsection 19(g) of the Territorial Lands Act and subclause 5(2) of Bill C-43 has been reported to the Department of Justice by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This apparent discrepancy arises in the French terminology, and there has been an undertaking to have it corrected through the next miscellaneous statute law amendment bill, which will be introduced this session.

I should like to thank Senator Corbin for drawing to the attention of the committee the apparent discrepancy and to assure him that the appropriate change will be incorporated in the next revision of the statute. A letter to that effect has been received by the chairman of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee, the Honourable Dan Hays, from the Honourable William McKnight, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, it is not very often that I rise to speak to bills that are before the house. At this time I would like to say a few words about Bill C-43, which will affect the transfer of certain funds and of the management of trees from the feds to the Northwest Territorial government. I am not really familiar with the trees, since I live in the eastern Arctic and, because of the climate, we cannot grow them there. That is different country from the western part of the territory. Anyway, I think this bill is a good move.

We all know that the native leaders are meeting here in Ottawa today and tomorrow to speak about land claims. Many of the sawmills operating in the territory lease their trees from the government, and now the Government of the Northwest Territories will have a chance to administer this resource. According to the witnesses who appeared before the committee this week, the feds will still own part of the trees. That leaves only part of the administration that has been transferred to the territory, along with funds for the operation of the forestry in the north.

• (1530)

With land claims now being settled, much of the responsibility for our trees is being transferred to the administration. I believe that will be better for the people in the Territories. Senator Barootes mentioned that he was in favour of certain aspects of the administration being transferred to the Government of the Northwest Territories at Yellowknife, which will be able to draft its own legislation regarding forestry matters. According to the evidence of our witnesses, there will be a three- or four-year program, and Senator Barootes pointed out
